FATHER WESTMAN'S VISITS.

ASSISTANT RECTOR SAW FOR HIMSELF HOW THEY OPERATE.

A Personal Visit by the Clergyman Showed a Disgraceful Condition of Affairs—Father Smyth Referred to It Sunday Morning, Declaring He Would Do What He Could to Break It Up.

Rev. Father Smyth, rector of St. Mary's R. C. church, created quite a sensation Suhday morning by referring to the open and disreputable manner in which the "cider joints" are being run in the west end of the city Sundays.

Father Smyth stated that a week ago Sunday Father Westman, the assistant rector of St. Mary's parish, made a personal visit to several of these resorts and found a condition of affairs that was a disgrace to that part of the city. Both Fathers Smyth and Westman have heard many bad stories of late concerning the operation of these "cider joints," and it was decided by them that the best way to get at the root of the evil was for Father Westman to make a personal inspection of some of the places that had been complained of and see for himself just what they were.

In order to find out the exact condition of affairs Father Westman made his visits without warning. He called at several places that are apparently respectable and harmless to outward appearances, but once inside he was astonished at what he witnessed. The principal business that they seemed to be doing was the serving of the alleged soft drinks, but on every hand was evidence that the beverages were not the harmless concoctions that many people are led to suppose are for sale.

In several of the places visited Father Westman found members of St. Mary's parish who should have been attending the services instead of loitering in these resorts. The proprietors of the places, as well as the habitues, were greatly surprised at the clergyman's arrival and were discomfited by his inquiries and observations.

Sunday morning Father Smyth took occasion to refer to the matter in vigorous language. He said that it was a disgrace to the city that such places should be in existence, as well as a reflection on Catholics that any of that denomination should be found patronizing or frequenting the places. As for himself Father Smyth declared that he should see to it that such parishioners as came under his spiritual direction should be stopped from visiting the places if it was possible. He said that the business should be suppressed and that any attempt to accomplish such a result would receive his hearty co-operation.

A THREATENING FIRE.

Watchung Water Company's Plant, it Was Feared, Would be Burned.

Lincoln, April 24.—The barn belonging to Charles P. Sebring, at Greenbrook, caught fire this noon and threatened the power plant of the Watchung Water Company with destruction. Word was sent to Bound Brook and Lincoln for assistance.

Mayor Silas D. Drake, of this place, ordered out the Lincoln hose wagon immediately and it was taken to Greenbrook behind Abram Gulick's team. The hose wagon at Bound Brook was also sent, but the Lincoln men had a stream on five minutes before the others.

The barn was partialy saved and the flames were prevented from spreading to the power plant and water works and other buildings close by. The damage will reach $300.

Another Drug Store.

Dr. M. S. Simpson is about to open a drug store. Dr. Simpson has rented the corner store in Charles Hand's new building on the corner of Second street and Watchung avenue, and men are busy today fitting it up. The doctor will use the rear room as an office, while the drug store will occupy the main room. Dr. Simpson formerly kept a pharmacy on the corner of Liberty and West Fourth streets.

THE FATES WERE THERE.

DISTRIBUTED THEIR GIFTS AMONG EPWORTH LEAGUERS.

Novel Sociable Held in Vincent Chapel by the Epworth League—There Was an Entertaining Programme Rendered.

The Epworth Leaguers of the First M. E. church enjoyed a pleasant sociable in Vincent chapel last Friday. A varied programme was given during the evening and was much enjoyed by the young people present.

The programme opened with a reading by Miss Susie Davies. There was a vocal duet by Miss Etta Raybert and Miss Eva Jenkins. Then followed several games in which all all the members and guests could participate.

The closing number was entitled "The Three Fates." The main part of the chapel was darkened. On the platform were posed the "three fates," Misses Elsie Berne, Lucie P. Davies and Etta Raybert, draped in white, with startling effects produced on their faces by a combination of powder and charcoal.

The guests were then invited to pass through the room where the fates posed with spinning wheel, distaff and scissors. As they passed through Little Edna Kennedy and George M. Rittenhouse handed each a readymade fortune, telling of all the nice things that the fates had provided for him or her as the case might be.

After that, the guests returned to the parlors where a social hour was spent and the refreshments provided by the committee, were enjoyed.

The committee in charge consisted of Miss Elizabeth Stackhouse, chairman; Miss Luella Crowther, Miss Edith B. Horton, Miss Eva Jenkins, Miss Etta Raybert and Frank French. Miss Susie Jackson and Miss Minnie Sharp were in charge of the refreshments.

MUSIC AND RECITATION.

ENTERTAINMENT GIVEN FOR BENEFIT OF RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

The Artists Were Misses Randolph, Lord and Hall and Mrs. J. K. Myers—Neat Sum Realized From Entertainment.

All Souls' church on Park avenue was filled last Friday with an appreciative audience that assembled to enjoy an evening of readings and music. The affair was given under the auspices of the Plainfield Relief Association. Rev. A. G. Masterson, pastor of the church, had charge of the programme and announced the several numbers.

The programme opened with a violin solo by Miss Blossom Randolph, which was followed with selections from "Quo Vadis," by Miss Lord, of the Emerson School of Oratory, Boston. Miss Lord's work was of the highest character and she displayed rare talent in her recitations. The next number was a German song by Alexander VanOss, of this city.

A unique and thoroughly enjoyable feature of the evening were the selections given by Miss Hall, of this city. They were given in French and the audience greatly admired Miss Hall's work.

Those present were favored in having the privilege of hearing Mrs. J. K. Myers, who gave two vocal selections which was a pleasure and delight to all.

Altogether the entertainment was one of the best presented this season, and a nice sum will be realized therefrom for the Relief Association.

THEIR ANNUAL MEETING.

New Jersey Association of Fire Underwriters to Meet in Newark Next Month.

Newark, April 24—The annual meeting of the New Jersey Association of Fire Underwriters is to be held in this city May 11th at the Board of Trade rooms.

This association was organized some years ago in order to improve the business standing of New Jersey agents. Before its inception it was scarcely possible for agents in this State with large lines to place their risks. This disadvantages has given way to the unity of action of the agents in the association. In other ways agents here have been benefitted by union.

DR. RICHARDS SENDS A LETTER FROM ATHENS.

Read to Crescent Avenue Presbyterians Sunday.

HIS IMPRESSIVE SIGHTS.

IN THE MIDST OF TRAVEL HE THINKS OF HIS OWN FLOCK.

He Has Been in Lands Made Sacred by the Personality of the Apostles and Has Received Inspiration by His Observation—Feeling of Sadness to Walk Among Ruins of a Once Great Civilization.

Although Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, is far away from his people and cannot be with them, yet he sends them frequent letters. One of them was received recently by Leander N. Lovell, and was read Sunday at the morning service by the minister in charge, Rev. Elliott W. Brown, of New York.

Athens, March 31st, 1899.

To the Crescent Avenue Church and Congregation:

Dear Friends—The day has almost come for the annual meeting of the church, the reviewing of the old year and the beginning of the new.

I must send a word of greeting and a prayer for you all.

The journey which your kindness has enabled me to take has been deeply interesting, though we have not yet reached the land which must be most interesting of all. But already we are in lands made sacred by the labors and testimony and sufferings of the Apostles and their converts.

In Rome among the bewildering multitude of historical associations, to me the deepest impression of all come from the memorials of those early Christians who sealed their testimony with their blood; here in Athens we have found no spot more impressive than the rocky ledge of Mars Hill, where the Apostle declared to the people the unknown God whom they had failed to find; and on the old site of Corinth where a great city was and is not, there seems not much left except the memory of the man who labored in that city one year and six months for the Lord Jesus and for the souls of men.

It gives me a feeling of sadness to walk among the ruins of a splendid civilization which has so completely passed away. The position of leadership which these Nations once held they forfeited; others hold it now. And even for the churches which used to stand there the warning seems to have been often fulfilled that their candlestick should be taken out of its place.

I often find myself thinking anxiously of our own dear land, and our own dear church; for this is our time of growth and enlarging opportunity. May the Lord save us from such hopeless decrepitude as fell on these more ancient people and churches. His promise to His people, if they faithfully wait upon Him, is that they shall renew their strength. Wherever that promise seems to have failed we must believe that the people did not wait upon Him; there was some unfaithfulness or disobedience; they knew not the time of their visitation.

I am exceeding anxious to learn how our church will bear herself toward the work of the new year, and whether with unabated faith and consecration we can undertake once more the responsibilities offered us in the home church and in our various chapels.

The Sunday when we renew our subscriptions for this work is always an anxious day for us; but now being vanished to the other side of the world, I think I can understand a little of the Apostle's feeling when he used to wait in great trouble of soul for Timothy or Titus to bring tidings from some one of the churches which he loved.

May the Lord Himself be with you, and guide and bless you now and always, and in His good time permit me to look into your faces once more.

Affectionately your pastor,
W. R. Richards.

Money For Chapel Work.

Sunday was Chapel Day in the Park Avenue Baptist Sunday school, and attention was paid to it during the afternoon session. A collection amounting to $13.15 was taken up, which will be devoted to erecting chapels in the newly acquired possessions of Cuba and Porto Rico, and carrying on the Gospel work there. Several of the members of the school read selections telling of the need of such work there, and four little girls gave a recitation entitled, "If I Were a Sunbeam."

WAITING FOR SOMETHING

ROSELLE COUNCIL DOES NOT ACT ON TROLLEY APPLICATION.

Representative Gaddis Says That Railway Company is Anxious to Come to Terms so as to Complete Road.

Roselle, April 24—The application of the Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railway Company, controlled by the Bikers, of Newark, which has been before the Board of Alderman of this place for many months past, was taken over at a meeting of the Council Friday evening. The application was taken from the table and its further consideration was adjourned till Monday evening, May 1st, at which time it is believed the railway company and the Council may agree on a route for Roselle.

Representative A. A. Gaddis was before the meeting and spoke in the interests of his company, telling how the work on the main at Garwood was progressing and explained that at Cranford the meeting before the township Committee appointed Township Engineer Vreeland to confirm the street grades established by the railway company. The Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railway Company had hopes of completing their main line to connect Elizabeth with Plainfield by June 1st, but will not be able to do so now on account of their application being held up by the Board of Aldermen at this place so long.

THIRST WAS TOO MUCH.

A HALF PINT OF WHISKEY LED TO WILLIAM DELANEY'S ARREST

He Had Left it in S. A. Cruikshank's Cellar and Stolen Into the House to Get It—Caught and Held for Police.

A half pint of whiskey led William Delaney to do several things that proved very unfortunate for him. He had left the bottle of whiskey in the cellar of "Sacmore," S. A. Cruikshank's beautiful residence on Belvidere avenue, where he tended the fires until last Friday.

Last night at 8 o'clock Delaney reached the neighborhood of "Sacmore." On the lawn he removed his shoes and started for the kitchen door, carrying his shoes in his hand. The kitchen door wasn't locked, so he walked in and started for the cellar.

Miss Helen Cruikshank happened to be looking out of the window and saw, by the moonlight, a man walking over the lawn, with his shoes in his hand. She told her father who reached the kitchen in time to confront the ex employe. The police were notified by telephone and Sergeant Kiely and Patrolman Higgins hurried to the house where they put Delaney under arrest and locked him up for the night.

Delaney had been employed at the Cruikshank residence for six weeks. His sister is the cook there. Mr. Cruikshank believed his story and refused to appear against him in court this morning. City Judge Runyon discharged the prisoner on condition that he would leave town at once.

REPORT IS CONFIRMED.

PLAINFIELD HAS $78,000 BACK TAXES TO COLLECT.

Report of Martin Act Commissioners Confirmed by Court at Elizabeth This Morning—Council to Act Now.

Elizabeth, April 24.—One of the first acts of Judge VanSyckel when he convened the Supreme Court this morning was of great importance to Plainfield. He confirmed the revised report of the Martin Act Commissioners, which shows $78,000 of back taxes to be collected.

The Commissioners were appointed by the court over a year ago to adjust the back taxes of the city of Plainfield under the Martin act. A report was submitted a year ago and was fought by some of the Plainfield property owners involved. The court ordered the report back for revision. The first report showed collectable taxes to the amount of $65,000. Since then a second report has been filed and was this morning approved by the court.

The work of collecting these back taxes will now be started by the Plainfield Common Council under the process provided for by the Martin act.

A Successful Fair.

Taken altogether the fair which closed Saturday night at the Christian church has been successful in every way. The goods left over were disposed of at auction, John Goodwin making an excellent auctioneer. All the contests were decided except one, that for the quilt. This will be decided May 9th, when a lunch box sociable will be held at the church. Miss Mary Smith won the doll and Mrs. Lydia Baldwin the pillow.

An Ugly Gash.

While James Motley, of Richmond street, was working on the Talmage residence, Belvidere avenue, Thursday, a crescent saw he was using slipped and cut an ugly gash in his hand. Dr. Probasco dressed the wound and took three stitches in it.

GOLF SEASON OPENS IN EXCELLENT SHAPE.

Hillside Club Links See Activity Once Again.

BIG TURN OUT OF PLAYERS.

GOOD SCORES WERE MADE IN THE SCRATCH TOURNAMENT.

The Day Was Delightful in the Weather-way—New Appointments of the Clubhouse are Very Pleasing to the Members—Many Visitors Present Saturday—The Scores Made in the Opening Game.

The most particular devotee of golf could find no fault with the beautiful day that was given for the formal opening of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club course last Saturday. Nature smiled in all her beauty upon the uplands and valleys that comprise the well-appointed course of this popular club. The air was bracing and just enough so to to put vim into the large number of enthusiasts that wended their way over the links for the first time this year. Considering all things the opening day was an auspicious one in the history of the club, and notwithstanding the fact that the golfers have hardly entered the swing as yet there were many that engaged in the sport in their old-time manner.

It was a beautiful sight to stand near the club house and watch the players circle the course. It brought back pleasant memories of last year, and enthused all for a successful season. Many of the older members were out in force and vied with the young set in doing their best. The old scores were laid aside and it was a time when new scores had to be made so that there would be a basis for handicapping for the coming season.

As stated, it was the first time for many over the course this season, and in spite of this handicap some good scores were made. The event was the scratch tournament, 18 holes, medal play, open to all active members, and the result was as follows: Willard Wadsworth, 86; Frank Talmage, 90; J. H. P Wharton, 93; C. W. Fisk, 94; T. R VanBoskerck, 99; S L. Schoonmaker, 100; F. L. Schoonmaker, 100; Walter Sheparl, 103; Olaf Saugstad, 104; P. W. Mason, 104; Owen Fleming, 105; Whitney Baker, 106; E J. Warling, 107; H. B. Stockton, 109; L. H. VanBuren, 110; G. T. VanBoskerck, 112; Carroll Runyon, 112; N. P Rogers 116; B. M. Shepard, 115; Mrs. N. P. Rogers, 137.

The social features of the day were pleasant. The club house was opened and in the reception room the slight coolness in the air was tempered a pleasing degree by a cozy wood fire. Groups gathered here and there and chatted over the bright prospects for the season, and how attractive everything looked about the house and grounds.

The new steward, Fred Ivarmy, and his wife were in charge of the house, and they looked after the comfort of all. The restaurant was formally opened, and in the evening John Doul Miller gave an informal dinner to a party of a dozen friends. All were well pleased with the service, which bids fair to be all that is desirable.

During the afternoon many visited the grounds by carriage and accepted the hospitality of the members. There were also many strangers present from out-of-town and they seemed to be pleased.

The next club event will be Saturday, May 6th, when the finals for the Fisk cup, junior club, will be played, but there will now be playing every Saturday on the course and many will take advantage of the sport during the week. Steward Ivarmy is now prepared to serve lunch or dinner and by proper notification meals can be arranged for.

MONEY FOR THE "BLACK BELT."

Forty Dollars Raised for Educational Work in the South.

A quartette of colored jubilee singers from the Fort Valley, Georgia, High and Industrial school, were at the Seventh Day Baptist church last Sunday and gave consert. Their assistant principal was with them, J. H. Torbert, and a plea was made for a collection to be used to aid the school to erect a girls dormitory.

Assistant Principal Torbert explained the workings of the school, and A. T. Jackson, one of the pupils, told his experiences as a teacher in a country school in the "Black Belt" among the ignorant colored. At the close of the concert, which consisted of vocal songs and selections on the mandolin and guitar, it was found that $40 had been donated to help on the work. A concert will also be given in the Crescent Avenue church May 3.

At the Y. M. C. A. Meeting.

Staff-Captain Ferris, of the Salvation Army, was not able to be present at the Y. M. C. A. meeting Sunday afternoon, so F. H. Martin made the address. The Jubilee Singers from Fort Valley, Ga., were there, and sang several Negro Bible songs which were well rendered. E. C. Martin, of the firm of Woodhull & Martin, rendered a solo accompanied on the cornet by R. W. Davis.

KEAN IS PLAYING A WAITING GAME.

By Procrastination He Hopes to Win in Elizabeth.

COUNCIL IS FIRM, THOUGH.

THE DIFFERENCE IS OVER RATE OF FARE TO CRANFORD.

By Threatening to Quit the Project Senator Kean Hopes to Force the Acceptance of the Terms He Offers —President Ryan, of the Council, Declares the Council Will Not Yield.

Elizabeth is now undergoing an experience in trolley matters similar to that which interested Plainfield last fall. Senator Keanis desirous of changing the old horse car line into an electric railway, and offers to do $66,000 worth of improvements to streets if he is permitted to have a new franchise. A conservative and understanding view of the situation shows that the offered improvements are not enough compensation to the city as compared to the worth it will give in the franchise, but notwithstanding the railway company is holding out and declaring that they will not make the change if the Council holds to its demands. The passing gossip of the day when people meet is the prospects of im provement in the trolley service.

The company will not, it is stated, submit to the clause in the ordinance making the fare to Cranford station 5 cents.

The company wants 3 cents more for carrying passengers from the dividing line between Cranford and Union to the Cranford station, but will also allow passengers for this additional 3 cents to ride through Cranford and and Westfield to the Fanwood township line, when Senator Kean's new county trolley road from Elizabeth to Plainfield is built. This will make the cost of a trip from the Elizabethport and Staten Island Ferry to the Fanwood township line, a distance of over ten miles, only 8 cents, and the railroad company thinks this offer is liberal enough. At present the Central Railroad Company now charges 35 cents from Elizabethport to Cranford and return, or 20 cents one way, while to Westfield it is 45 cents for an excursion ticket. Senator Kean thinks his proposition, as compared with these rates, ought to satisfy any fair-minded person in Elizabeth.

The City Council passed a resolution that the Committee on Streets and Parks confer with the railroad company and try to get it to consent to a five cent fare to Cranford. Chairman Ford, of the committee, was angry at this, and at first declared he would resign before he would act in the capacity, but finally president Ryan and the other members of the board prevailed on Councilman Ford to serve. He thinks no concession should be made to Senator Kean's company on the fare question.

President Ryan, of the city council, said yesterday that the only stumbling block is the fare to Cranford, and he hoped that in the interest of rapid transit, Senator Kean's company would see its way clear to recede from the stand it has taken on this point. The council, he feared, would not relinquish its demand, as several of the members thought the company should carry people to Cranford for the one fare, as in other places the fare for a greater distance is only five cents.

DR. SMITH MAY GO TO JAIL.

Must Pay Penalty for Permitting Patients to Bath in Lawrence Brook.

Rahway, April 24.—It looks now as though Dr. Charles Smith, of Rahway, will have to pay dearly for his bathing in Lawrence Brook and polluting the water supply of New Brunswick. Dr. Smith conducted a cold water cure sanitarium along the Lawrence Brook, whence the water supply of New Brunswick is obtained. Patients were in the habit of bathing in the brook, which Dr. Smith termed "fountain of youth," until the attention of the Board of Health was called to the practice, when he he was prosecuted.

At his trial, Foster M. Voorhees, now Governor, defended him. He pleaded guilty. On January 27th, 1898, Judge Strong sentenced him to pay a fine of $75 and costs of $67.97. He carried the case to the higher court. Recently the sentence in this court was affirmed and the appeal dismissed. The necessary papers for his arrest were prepared and handed to a detective. Unless Dr. Smith pays the fine he will be locked in jail. He says he is 125 years old, and attributes his old age to the preserving qualities of Lawrence Brook.

Undergoing Operations.

Charles Bull, formerly of this city, is now confined in a private hospital in New York, where he has been undergoing several operations for facial trouble. The third operation was started Saturday and the physician in charge hopes that this will be the last. Mr. Bull seems to be gradually recovering.

A SUCCESSFUL BENEFIT.

Given in Aid of the Family of the Late Augustus Jackson.

Saengerbund Hall was filled last Thursday with merry dancers and there was a generous response to the benefit affair given for Mrs. Jackson, widow of the late Augustus Jackson, who, some time ago, fell from a scaffold while working at Perth Amboy and was killed, leaving a wife and two children. The many friends of the departed husband, who comprise a large number of Scandinavians, Swedes, Danes and Germans, arranged the benefit last evening, and a substantial sum was realized therefrom and will be given to Mrs. Jackson.

The music for dancing was furnished by Chrls. Sorensen, Claus Wilander and Louis Hummer, who donated their services, while a number of women, forming a part of the committee, furnished the refreshments for the supper without any cost.

The committee was composed of the following persons: President, Chas. Jensen; secretary and treasurer, H. Hansen; Alfred Luthmann, P. Krog, Harry Krog, Edward Engnold, Miss O. Sorensen, Miss Charlotte Karnell, Miss Charlotte Landberg, Miss Risberg, Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. Engwall.

MARRIED AT NOONTIDE.

Aaron Staats and Mrs. Georgie Wilson Plight Their Troth.

Last Thursday at 12 o'clock noon occurred the marriage of Mrs. Georgie Wilson, of 611 West Third street, and Aaron Staats, a well-to-do farmer residing at Franklin Park. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Jackson, pastor of the Mt. Olive Baptist church. The bride is aged 54 years, while her husband is 71 years of age. The wedding was a quiet one, but there were a number of white people present, who are friends of the bride, who is well-known in this city. Mr. and Mrs. Staats will reside at Franklin Park. This is Mrs. Wilson's third husband and the groom's first wife.

Sociable at Grace M. E. Church.

Sociability was the feature and during this part of the programme a short informal programme was presented consisting of vocal solos by Fred Pope, Miss Agnes La-Boyteaux, recitations by Mrs. Rose while Clyde MacDonald and Marion Major, gave a Japanese selection which they gave at the Public School entertainment of a recent date.

Bullet Found by Aid of X-Rays.

Westfield, April 24.—Several days ago a woman in Elizabeth shot Wm. Duncan, of that city. One ball entered his cheek while the other lodged in his arm. Dr. R. B. Whitehead, of that city, succeeded in removing about thirty grains of the ball which entered the arm but he could not find the remainder. Duncan was brought to Westfield and taken to the office of Dr. R. B. Sinclair, who, with the aid of the X-Rays, found and removed the bullet.

August Trust and family, of North Carolina, who are visiting borough relatives, expect to return to the south in a short time.

FLAMES AND WATER DAMAGE CANDY STORE.

John Mantika & Co. Suffer From Midnight Fire.

DUCK GAVE THE ALARM.

POLICEMAN SAYS HE HEARD THE AUTOMATIC DUCK QUACK.

Firemen Found Fire Hard to Fight—Was Between Ceiling and Floor—Contents of Store Ruined by Fire and Water—Loss Will Nearly Reach $700—Heroic Rescue of the Duck.

If it hadn't been for that automatic white duck in the window, Patrolman Mattox says, he never would have seen the fire in the Philadelphia Candy Store of John Mantika & Co., 108 West Front street, last Saturday at 12:45 o'clock, when he did. There isn't the slightest doubt in Bill Mattox's mind now that there is something wonderful about that duck. He was standing on the other side of the street when he plainly heard the duck quack repeatedly. Then he saw the light of the flames and called to Private Watchman George Rockafellow, who sent in an alarm from Box 12.

The conflagration, the cause of which the firemen are at a loss to explain, was just getting under headway when the apparatus arrived. There was no difficulty in handling it, although the fire was in a difficult place to reach.

There is a partition in the middle of the store that divides the salesroom from the department where the candy is made. When Mattox first saw the flames, they were appearing over the top of it. Most of the fire was between the ceiling of the ground floor and the floor of the second story.

When the fire department arrived, the stream from the ccemical engine was used on the second story and the regular streams on the first. It was necessary to tear off the boarding of the ceiling with hooks to get at the fire. The flames worked their way up and burned a hole through the partition wall into J. O. Campbell's store next door. The firemen found it in time to prevent much damage to the latter's establishment.

The department worked over the fire for an hour and a half before the flames were entirely extinguished. The fire was not marked by any exciting incidents with the exception of the heroic rescue of the automatic duck by Foreman L. M. Dunavan of the Gazelle Engine Company. He brought the animal out in his arms amid the cheers of the few spectators who happened to be around at that time of night.

First Assistant Chief Murray was in command in the absense of Chief Doane. Of the volunteer force there turned out four men from the Gazelle company, four from the truck company, one from No. 2 company and none from Alerta. Of these nine men four were officers. Then there were the paid men and the regular officers of the department. The police put up the fire lines, but there wasn't any real use for them for the crowd didn't number fifty in all.

The building is owned by Samuel Drier. His loss will reach $500, which is covered with insurance. The damage to the stock will amount to over $100, and is partially insured. The slight loss of J. O. Campbell will be covered by $25.

ALL LIKE THIS CIRCUS.

Forepaugh-Sells Brothers' show Lets People See Something.

People who delight in the old-time one-ring circus are thoroughly enjoying the Forepaugh-Sells' Brothers' show at Madison Square Garden, New York. While the exhibition is so stupendous, as the press agent has it, that it could not all be given in one, or two rings, for that matter, the star acts, such as those of the Hanlons, acrobats; Philios, the man who goes up to the top on a spiral path on top of a rolling ball, and Capt. Woodward's trained seals and sea lions are given solo parts in the centre of the sawdust stage.

The double mule-riding, a la ancient Rome, act of the clowns, Bennett and Merode, and the "Bosses's" concert by the clown band are the most excruciatingly funny things ever seen in a circus ring.

Incidentally it may be mentioned that the riding is fine, the horses are admirable and the women performers younger and better looking than are generally seen under canvas.

Exchange in Real Estate.

Edward White, of Washington Park, has exchanged his residential property for the brick building on West Front street owned by Woolston & Buckle, the store in which is occupied by Harry Werner. WEDDED AT ST. MARY'S.

MISS MARY A. M'QUE BECOMES MRS. ELLIOTT.

Ceremony Performed by Rev. Father Westman—Reception Held at Bride's Home—Couple to Reside in Norwich.

St. Mary's church was the scene of a pretty wedding Tuesday April 18th at 5 o'clock, when Rev. Father Westman united Miss Mary A. McCue, daughter of Thomas McCue, in marriage to Jeremiah Elliott, of Norwich, Conn. The wedding was witnessed by a number of guests, mostly members of the two families. The bride was attired in blue poplin, trimmed with white lace and satin ribbon.

The groom's sister, Miss Mary Elliott, of Norwich, acted as bridemaid, and wore a handsome gown. The bride carried a bouquet of white roses, while the bridemaid's were pink. Edward McCue, of Port Chester, N. Y., was best man. He is a brother to the bride.

After the ceremony the wedding party drove to the bride's home, 674 East Fourth street, where a reception was held. The happy couple left on the 9:58 train for Norwich, where they will spend the summer. The groom is coachman for Mrs. George H. Babcock, and will return in the fall, bringing his bride with him.

Among the guests present were Miss Gordon and J. O'Neill, of Brooklyn; Miss Kate Burns, of New Rochelle, and Thomas McCue, Miss Bridget McCue, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burke, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Burke, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Mcneil, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Anderson, M. O'Keefe and Miss Mary Lynch, of this city.

ANOTHER HOSPITAL BENEFIT.

It Will Be a Concert at the Casino May 15th.

There will be no Kirmess or Spielkartenfest this season for the benefit of the Muhlenberg Hospital. The members of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the hospital are planning, however, for a concert to be given May 15th, for the benefit of the hospital. The concert will be held in the Casino and the tickets for it will be $1.

Arrangements have been practically completed with the Metronome Banjo and Mandolin Club, of this city, Miss Marion Short, of New York, reciter, the Greater New York Quartette and Miss Marion Rummler, of New York, soprano soloist, to take part in the programme. It is planned to have the concert one of the most successful of the season.

Prize for Worst Looking Hat.

A novel ragamuffin concert was given at the M. E. Zion A. M. E. church Thursday under the auspices of the Helping Hand Society. Those who took part in the musical part of the programme, with instrumental or vocal music, were Alfred White, Wm. Groves, Edward Blair, Miss Fannie Gilden, Miss Minnie Dunham, Miss Bertha Groves, Miss Mamie Carter and Miss Hall. There was an address by Richard Norwood, and Henry Johnson sang. The Royal Blue train goes through. Frisbie, Thomas Johnson and Henry Williams took part in the ragamuffin parade, and as Johnston looked the worst he was given the prize, a silk umbrella.

Interesting News of Former Residents.

Thursday in Holy Trinity Protestant Episcopal church, New York, occurred the wedding of Miss Jennie Lockwood Shrady, daughter of Dr. John Shrady to Mr. Walter Graeme Buxton, where the matron of honor, gowned in pink, was Mrs. Arthur M. Shrady. Mrs. Shrady, a bride of this year, will be remembered by many Plainfield friends as Miss Julia Chaffee, and was one of the belles of last season, as well as of her brother, Edward J. Chaffee, who was one of ushers at the fashionable wedding.

Y. M. C. A. GYM IS FORMALLY CLOSED.

Exhibition of Class Work Held Thursday Night.

TWENTY PARTICIPATED.

THE THREE YEARS WORK DONE BY MEMBERS OF ASSOCIATION.

Exhibition Marked the Formal Closing of the Gymnasium—Class Work Will be Continued Until Warm Weather However—Dumb Bell and Single Stick Drills—Also Few Fancy Combination Waves on Bars.

While the class work at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium will continue until the warm weather reduces the attendance, the indoor season at the gymnasium was formally closed last Thursday with an exhibition of the regular work done there during the winter. There were some twenty members of the association who donned their gymnasium suits and took part in the work. Other members and friends filled the visitors gallery and the extra space on the gymnasium floor.

The exhibition was intended to show exactly what the members did in the regular class work rather than the fancy moves of which they were capable. It opened with a dumb-bell drill, led by C. E. A. Heywood, in which all took part.

A short drill on the low bar, parallel bars and buck, led by J. A. Stafford, Max Moraller and C. E.. A. Heywood, was given by all. The moves were those that are taken up in the first year's work. They were simple and prepared the way for more difficult ones. A single stick drill by four young men was led by C. E. A. Heywood.

A glimpse at the work of the second year was next, fifteen of the young men participating. J. A. Stafford led on the low bar, Eric Moraller on the parallel bars and C. Berry Egan on the horse. Pyramid work on the parallel bars followed by E. Moraller, Denton, Marcley and Brokaw. Marcley, Long and Heywood tried several fancy moves on the high bar.

There were six of the young men who took part in the exhibition of the work of the third year. On the parallel bars, they were led by Walter L. Long, on the high bar by Frank Marcley and on the horse by Eric Moraller.

A potato race, the distance in which amounted to a quarter of a mile, was run by J. H. Green, Jr., and Charles Hayes. Green won in 1 minute, 45 seconds. Hayes finished two seconds later. The last record was 1 minute, 46 2-5 seconds.

The exhibition ended with a game of basket ball between picked teams of five men each, captained by Eric Moraller and Walter L. Long. Moraller's team won by a score of 8 to 0.

HOW MONEY GOES FOR MISSIONS.

Interesting Address by Treasurer of Presbyterian Foreign Mission Board.

Rev. Mr. Hand, treasurer of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, addressed the Christian Endeavor Society of the Crescent Avenue church Friday evening upon the workings of that great society in which all Presbyterians are interested.

Mr. Hand, treasurer, is better able than almost any one else to intelligently describe how the money contributed to foreign missionary work is applied, and when he through last night there was no excuse for ignorance on the part of any.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions is a chartered organization, incorporated under the laws of the State. It consists of twenty-one members, ministers and laymen. Among the ministers is Rev. Dr. Richards, pastor of the Crescent Avenue church, and the speaker paid the Doctor a high tribute in his remarks. Among the prominent men connected with the organization are Rev. Dr. Wells, of Brooklyn; Rev. Dr. Paxton, of Princeton.

REJOICED THAT SONS WERE SAFE AND SOUND.

SHE DRANK IN HONOR OF THEM.

Mrs. Moncton Had Trouble As a Result and Was Locked Up for Being Drunk.

The blotter in the station house, Friday morning, merely showed that Mrs. Catherine Moncton had been arrested last Thursday by Patrolman Myers. She was charged with being drunk. The record of City Judge Runyon shows that she was found guilty this morning and that sentence was suspened.

Mrs. Moncton is an old woman, old enough to be grandmother to the Judge almost. She explained to the Judge that she had been to the home of a friend to have the letters of her two sons read. Two of her sons, she explained, and the tears gathered in her eyes as she told it, were with the army in Cuba and she was so glad to hear that they were still alive and well.

This friend had given her a bottle of beer to drink. On her way home she had tripped over her skirt and then the policeman had arrested her, claiming that she was drunk.

The police had nothing to say against the unfortunate woman who has always borne a good reputation. So the Judge suspended sentence.

GAVE THEM A SEND OFF.

Card Club Enjoyed a Pleasant Time With Mr. and Mrs. Taylor.

The card club of which Mr. and Mrs. Herbert S. Taylor, of Fairview avenue, are members, gave them a good send-off last Thursday at their home prior to their removal to Westervelt avenue, corner of East Front street. The business of the evening was dancing. The twenty-four guests present thoroughly enjoyed themselves until an early hour in the morning.

The house was decorated in an unique manner through the use of Japanese lanterns which were suspended from the ceilings in the various rooms, thus giving an oriental effect. The carpets had been removed from the floor, which gave added pleasure to dancing.

At midnight a sumptuous supper was served by the host and hostess, after which dancing was continued. The music for dancing was furnished by Miss Elizabeth Whitlock, formerly of this city, but now of Newark, and was all to be desired.

When the guests departed they all voted that they had never enjoyed themselves better and everyone was given an invitation to come again.

A FAGOT SOCIABLE.

Christian Endeavorers Enjoyed Themselves at the House of Misses French.

The members of the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Baptist church and their friends were entertained last Thursday at the home of the Misses French, West Seventh street, at a fagot sociable. The feature of the evening was that everyone present was obliged to tell a story as he or she placed a fagot in the fire.

During the evening there was instrumental music by Miss Edith Cains, while other persons present gave vocal selections and readings. Before the sociable was finished the social committee of the society, of which Miss Susie Woodland is chairman, served refreshments to all, and thus a pleasant affair ended.

The friends of Rev. H. D. Opdyke, late pastor of Mt. Horeb church, met in the Martinville church Thursday to bid him God speed in his new field of labor. The programme of the evening consisted of music and addresses. Coffee, cake and ice cream were served during the evening.

The friends of the minister handed him a purse of $25 as a substantial expression of their appreciation of his labors among them. It is the intention of Mr. Opdyke to make his home in this vicinity in the near future, having recently purchased a farm, which he has planted with fruit trees.

HOLY CROSS CHURCH TO LOSE ITS RECTOR.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy Resigned on Account of Ill Health.

RESIGNATION ACCEPTED.

WAS PRESENTED AT SPECIAL MEETING OF VESTRY APRIL 19TH.

Rev. Mr. Murphy Has Labored in the Borough for Over Twenty-Two Years—He Will Retire from the Rectorship June 30th—Will Then Spend Several Years Abroad With Wife and Daughter.

After twenty-two years of service as rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, Rev. T. Logan Murphy has offered his resignation to the vestry April 19th, and it was finally accepted with much regret. Ill health compelled Rev. Mr. Murphy to give up his labors in the borough and it is now his intention to retire permanently from parochial work. The next few years of life will be spent in foreign travel.

While many of his parishioners knew that Rev. Mr. Murphy's health had been poor of late, the news of his resignation will be a complete surprise. He has been considering the advisability of resigning for some time, but the present state of his health seemed to demand immediate action. So he called a special meeting of the vestry at the rectory last evening.

When the wardens and vestrymen were present Mr. Murphy explained the situation and presented the following formal letter of resignation:

To the wardens and vestrymen of the Church of the Holy Cross, North Plainfield, N. J.:

I herwith tender my resignation as rector of the Church of the Holy Cross. It is my intention to retire from parochial work.

During the past year I have not been as well as usual. I realize that the time has arrived when it is necessary for me to seek recuperation and strength.

In resigning my rectorship I am conscious of severing very pleasant relations with you all. I shall never forget your kind friendship, loyalty and earnest co-operation in my parish work which you have shown in the past. My resignation is to take effect on June 30, 1899.

It is my earnest prayer that the church will be prosperous, and that God's blessing may rest upon the parish and upon you all individually.

Very sincerely,
April 19, 1899. T. Logan Murphy.

The resignation was a complete surprise to most of the vestry, and they tried to persuade their rector to change his mind, but he was firm in his decision. They accepted it, he should take a vacation of a year or two if necessary and return afterwards to his charge. Mr. Murphy was firm, however, in his belief that he should retire permanently from the work and the resignation was finally accepted, and the following formal letter of acceptance of his resignation was presared:

To Rev. T. Logan Murphy, Rector of the Church of the Holy Cross.

Reverend and Dear Pastor:—It is with sincere regret that we, the Wardens and Vestrymen of the Church of the Holy Cross, have accepted your resignation as Rector of this Parish in which you have so faithfully and zealously fulfilled all your duties as Pastor for the term of your incumbency covering a period of 22 years. In accepting your resignation we accede your request, actuated solely by a desire to see you regain the health you have imperilled by long and arduous duties among us. We realized that in your departure the Parish sustains a great loss and we pray that God's blessing may always rest upon you.

John H. Carman,
Horsley Barker,
Wardens.
Arthur A. Gallup,
Wm. A. Westphal,
Thos. E. Warman,
John D. James,
Clarence L. Murphy,
Vestrymen.

Rev. Mr. Murphy came to the Church of the Holy Cross twenty-two years ago February 14th, after having labored in Tamaqua, Pa., Newport, R. I. and Fitchburg, Mass. He has a host of friends in this city and borough who will be sorry to learn of the necessity of his resignation.

It is his intention to spend a year or two in travel abroad, accompanied by his wife and daughter. His rectorship will end on June 30th and July 5th, he expects to sail for Europe on the White Star Line. His sons will remain in Plainfield and continue to make this city their home. Rev. Mr. Murphy will first go to London and afterwards to Paris and Italy, after which other plans for travel as he may then decide.

The Constitutionalist.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor

Mr. Hobart's Position.

Vice-President Hobart is now going through that period of public life in which everyone but himself knows what his plans for the future will be. But, as might be expected from the know it-alls, it is merely guess work as to what Mr. Hobart's future intentions are in respect to his participation in public life.

One day we have it in the strictest confidence that he has decided to relinquish all public cares, and then the next day we hear to the contrary. And so it seems to go see-sawing back and forth between contradictions. Following the report that Mr. Hobart has definitely decided not to accept a renomination on the Republican National ticket comes the one in more positive language that Vice-President has decided nothing of the kind.

In occupying the office of Vice-President Mr. Hobart has lent an importance to that position than no other incumbent has ever been able to give it, and if he should finally decide to retire, as it is not unlikely that he will, it would mean that New Jersey's star in the National galaxy of G. O. P. satellites would not shine as brightly as it does now. Mr. Hobart's leave of public life will be a distinct loss to New Jersey in the sense that he has been the most conspicuous Jerseyman in public service for a good many years.

Suppressing "Cider Joints."

The strongest moral force that can be brought to bear against the disreputable business of the "cider joints" in Plainfield, Sundays, is the position taken up by Revs. Father Smyth and Westman, of St. Mary's church. These two clergymen have taken a stand that is admirable to a high degree and they should receive the hearty and through co-operation of all good people.

Three years ago The Daily Press took up this same subject and succeeded in inducing the Common Council to pass an ordinance aimed to curb the business of these places. The ordinance prohibiting the sale of cider on Sundays proved fairly effective in suppressing the nefarious trade for a time, but it is a conceded fact that the ordinance is openly and disgracefully violated today. However, judging from the manner of the patrons of these places the beverage known as "sweet cider" is a very much different decoction than the name implies.

The present condition of affairs emphasizes the fact that there must be something more than legal machinery brought into play to suppress this traffic. What is needed is an arousing of the moral energies of the people, and the action and voice of Fathers Smyth and Westman have proven as effective and initiative. We trust that the reverend gentlemen will not falter in their undertaking of striving to suppress this traffic, but that they will continue as aggressively as they started. They have gone at it in the right spirit and right manner. They should have the quick and earnest support of the citizens who desire to see the good name of the city preserved.

Though it is not a momentous matter, the right to construct and operate the drain designed to relieve cellars of surface water in the borough during certain parts of the year, is a franchise that ought to be guarded into perpetuity. The Borough Council has shown a proper regard for the people's rights in making restrictions such as form the proposed ordinance submitted last night. It is gratifying to realize that even in small things municipal bodies are beginning to appreciate the value of public right and are prone to protect them properly.

Gov. Voorhees Tuesday appointed a commission to work jointly with a similar commission in New York to examine into and report as to the best methods of preserving the Palisades. It is to be ardently hoped that through the joint efforts of these commissions some plan may be evolved whereby the work of gradually tearing away the majestic Palisades for commercial purposes may be effectively stopped. The palisades should be preserved.

The decision of the State Board of Taxation Tuesday in dimissing the appeal of the local Y. M. C. A. to have the assessment made against their property made by the city act aside, is an important one. It will doubtless establish a precedent to guide the action in future contentions of the same kind.

GRAIN-O BRINGS RELIEF

to the coffee drinker. Coffee drinking is a habit that is universally indulged in and almost as universally injurious. Have you tried Grain-O? It is almost like coffee but the effects are just the opposite. Coffee upsets the stomach, while the digestion effects the heart and disturbs the whole nervous system. Grain-O tones up the stomach, aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. There is nothing but nourishment in Grain-O. It can't be observed. 15 and 25c. per package.

Subtle, But Untrue.

The Elizabeth Journal Tuesday published a long editorial under the caption of "Shall Elizabeth Sleep On or Wake Up?" It was a solicitous essay in reference to the trolley situation in Elizabeth as developed by the application of John Kean for a franchise to change the old horse car line into an electric railway, and the declination of the majority of the City Council to accept the meagre benefits which the shrewd corporation financier has seen fit to offer the city in return for the valuable privilege.

The Journal gives prominence to a report that unless the officials of Roselle grant the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company the franchise asked for through that borough, that company will skip Roselle by going on the north side of the borough and build a line to Irvington, there to connect with the trolley line to Newark.

For the purpose of argument the Journal gives the article a great deal more weight than it is entitled to, as well as putting constructions upon the facts presented therein that are at variance with the known and conceded plans of the promoters of the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company.

The Journal says that "if Roselle is sidetracked by this scheme, Elizabeth will also be sidetracked." And then the Journal advances some subtle argument to show that Elizabeth's salvation for trolley connections to Plainfield and intermediate towns is in the scheme which John Kean is promoting. Therefore the Journal insists that the Council should concede all that Mr. Kean asks, and grant him the franchise.

The Daily Press has assurances from an authoritative source that the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company have no intention of making connections with Elizabeth. Even if the Roselle Council declines finally to grant them a franchise—and it is by no means certain that the result will be this—the company has already had offered to them several routes to Elizabeth that are almost as desirable as the one through Roselle; and certainly just as advantageous to Elizabeth in providing suburban transit in this direction.

The principal object of the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company in building this line is to tap Elizabeth and Plainfield, and they will take extraordinary recourses to accomplish this. Elizabeth need have no fear that she will be sidetracked in trolley connections with Plainfield.

The Journal's argument has an air of dignity about it, but it is not based on the truth. The Elizabeth Council should hold to their present position and compel John Kean to agree to better terms than he is negotiating for.

In view of the proposed street improvements in the centre of the city where it is intended to supersede the present macadamized roadbeds with asphalt, the observations of a writer in the American Architect on this matter is of local interest. The superiority of asphalt is regarded as unquestionable by many of the best judges in this country and this is evidenced by its increasing use in so many of the cities. One minor trouble is remarked in its use, which has been a matter of careful experimenting. Waves appear at intervals in its smooth surface, caused by the heat of summer and the pressure of traffic. These sometimes showing a depression of an inch from the level in a linar distance of from eighteen inches to two feet. The present regulation standard of permissible depression is three sixteenths to one half inch.

It is a cold day when New Jersey is not mentioned in some of the great deals of the world. Now it is announced that Richard Croker and a number of his Sosom friends have rented a house at Red Bank which will be run as a sort of a summer annex to their much-discussed Democratic Club. In consonance with the town, the annex is designed to be a red-hot affair.

A milk company with $20,000,000 capital has been incorporated at Trenton. Of course, it is superfluous to refer to any relation between milk and water when we consider the stock of this concern.

Now that the time for holding Jefferson celebration dinners has passed the Democrats are looking around to see what else there is to relieve the political monotony with.

It would seem as though a little of the President's "benevolent assimilation" would not be a bad thing for Georgians to experience.

Perhaps if Captain Coghlan had weighed his words a little longer they would not have been quite so strong.

Further Improvements.

East Sixth street, between Watchung avenue and Washington street, is now being macadamized and the work will be completed in a few days. When that part is finished, East Sixth street will then be macadamized from Park avenue to Richmond street.

READY FOR THE STEPPERS

OPENING WILL TAKE PLACE SATURDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 13TH.

New Jersey Driving Association Will Also Be Reorganized—Probably a Triangular League—Woodbridge's Active Season.

In three weeks the trotting season in Plainfield will open. Within that time a meeting of the Central New Jersey Driving Association will be called and an attempt made to reorganize that league for the coming season. The triangular league, including Plainfield, New Brunswick and Trenton, seems the most probable choice. Meanwhile the local driving association has been going ahead alone and planned to open its track on Park avenue, Saturday afternoon, May 13th.

While Woodbridge is not in the league and is not likely to join, the horsemen of that place and Plainfield have decided to combine forces for their opening days. The opening in Plainfield will be held the 13th. That in Woodbridge will be held a week later.

It is not the intention of the Plainfield horsemen to arrange any formal race meet for the opening here. There will be, however, a number of matches between local and Woodbridge horses and, perhaps, some speed trials.

There are a number of fast horses, both trotters and pacers, owned in and around Plainfield this year. Some of them are known favorites and others are entirely new on local tracks. The success of last year's meet and the revival of the general interest in this kind of contests have prompted the horsemen foremost in the Plainfield Driving Association to plan another season as active or more so than the last. Already a number of the horsemen have been out on the road and exciting brushes have been quite an-merous Saturday afternoons.

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plainfielders Can Witness.

"A Milk White Flag," Hoyt's most successful effort in comedy, comes to Music Hall Wednesday evening, May 3d. The plot and satire are constructed on broader lines than most of Hoyt's skits, and its witticisms strike in hilarious style in every direction. "A Milk White Flag" is the kind of piece that fills the theatre and pleases the audiences.

At the Pleasure Palace are Henry Lee, of "Cyrano de Bergerac" fame, in his impersonations; George Felix and Lydia Barry; Bertha Wolby and Co.; the Cardowne Troupe of dancers and 20 more.

PASSING COMMENT

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

The fact that a race between the college crew of Yale University and the Annapolis naval cadets only awaits the sanction of the faculty, gives interest to all news concerning the crew. In the official statistics of crews it is found that Raymond A. McGee, of Plainfield, is among the oldest, tallest and heaviest of the college crew. There is only one other of the same age, fifteen of equal height and one other of the same weight. The age is 22, height 6 ft. 1 in. and weight 185 pounds.

Not Fighting the Law.

The Union Building and Loan Association is not fighting the new law governing building and loan associations, because the law is right and just, in that it protects the stockholder and guarantees him that he shall at least receive as much as he pays in, in monthly dues. And after one year this association guarantees him six per cent. interest on his instalments from the date of his first payment. This is all and even more than the State law requires.

Changed Their Plea.

Somerville, April 26—Francis J. Blatz, attorney for the Baldwin brothers and William Hartfelder, who were charged with trespass, appeared before Judge Bartine, this morning, and changed the plea of his clients from not guilty to non vult. They will be sentenced Friday. The petit jury was discharged until May 11th.

MODEL SCHOOL BUILDING

NEW BOROUGH INSTITUTION UP-TO-DATE IN ALL RESPECTS.

The Rooms are Light and Commodious and the Sanitary Arrangement as Nearly Correct as Can be Secured.

In the new public school building located at the corner of Mountain and Watchung avenues, in the borough, which has very properly been named "Watchung School," the taxpayers have one of the best up-to-date educational institutions to be found anywhere in this section.

In view of the fact that the school will be formally opened tomorrow by the transfer of two classes from the High School building, a description of the building and its arrangement will not be amiss at this time.

The building is of brick, with two stories and an attic, and is located on the northeast corner of Mountain and Watchung avenues, which seems to be a very desirable location, when it is considered that that section is being thickly settled with nice comfortable homes. The approach to the building is not quite as imposing as the one to the High school, but neverthe less harmonizes nicely with the building. Directly in front of the building is a stately flag pole, from which will be floated a handsome flag. The foundation of the building is located at a depth of about eighteen inches under ground. The cellar is well cemented and is provided outside with a tar preparation as a double preventative against water.

On entering the building one is surprised to see the vast amount of room, which is arranged in a most advantageous way. The rooms are all large, well ventilated, and light. On each of the two floors there are six classrooms. On the first floor each classroom will seat about forty-nine pupils, and in the classrooms on the second floor forty-five can be seated. In each classroom there is a well-arranged closet, adjustable windows and large ventilators, through which air is thrown in the room by means of a large electric fan wheel that is located in the cellar. Thus the air in the rooms is changed continually. There is also ample provision made for heating the rooms through the use of four heaters in the cellar, and it is estimated that the four will be needed in extreme cold weather. The heaters are so arranged that they can be used to the best advantage for various temperatures in weather.

On each floor there is arranged in a neat alcove a drinking apparatus, where scholars can quench their thirst without leaving the building. This is one of the best arrangements provided. Another one equally as good is the arrangement of the closets in the basement. There are seven on the girls' side and five on the boys. The cremation system is used and the refuse is burned twice a month.

The arrangement and style of desk used in the classrooms is adjustable and can be raised as the children become larger. There is not the slightest attempt at crowding, and there is a general appearance of roominess about the whole building.

On both floors there are also front rooms provided for the work of the school, or they can be used by the teachers. The building in some respects is like the High School. There is a class room on the east side, one on the west side and one in the rear on each floor.

As for exits there are three. One is the front and main entrance, while on either side in the rear there are exits easy of access from any part of the building. Another improvement is the arrangements on the roof, whereby in winter snow cannot slide off and endanger the lives of children and teachers. In the hallways on each floor there is also ample accommodation for hats and coats, doing away with doors, and thus eliminating a great amount of unnecessary noise. There is not any more wood inside the building than is necessary and arrangements have been made for fire protection through the use of hose and large pipes attached to the water mains. Altogether the building is one of the most complete and up-to-date to be found, and the people of the borough cannot help but be pleased with it.

Will Have to be Condemned.

CONCERT AND BALL GIVEN BY THE GESANG AND TURN VEREIN.

Prof. Conde Rendered Two of His Own Compositions—An Acrobatic Exhibition Also—Dancing Ended Pleasant Affair.

A concert and ball was given Monday by the Gesang and Turn Verein in Saengerbund Hall, assisted by outside talent. The concert was a lengthy one, and included selections by the singing section of the Turn Verein and singing societies from Elizabeth and Stirling, and violin solos by Prof. P. Ludwig Conde and other instrumental music.

Prof. Conde played twice and was encored each time. His first selection was a violin solo composed and dedicated to King Leopold, the First of Belgium. This difficult piece was skillfully rendered, and brought rounds of applause. The next selection on the violin was one of the Professor's own composing, "Mazurka de Concert," and was as well received as the first. Prof. W. E. MacClyment was Prof. Conde's accompanist.

M. Sorensen rendered a cornet solo, and Master George Smith, a youthful pupil, gave violin selections which were well rendered. As a change the programme was varied by an acrobatic performance by Charles Meyer, Sr. and Jr. and Master Hansen. M. Burke also gave an exhibition of slack wire walking.

The concert was a success from a financial standpoint, and the numbers were all liked.

The chorus were assisted by Prof. Louis Schnebel, baritone, A. Elchhorn was the director. Prof. O'Reilly's Orchestra furnished music for dancing, and also played the overture and other selections.

A BROKEN RIB.

Louis Roland Hurt Trying to Subdue Fractious Horses.

Louis Roland, aged 36 years, a resident of Plainfield avenue and an employe of Mrs. Brown, who carries on an excavating business, was brought to the hospital last Monday suffering from the effects of a broken rib in the abdomen. It seems that he was driving a team of horses for Mrs. Brown and the team became unmanageable. In Roland's efforts to stop the team he was thrown from the wagon which passed over his abdomen fracturing a rib. The man seems to be doing very well, and no serious results are feafed.

Another New Steamship.

The second of the two new steamships building for the Old Dominion Line at Roach's shipyard, Chester, Pa., was successfully launched Saturday, the 16th. Miss Florence Dudley Guillaudeu, daughter of the vice-president of the company, performed the christening ceremony, naming the vessel Jefferson as it moved down the ways. The Jefferson will be a sister ship to the Hamilton, recently launched, and will be a thoroughly up-to-date steamship. In conjunction with the Princess Anne and Jamestown, these new ships will perform the daily express steamer service between New York and Norfolk.

Sanitary Company Elect Officers.

The annual meeting of the Plainfield Sanitary Company was held Monday in the Casino, and officers were elected for the coming year as follows: President, J. W. Murray; vice president, Dr. J. T. Fritts; secretary and treasurer, L. W. Serrell, Jr. An executive committee composed of D. C. Ivins, H. G. Hunkie and L. W. Serrell, was elected.

Engaged as Soloist

The many friends of Miss Etta Raybert, of North avenue, will be pleased to learn of her recent success in the musical world. She has just been engaged to do the solo work in the Second Reformed church, New Brunswick. Miss Raybert has much talent as a vocalist and her work has been appreciated at the above-named church, where she sang last Sunday.

GIVE THE CHILDREN A DRINK

called Grain-O. It is a delicious, appetizing, nourishing food drink to take the place of coffee. Sold by 5 grocers and liked by all who have used it because when properly prepared it tastes like the finest coffee but is free from all its injurious properties. Grain-O aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. It is not a stimulant but a health builder, and children, as well as adults, can drink it with great benefit. Costs about 1/4 as much as coffee 15 and 25c.

COURT NOT SATISFIED.

UNABLE TO DETERMINE WHETHER OR NOT DWYER IS INSANE.

Doctors and Witnesses Thought That He Was Insane, But He Will be Sent to Morris Plains for Examination Soon.

Elizabeth, April 25.—Testimony was taken before Justice VanSyckel yesterday morning respecting the sanity of John Dwyer, who was indicted in January charged with the murder of his sister in-law, Mrs. Catharine Dwyer. Dr. James S. Green and Dr. Victor Mravalag, who were appointed by the court last winter to make an examination of the defendant, testified that it was their belief that Dwyer was insane. They recounted many peculiarities of manner. Sargent Corbett, on whose farm Dwyer lived for fourteen years, said that Dwyer used to keep lamps burning in the barn at night to keep the devil out. But the reason above all others on which Corbett based his belief in Dwyer's insanity was the fact that he wanted to marry Corbett's aged mother-in-law. Dwyer refused to be brought into court and the proceedings went on without his presence.

Justice VanSyckle and Judge Vail decided that the evidence was insufficient and ordered that Dwyer be taken to Morris Plains Asylum, where experts could be in attendance, and at a later day decide whether he is sane or insane.

BISHOP PRESENT.

Interesting Services Held in Church of Heavenly Rest Monday Night.

Bishop Scarborough held a very interesting service at the Church of the Heavenly Rest Monday, and was assisted by several of the local clergy men, among whom were Rev. Floyd Appleton, F. F. Simpson, A. S. Phelps, R. E. Pendleton, W. M. Downey and W. W. Moore, lay reader.

Tonight the Bishop will be at the St. Stephen's P. E. church, Netherwood, and next Sunday will attend the other churches of that denomination in the city.

Rahway's Political Plums.

The Republican members of the Rahway City Council will hold a caucus this week to determine on the officers to be voted for at the meeting of the New Council to be held Tuesday, May 2. A president of the board, together with Receiver of Taxes, Police Justice at headquarter, Overseer of Poor and City Physician are the officials to be chosen at the next meeting.

Fire Destroys Arbutus.

The trailing arbutus is fast disappearing and another week will find but few stray blossoms where they have been numerous. The past week has seen a large number of visitors to the sand hills, back of Bonhamtown, the only place in this vicinity that the arbutus grows. Saturday, the underbrush there caught fire and burned over a large section of the sand hills, destroying many of the pretty little flowers.

Seats for "Diplomacy."

Seats for "Diplomacy," next Saturday night, are still selling well. The demand for them has been extremely satisfactory and it is likely that the chart at Armstrong's drug store will be well sold by Saturday next, the day of the performance. Good seats may be still obtained at popular prices. Mr. Dallon, a prominent member of the "Amaranth," of Brooklyn, has been engaged to play the part of "Henry Boucicre," made vacant by the sudden death of Mr. Vanvliet's father.

JERSEY POLITICIANS PLANNING FOR FALL.

The Principal Contests Will be Over Senatorial Elections.

BATTLE WILL BE FIERCE.

NEW STATE SENATORS WILL VOTE FOR UNITED STATES SENATOR.

Somerset is Considered One of the Counties in Which the Democrats Have a Good Fighting Chance to Win —Senator Sewell Will be Greatly Concerned Over the Outcome of Election.

Trenton, April 25.—The politicians will have a rest from their arduous labors from now until October. No State conventions will be held until next year. At the November election this year there will be elected seven State Senators and a House of Assembly, besides Sheriffs for all the counties with the exception of Passaic, Bergen, Somerset and Cape May. The Senators whose terms expire this year now represent Essex, Monmouth, Union, Somerset, Gloucester, Salem, Warren and Camden. Their successors will each have a vote for a United States Senator in 1901. The outgoing Senators are all Republicans with the exception of the one from Warren county.

Between now and November the politicians will find some recreation in preparing slates for the Senatorial offices mentioned. In some of the counties there may be sharp contests, while in others there will be a walkover for the candidates of either party. For instance, in Camden, Essex, Union and Gloucester Republican nominations will be equivalent to election. Warren county seems to be the only Democratic stronghold. Monmouth, Salem and Somerset are very close counties, and for the success of the candidates on either side personal popularity and high character will be much of a requisite. As his seat in the United States Senate will be at stake, General Sewell, no doubt, will exercise a commanding influence in the selection of Republican candidates. South Jersey is his own particular bailiwick, and the only danger that confronts him there is in Salem county. The Democrats are always very active there, and recently they have scored some victories. It has elected several Democratic Senators within a score of years back, and another one may be chosen next November.

Essex county, being Republican to the core, there seems no use at all for the Democrats to make nominations. And the conditions are the same in Camden and Gloucester. In Essex there will be a new candidate for Senator, Mr. Ketcham not desiring a third term. Senator Johnson will be returned from Camden and Senator Stanger and Speaker Watkins will do battle for the nomination in Gloucester.

Warren county will surely elect a Democratic Senator. Should the Democrats get together in Somerset they would make things very lively for the Republicans. There are Republican sores in that county which, if not healed in time, may give the Democrats a clear road to success. Should Senator Bird seek a second term and receive the hearty support of former Senator Thompson, then another Republican victory would be probable. These leaders have been at daggers' points for years, and as a result of their quarrel a Democratic Sheriff was elected in Somerset last year. There is no doubt of the re-election of Senator Cross in Union.

An impartial review of the field would indicate that the Republicans will come very near holding their own in the present State Senate. As before stated, the only doubtful counties are Monmouth, Salem and Somerset. The House of Assembly will almost certainly be Republican. Two important offices will be filled by the next Legislature, those of State Treasurer and State Comptroller. The present incumbents, who are Republicans, have a bright prospect for a re-election for a third term.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be distroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

GRADUATION OF NURSES

EXERCISES OF TRAINING SCHOOL FIXED FOR MAY 25TH.

The Matter Decided at the Meeting of Hospital Governors Monday Night—No Decision About New Buildings.

The Governors of the Muhlenberg Hospital are not ready to act on the proposed additions to the present buildings. The committee, which has the preliminary work in hand, has made some progress, however, and will be expected to report at an early date. At the regular meeting of the Board of Governors, held in the Public Library, last Monday, they merely reported progress.

Besides the regular routine business necessary in the administration of the hospital affairs, the only business of importance was the fixing of the date for the graduation exercises of the training school for nurses in connection with the hospital. They will be held Thursday evening, May 25th, probably in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church.

Former Mayor William L. Saunders was appointed chairman of a committee to confer with other committees from the medical staff and the Women's Auxiliary Board in making arrangements for the exercises.

The report of the medical director, Dr. W. H. Murray, for the month ending April 20th, showed the total number of patients admitted, 24; number discharged cured, 16; discharged improved, 2; died, 3; total number treated, 44; number remaining, 23. Dispensary report: total number treated, 49; total number visits, 187.

TO ASK FOR INVESTIGATION.

Shareholders Object to a Change in Republic Savings and Loan By-Laws.

Elizabeth, April 25—Certain Stockholders in this city of the Republic Savings and Loan Association have petitioned the State Commissioner of Banking and Insurance for an investigation of the company, in accordance with the new law.

There are over 2,000 shares of the association's stock held in Elizabeth, and this action was taken at a meeting last week of shareholders in this city, which was called by E. D. Poole, the Elizabeth agent. The stockholders here object to a proposed amendment to the by-laws to increase the expense fund of the association, and also to change the present contract system so as to make retroactive contracts.

The headquarters of the Republic Savings and Loan Association is in Newark, and L. G. Gaddis is the president, and County Auditor Edward L. Conklin the secretary.

BIDS FOR LAYING SIDEWALKS

Four Competitors for Work to be Done by the Borough.

After the special meeting of the Borough Council last Monday there was a meeting of the street committee at which time bids were received for the laying of sidewalks and crosswalks in the borough. There were four bids received. John Lanning agreed to lay sidewalks for 48 cents a foot, and crosswalks for 55 cents a foot. P. Kiely agreed to lay sidewalks for 44 cents a foot and crosswalks for 96 cents a foot. For the same work A. Kane bid 48 cents for sidewalks and 96 for crosswalks. The bid of M. Powers was 46 cents for sidewalks and 95 cents for crosswalks. All of the bids were gone over carefully by the committee and the successful one will be announced later.

BADGE FOR DEWEY.

Handsome and Costly Jewel is Voted to the Admiral by Patriotic Society.

Westfield, April 26—Appleton Morgan, president of the Society of the War of 1812, of New Jersey, went to New York this morning and delivered a package to Commander George E. Ide, of the U. S. S. Yosemite, which the latter will deliver to Admiral Dewey at Manila.

The package contains the badge which the society voted Admiral Dewey in honor of his services in the Philippines. The badge is made of gold. It is in the form of a Maltese cross, between four golden eagles, upon an anchor. The arms of the cross bear the four arms of the service—cavalry, artillery, infantry and naval. In the centre of the cross is a medallion bearing the figures 1812, surrounded by 13 stars representing the States in the Union during the war of 1812. On the reverse side is a sunburst with the name of Admiral Dewey engraved thereon.

A Benefit Entertainment.

There is a likelihood that next Monday evening an entertainment will be given in the Camera Club rooms for the benefit of the proposed soldier's monument.

Council to Meet Monday Night.

Next Monday evening the Common Council will meet in regular session when considerable important business will be considered.

WOULD NOT ACCEPT THE BOROUGH'S TERMS.

Project of Building a Private Drain is Halted.

ARE CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS.

BOROUGH WANTS POWER TO ORDER ITS REMOVAL ANYTIME.

Ordinance Granting the Right Drawn up by Councilman Clark, but Amended by Borough Counsel Reed so as to Better Protect Borough—A. J. Smalley Wanted to Build It—Wouldn't Accept.

The Borough Council held a special meeting last Monday for the purpose of considering and acting upon a petition presented by A. I. Smalley, who desired to lay a private drain for surface water in the upper part of the borough. The petition was presented and an agreement was drawn and offered as binding between Mr. Smalley and the Mayor and Council, but the permit to tear up the streets to lay this drain was not given. After wasting about two hours the meeting adjourned without doing a thing.

The point in question seemed to be whether Mr. Smalley should have the sole right of this drain without any more than the usual restrictions. To this there was a disagreement. The agreement was drawn under the supervision of Mr. Clark, and according to custom it was shown to Corporation Counsel Reed for approval. Mr. Reed thought that the borough should be protected to a greater extent than was shown in the original agreement, and amended the agreement so that Mr. Smalley should have the sole right to the drain, and if the borough so desired it could order its removal at any time.

Mr. Smalley would not agree to the amendments and consequently withdrew his petition. He stated that if he could not have the permit according to the agreement as drawn by Mr. Clark he would not accept it. He claimed that it was a benefit to the, borough and if he was going to expend $600 or $700 for the improvement he ought to have adequate protection. On the other hand the officials thought that the borough should enforce restrictions that would provide against any improper use of the drain. Everyone thought the improvement a good one, but there could not apparently be an agreement as to restrictions. Thus the matter was dropped for the present.

STILL NO TRACE.

Dr. Tracy's Whereabouts Not Yet Disclosed—Family is Hopeful of News.

Up to date no news has been received regarding Dr. Robert S. Tracy, son of J. Ewarts Tracy, of West Eighth street, but still the search is being continued in the hopes that he may be found soon. It has been thought that Dr. Tracy was in a sanitarium being treated for mind trouble. This is not true, so a representative of The Daily Press was informed today. Dr. Tracy has been suffering with lung trouble and it was for the treatment of that ailment that he was stopping at the sanitarium.

Various theories have been advanced regarding his whereabouts. One is that he may have fallen in a swiftly-flowing stream in the mountains and drowned before anyone could assist him. Another theory is that he may be stopping at some out of the way place, where all communication is cut off, and where no one would be apt to hear that the doctor is being looked for.

The family is still hopeful and they believe that he will be found soon. The extended absence without any word has a telling effect on the family and relatives, but they bear the misfortune with remarkable fortitude.

Can't Control the Rebels.

Elizabeth, April 25.—Former Tax Commissioner Richard Frohveln, of this city, has received a letter from his son Paul, who is an apothecary on board one of the United States war vessels at Manila. The young man writes discouragingly about the situation there, and says all the territory that the United States, outside of Manila, is able to control, is simply what is covered by the range of the American guns. The Filipinos, he says, are persistent in their harrassing warfare, and just as soon as the Americans withdraw from a place the Rebels swarm into it again.

MEN HIT IN BATTLE.

OBSERVATIONS OF A SOLDIER WHO FOUGHT IN THE CIVIL WAR.

Was in Totten's Battery—Some Wounded and Dying Fell Thick and Fast—Fighting in Hard Luck—Taking His Last Situation.

"If you want to know how men die in battle, ask some of those who have been at Wilson's Creek, on one side or the other," said Judge David Murphy of the criminal court of St. Louis.

"I was in Totten's Battery, and I saw them, wounded and dying, falling thick and fast around me. You may say that I saw not one man flunk in the face of death on that terrible day of fighting and bloodshed. While I was firing my gun from Bloody Hill a youngster, not more than twenty years old, suddenly reeled his leg. He uttered a sharp, quick cry, then bent down and tore the trousers away from the place on his skin where a Minie ball had struck him. He looked up with a smile, pulled the wound with his hand, pulled the torn trousers down and went on shooting. Five minutes later he yelled again, and his hand went up to the fleshy part of his arm. 'Hit again!' he said, set down behind the battle ranks and examined his arm. The wound was only skin deep, and that seemed to please him hugely, for he tied his handkerchief around it and went again forward into the ranks with his musket.

"'You're fighting in bad luck, to-day, Pete,' said a comrade. The youngster turned his face to answer back, and by the snapping of his eyes it could be seen that his mind framed a saucy defiant reply. Just then his jaw dropped. A bullet plowed its way through his mouth leaving nothing but a bloody cavity. With a hoarse gurgle the fellow threw his gun on the ground and fled back of the lines. He was found in a hospital afterwards, but never recovered.

"On that same day I encountered three men under a tree. Their faces were ashy gray, showing that they were mortally wounded. I asked them why they were not attended to, and one of them said that it was all over with them; they wanted the surgeons to attend only to those who could be saved. One of the men was smoking a short briarwood pipe.

"'What are you doing, my friend?' I asked.

"'Taking my last smoke,'' he answered, his glassy eyes looking steadily at me. Another was reading a letter. He held it up to his face, but I could see that he was not making any headway. His eyes were growing dim, and his weak, trembling hands folded the missive and thrust it into his breast pocket. He was perfectly resigned to his fate and had not a word to say. When I returned in the evening, after a lull, I found the three men dead, their heads on the turf and at the shadow of the tree under which they lay.

"That's all bosh about men raving about home, mother and heaven. All the men I have seen die or near death were quiet and perfectly rational. They made no noise. Those that did were usually delirious, entirely out of their minds. The faces of those were frequently distorted, and gave every evidence of the mental and physical agony they unconsciously had endured.

"One thing that was also peculiar. Nearly all the regulars exhibited an instant desire to examine their wounds when they were hit, and the expression of their faces indicated in a moment whether they were slightly or mortally wounded. They seemed to know with unfailing certainty. If the wound was slight and in a place where they could tie it up conveniently, they did so, and then went back to the fighting lines. If it was mortal their grave, pale faces betrayed their knowledge. The volunteers were not so well posted, but they were as brave as lions, and seldom gave up unless seriously hurt."

When a Man Becomes of Age.

The question sometimes arises whether a man is entitled to vote at an election held on the day preceding the twenty-first anniversary of his birth. Blackstone, in his Commentaries, book 1, page 463 says "full age in male or female is twenty-one years, which age is completed on the day preceding the anniversary of a person's birth, who, till that time, is an infant, and so styled in law." The late Chief-Justice Sharswood, in his edition of Blackstone's Commentaries, quotes Christian's note on the above, as follows: "If a man is born on the 16th of February, 1608, he is of age to do any legal act on the morning of the 15th of February, 1629, though he may not have lived twenty-one years by nearly forty-eight hours. The reason assigned is, that in law there is no fraction of a day; and if the birth were on the last second of one day, and the act of the first second of the preceding day twenty-one years after, then twenty-one years would be complete; and in the law it is the same whether a thing is done upon one moment of the day or another." The same high authority (Sharswood) adds in a note of his own, "A person is of full age the day before the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday."

Smart Gowns in Black.

Some of the smartest gowns are black. One of light, smooth cloth; their mourning is made with the silk so tight around the hips that it is not seem possible for the wearer the of to sit down; however, it can be accomplished if she will remember pull the skirt up a little in front she sits down. Below the sheath effect around the hips the skirt flares out so that it gives more freedom in walking than might be supposed. It is built on the plan described, with a seam up the centre of the back, and opens in front at the left side by means of hooks put on under the seam so cleverly that they do not show at all. The coat is quite short, fits tight, and is cut in round points at the back and trimmed with several bands of stitched cloth. These bands are stitched before they are put on. The double-breasted front is trimmed with small silk buttons fastened with loops of silk twist—not buttonholes. The coat can be worn open or double-breasted, as has been described, the revers being cut away to light long silk stitched and corded. With this jacket and skirt is always worn a light gray silk blouse just a shade lighter than the trimming on the revers, the waist showing between the revers and the coat in front. The sleeves fit absolutely tight and, of course, the whole gown is intensely severe, but it is very becoming even to a woman without a figure, because the tailors can arrange to help out nature and give the proper lines.

Effective Spring Costumes.

The soft cashmeres make most effective spring costumes; they are made not only in the princesse shape, but also in waists and skirts. One of the smartest that has been turned out is a light brown, and has a close-fitting skirt, quite long, trimmed down the left side, where it is fastened with rows of narrow braid and ten crystal buttons. The coat is tight-fitting, double-breasted, cut short in the back like a man's coat, and has three large square tabs that fasten over each other with small crystal buttons. There are wide revers, round in shape, and a high round collar that can be turned over or worn standing, the latter faced with purple velvet, stitched in many rows, with an applique of brown cloth over the purple velvet. It is worn over the waist of the gown, which is strapped with bands of white lace over blue and white ribbon, put on to give the effect of a fichu crossed in front, and then going around at the back and fastening down under a most minute cloth belt. There is a V-shaped piece let in like a yoke in front of the waist and cut pointed in shape made of brown chenille. Trimming cashmere gowns with plain cloths, dotted with chenille, is one of the fads of the season, and it is sure to be one of the leading modes.

Beige Cloth Dress.

One of the most fashionable colors at the present moment is very bright beige, resembling certain shades of peau de Suede or peau de Saxe gloves. It is of the princesse shape, but the skirt appears detached from the body, which forms a short, close-fitting tunic right to left. The skirt, in the prevailing style, is comparatively tight around the body. In the back the corsage and the skirt are marked down the seams starting from the inner seam of the sleeves and extending in the form of a tunic to the bottom of the skirt. This tunic falls over an underskirt of violine taffetas, which is seen for a width of ten centimetres below the tunic, and is trimmed with a shaped flounce slightly gathered, and gives the dress the effect of being very much widened at the hem. This tunic is fastened down the front slightly on one side, and the sides are ornamented with rounded festoons of white cloth, piped with white along the edges.

The violine silk appears between the festoons all the way down. The upper part of the bolero is cut low, over a small yoke of violine silk. The neck trimming with narrow black velvet. The sleeves are quite tight, and are trimmed along the outer seam with a narrow band of white cloth.

The hat that completes the costume is of felt, matching the cloth. The brim, is crinkled across the front, and bound with violine velvet. On the top of the hat is an ornament composed of black feathers and violine roses.

Three Electric Fishes.

Of about fifty species of electric fishes, only three are of special importance—the torpedo, a kind of skate of the Mediterranean; the gymnotus or electric eel, of the Orinoco; and the malapterurus or thunderer fish, of the Nile. Interesting facts about the electric organ have been lately brought to light. This most remarkable of all batteries, whose results are said to be more economically obtained than any reached by man, acts only at the will of the animal, which also controls its intensity, and the discharge seems to depend upon the chemical process in the plate where the nerve filaments end. In the full grown gymnotus, whose shocks may stun a man, the voltage is probably between 300 and 800. A curious feature of the batteries is that they are without insulation. The discharge, which does not affect the fish itself, is used for protection and securing food.

OUR FASHION LETTER.

SKIRTS THAT CLING WILL WORN OUR WOMEN.

Made So Tight That Their Wearers Cannot Bend With Comfort—How Heavy Skirts May Be Handled—Soft Cashmeres Most Effective Spring Costumes.

Here is a big picture hat, with groups of ostrich tips and lacey brim. The hat has deep purple velvet streamers, which start from a rosette and tie under the chin in a graceful bow. The crown is made of plaited yellow straw lace, outlined with a fine black velvet cord. Around the crown is a band of deep purple velvet, and the full curly tips are jet black.

Most attractive are the spring costumes that are now being turned out by the dress-making artistes. In fact, that few women will be able to resist the temptation to buy more than one. To begin with, there are so many different styles, each and all appropriate to so many different occasions that it will be extremely hard to refrain from buying a gown for each and every occasion. For street wear on the list must come the coat and skirt style, the accepted uniform for shopping, traveling and all such occasions. These gowns are made in several different ways, the principal novelty in them being the skirts. There are several models of skirts, most of which are attractive; some, however, too exaggerated. There is one style made, as it were, in a half circular—that is, with circular sides and a seam down the centre of the back, but with absolutely no fullness until very nearly at the foot of the skirt. However, the seam down the centre of the back seems to enclose what the very plain look that is given by the circular skirt that has no fullness and no break in the material. These skirts fasten at the left side, sometimes with an invisible fastening under a flap or fold of cloth. Others fasten down the side by braid or straps of the cloth. Then, again, there are skirts made on this same plan that have the perfectly plain effect, but are relieved by little cords of trimming.

The New Sleeve.

An attractive gown in light blue (the new shade of blue) is trimmed to represent an overskirt. This consists of lines of black satin bias folds not over a quarter of an inch wide outlined with a narrow white silk braid. They are put down in front breadth, then turn around in a graceful line, come up at the side in points and then go down again to the bottom of the gown at the back. The skirt is cut with so much of a flare that this trimming gives the effect of an overskirt finished in points and is infinitely more graceful, because there is no flapping of extra material, as would be the case if two skirts were used. Another way—this perhaps smarter—has the skirt cut with the same flare and is trimmed with bands of the dress material. The bands only show in certain lights and yet give a style that is most charmin and exceedingly smart.

All the skirts are awkwardly long, the flaring flounce touching the ground everywhere. It is hard to hold the skirts up; women, however, are practically acquiring the art, which consists of grabbing the centre of the back breadth, holding it up quite high and then with the disengaged hand holding the fullness that otherwise would fall on the ground at the left side. This can be made a most picturesque pose but also an extremely awkward one. It calls for the daintiest of silk petticoats, for it must be confessed there is always more or less expose of lingerie. With the tight skirts there are fabrics in this new style of skirt, for the say that it shows the feet far more and consequently women are taking much more interest in their boots and shoes. It certainly does give one a great deal. Just here it may be we to say that colored stockings are coming in fashion again and can be shown to advantage with this style of skirt.

For house wear the long trains skirts are the most remarkable of all. They add greatly to a woman's height too, and have a look of elegance about them that a short skirt can never possess, but on the other hand, nothi looks worse in the street than a sk that is allowed to trail along the ground, cleaning up our dirty streets

Plays in French Theatres.

All Paris theatres except the new Opera Comique are full of fun, according to Francisque Garcey, the dramatic critic, who ought to know. He suggests that managers drive sheep into the auditorium before the performances to attract the pests, a method that is said to have some success in Spanish hotels.

LONG AGO.

I once knew all the birds that came
And nested in my orchard trees;
For every flower I had a name—
My friends were woodchucks, toads and bees;
I knew where thrived in yonder glen
What plants would soothe a stone-bruised toe—
O, I was very learned then,
But that was very long ago.

I knew the spot upon the hill
Where chestnut burrs could be found;
I knew the rushes near the mill
Where purest water flowed; I had a pondil
I knew the wood—the very tree
Where lived the poachiing, saucy crow,
And all the wonder lore knew me—
But that was very long ago.

And pining for the joys of youth,
I tread the old familiar spot,
Only to find the truth in truth:
I have forgotten, am forgot.
Yet, hére's this youngster at my knee
Knows all the things I used to know;
To think I once was wise as he—
But that was very long ago.

I know it is folly to complain
Of what the Fates decree;
Yet were not wishes all in vain,
I tell you what my wish should be:
I'd wish I were a boy again
Back with the friends I used to know;
For I was happy then—
But that was very long ago.

COLONEL CLITHEROE.

"Mrs. Col. Clitheroe," And with the utterance of those words the brown eyes seemed to laugh at their own reflection in the mirror, and as the prettily-curved lips parted they showed the perfect teeth. "Do I look it, John? Do I? For I am intensely anxious as to the effect which I shall produce on your friends and neighbors."

The gray-haired handsome husband shook his head with a smile.

"Hardly, I am afraid, Rose. A casual observer, I think, is more likely to think you were a young lady spending the holidays with her grandfather. Fortunately, however, the residents in these parts know who you are. I expect they will muster pretty strong at church this morning to get a good stare at you."

"I really feel nervous. I don't want these people who have known you all your life to say I am too young and too giddy, and too altogether unworthy to be your wife!"

"Don't be anxious, child, whatever they think and whatever they say, the fact remains that we are entirely satisfied with each other."

"I am more than satisfied," and Rose spoke emphatically. "I often wonder that such happiness should come to me when many women are miserably married."

It was a rather romantic little story, as things go in these prosaic times, that story of how Rose Dysart became Mrs. Clitheroe when she was 18, and he was 46.

Rose declared that she had been in love with him all her life. Certainly at two years old she had been in the habit of assuring him, "Rosie'll marry you when she's big," whereupon he always answered, "All right, little woman, I'll wait for you."

The child's passionate devotion to the handsome officer was quite an amusement to her parents. But when his regiment was ordered off to India, and they saw the little face grow white and thin, and heard her heart-broken sobs, they laughed no longer. Even after she ceased to cry for "Rosie's Colonel," she never forgot him.

The pretty baby had grown to a tall slim girl of 13 when these two friends met again. By that time, Rose Dysart was a pupil at a small and select boarding school in the environs of Paris; and on one of the frequent visits which her father and mother paid to their darling, they, by chance, across Col. Clitheroe, who also was spending a few days in the gay capitale.

"How is Rosie? Has she forgotten me?" were among his first questions. Mrs. Dysart laughed.

"Rose is at school at Neuilly. Come with us this afternoon, and then judge for yourself whether you have been forgotten."

The girl had not grown stiff and shy. She was immensely delighted to see her old friend again, and she told him so.

"I have grown gray since those days," he said, with a half sigh Whereupon Miss Rose declared that she liked gray hair best.

Each seemed to please the other, they seized in a moment on each other's thoughts. It appeared to diving each other's thoughts.

"I shall come again," said Col. Clitheroe, when the visitors' hour was over, and study must begin. "I see that you and I shall be excellent friends, in the seventeen years ago."

However, he made no second visit to the "pensionnat" at Neuilly-sur-Seine. His uncle's illness recalled him suddenly to England, and Rose Dysart was a finished young lady and about to leave school before he came before she had the pleasure of meeting her Colonel again.

The girl's face was not strictly beautiful, but it was a charming face; she was immensely admired, both by men and women, and there must be something lovable as well as lovely in a young lady of 17, when those of her own sex express sincere admiration and can praise her whole-heartedly.

"She will certainly marry young," said elderly people; but it never occurred to any one of them to suppose that this sunny-faced Rose Dysart would refuse three eligible men, simply because she loved a middle-aged colonel.

And they were quite delighted that she should refuse her first three offers of marriage.

It was in the spring, and just before her 18th birthday, that the Dysarts left their pretty Sussex home for a furnished house in Eaton place, which they had hired for the season at a somewhat exorbitant rent.

To the great joy of Rose, Col. Clitheroe was one of the first callers. He also was in town for two or three months, having, during the previous year, buried his old uncle, and inherited the property.

"My dear fellow," said Mr. Dysart to him, with the familiarity of a friend of long standing, "you really ought not to remain unmarried. Try and remember that you are depriving some woman of an excellent house, and a still more excellent husband! A man in the prime of life—well off, good looking, retired from the army—where lies the hindrance?"

"Simply in this," replied the Colonel. "I have never been in love; and I should be afraid to marry now that I am past the age for the tender passion. You see there is no 'three years' system' in matrimony. It has to be till death us do part."

"Don't you get married, Colonel," exclaimed Rose, who was in the room. "I like you best as you are. Indeed, I think changes are almost always disagreeable. It is pleasanter for things to go on pretty much the same. I mean to remain single all my life so as never to have to leave father and mother."

"You will be reconciled to leave us when the right man and right moment arrive," said Mrs. Dysart. "You may not think so now, girls never do before they are really in love. But in all probability the time will come when, of your own wish and will, you will go away from us."

Rose shook her head.

"I can't think so, mother. However, let us talk of some more interesting subject—of my being presented, for instance. Can you picture me, Colonel, making my courtesy and kissing the hand of royalty? I hope I shan't turn awkward and shy at the last moment. I ought not, for as Miss Pinkie with a countenance in place of a train, I have practised my manners over and over again."

They all laughed.

"No, I scarcely think you will be shy," said Col. Clitheroe. "Besides, the moment makes the man, they say—so, of course, it makes the woman."

The important day came. Rose Dysart was simply yet elegantly dressed, and her fresh young face won its fair share of notice as she waited among the crowd of debutantes.

Then followed six weeks of gayety; concerts, opera, dances, garden parties, riding in the Row; nevertheless, the girl was glad when her father decided to return to the country before mid-summer.

Everything seemed beautiful and endeared by absence. The trees had exchanged their first freshness of tender green for the ripeness of summer beauty; the hawthorn and bluebells were over and gone, but the feathery foliage of the woods seemed lovely by the contrast with Hyde Park.

Col. Clitheroe was to be one of the after season guests at the Dysarts' country house: he followed them within a fortnight of the departure from Eaton place.

Mr. and Mrs. Dysart regarded Col. Clitheroe as a sort of venerable friend with whom Rose might be sent to walk, talk, or ride, without outraging even the narrowest notions of propriety.

"I must have been a positive nuisance to you, wasn't I, Colonel?" she said one day as they paced side by side the terraced walk, while waiting the summons to breakfast. "I know I was always running after you, yet you never seemed cross and bored."

"I should think not, indeed," and the Colonel laughed. "Your advance were so flattering. I could not rise up the times you assured me your affection to marry me when you got big enough. Ah, child," and he gave a sigh followed the smile, "I suppose one of these days I shall stand among your wedding guests—and I don't think I shall enjoy the ceremony one bit."

"You will never be a guest and now Rose colored, yet held out her hand as bravely as when she was a child. "Colonel! I am going to do something dreadful, I suppose. There never fell any one; and please say 'no' if you would rather not—but I feel that I am big enough to—to—tell you exactly what I did when I was 2 years old: 'I'll marry you'—or I shall certainly never marry any one."

And in that moment Col. Clitheroe knew that though his hair was plentifully sprinkled with gray, and though his face had lines on it which nothing but the passage of years can trace, he loved Rose Dysart as a man loves only once in a lifetime.

It was only when he told Mr. and Mrs. Dysart of his good fortune that he remembered Harry Rawdon's commission.

"Never mind!" said Rose. "Your recommendation of him as a husband would not have been of the slightest use. He has been in love with Isat and always—ever since I was 2."

That is how there came to be a young, bright girl who, bearing the title of Mrs Col. Clitheroe, walked by the side of her elderly husband one sunny Sunday in the accompaniment of the church bells. Snow in his hair—summer in her face, yet they were happy, with a happiness which is the portion of very few of the men and women whom the world considers well-matched.—Household Words.

WEDDING GIFTS.

I was in an insurance office—fire insurance, not life insurance—and when I had communicated to Aggie the news of my recent promotion she had promptly declared in the face of her family's inaccountable preference for Henry Walker (who was not as good a fellow as I by any manner of means) that to be Mrs. Joseph Lounsbury and live in a small house on a very small income and bliss was precisely her ideal of existence. So we were not married in consequence; nevertheless, since marriage comes so seldom in one's life, we had hopes that our moneyed relatives would do the handsome thing.

They did. First came a complete set of knives, forks and spoons in a polished wood case. They were from the cousin Aggie had been named for.

"Such a sensible present!" said her mother; "they will last a lifetime."

"Yes," said I, "it will take us a good while to wear all those out two at a time."

"Don't you suppose we're ever going to entertain any company, Joe?" asked the girl of my affection, tapping me on the cheek with one of the forks.

This was the beginning of an avalanche of spoons—charter oak spoons—nutmeg spoons, soldiers' monument spoons, bust spoons, portrait spoons (I called these last our picture gallery, and suggested that they should be framed in ribbons and hung up in the hall), and finally all our friends sent a pair of salted-almond spoons, hoping that we would exchange them if they were duplicated, but it turned out that those were the only ones we had. The sugar spoons were all marked. There were five of them.

As the days went by and pieces of silver piled up on us I was more than once reminded of the couple whose courtship was conducted in Browningese, and who were fitted out by their admiring friends with a Browning tea set, with quotations around the edge, "Oh, the little more, and how much it is!" The Fords' had a run on china, but a good deal of it got broken the first year. The Smiths' specialty was etchings; they had enough for every room in the house—only, they never had a house; they have boarded ever since they were married. Finally the climax came when my old Uncle John sent us a solid silver tea set. I hadn't expected anything from him, because he thinks me a fool for going unabridged, for he didn't enjoy giving anything away. Aggie was getting too tired to be very enthusiastic, but her mother was delighted, and it was no use thinking that I would just as soon have had the money.

"This makes one hundred and three, dear—nine more than Susie Fish had," said her sister.

"One hundred and two," said Aggie.

"No, dear, one hundred and three—one hundred and two came this morning."

"Oh, I know I never shall get this list right!" exclaimed Aggie, diving for her blank book.

"Look out, or you'll be handing that book to the parson for a prayer-book," said I.

"Wouldn't be a bit surprised," she answered, smiling; Aggie could smile when she was tired.

Well, we were married. A man breathes easier when it's over with.

"But, Aggie," I said, as the carriage door slammed on us, "if it ever happens to us again, let's leave out the heathen superstitions."

"I know it," said Aggie. "I begged them not, but they would smuggle one in. Does any one pay by hair?"

"Some in your hat brim."

I brushed her off, and she seized the newspaper I had carefully brought along to look like an old married man, and conjured with it a minute, holding it out by an improvised handle.

"Here," she said, "the very children in kindergarten know how to make paper dustpans—now brush the carriage seat."

When we got out I gave the hackman a dustpanful of rice with a bill on top.

We began housekeeping in a cheerful way in a little house on a new street. It was something like to come home to one's own dinner table. We had so much silver that it looked funny with our plain china—nobody had given us a lot of ice-cream sets and things. I tell you marriage is a lottery when it comes to wedding presents. I liked seeing Aggie's face in the angel food. Every night the little maid (imported, to live up to the spoons) brought them and all the rest up-stairs on a tray and we packed them away in the chest we had made, and a pretty penny it cost, with its combination lock, which went into the back of the closet where nobody could get at it. One night we came home at twelve from a reception, and as we stole upstairs not to wake the sleeping handmaiden, Aggie so sleepy herself that I slipped over her wedding gown and I had to hold her, we came upon the whole array on the floor outside our door!

"Isn't it imposing? so safe!" said I.

"I shan't care anything about going out evenings any more if I've got to put that silver tray under I get home," said Aggie, desperately.

"Let it stay there."

"Oh, I can't. Mamma thinks we're so careless. We don't appreciate things enough. She says, if any one had given her such elegant things when she was married she wouldn't have dared to close her eyes!"

"Take more than that to keep my eyes open."

But I helped Aggie shove the tray under a chair, and drape the train of GALLEY (TWO of story No Dupe.... her wedding dress over it.

"What on earth are you doing, Aggie?" I asked, on coming in for dinner one day. All I could see was one foot and a skirt ruffle in the closet.

Aggie scrambled up enough to catch me round my knee.

"Oh, Joe, I'm so glad you're come!" "What is it? You're ready to cry."

"That's what I like about you; you don't have to be explained to. Henry Walker wouldn't have known I felt like crying if I'd screamed at him!"

That made me feel pretty good. (though dinner wasn't ready.)

"But what—"

"It's the silver! I came up to change the forks and spoons so they should get worn alike, and I've shut the paper with the combination in the chest, and I can't remember what it was!"

I got down beside her. It was hotter than Mexico in that closet. I turned and tried the lock.

"Do keep the dresses out of the way, they tickle the back of my neck." No good. "Well, I guess we'll use the old forks to-day," I said, "and don't believe they'll fade away yet awhile."

"Oh, I'm so sorry—but—they're every one shut up in that chest."

So we laughed. What else was there to do? It was funny when Deming came to house with me to tea—we had him some days before. It wouldn't have been funny with some girls. The table looked principally white china, and the kitchen knives and forks didn't go round. Ever cut omlet with a server and pie with a fruit knife?

"Don't tell mamma!" pleaded my wife. I began to think I should have to call in a locksmith, when one evening Aggie startled me by jumping out of bed crying, "I've got it! I've got it!"

"Got what—a nightmare?"

"I've got the combination! I've been working on it all the time, and it just came to me in my sleep. Get right up, Joe, and hold the light, and mind you don't say anything on first!" In another two minutes the front of the chest fell down, and behold our household gods! "If anybody wants to steal them between now and daylight, they can, that's all," said Aggie; "but I'm not going to shut that lock again tonight for anybody!"

In the fall there was a burglar scare about town, and Agnes' mother came over and gave her a lecture upon locking the windows. She said we really didn't know anything on first girl with a mother

FAITH AND SCIENCE.

BISHOP MONTGOMERY ON "THE END OF CONTROVERSY."

Instead of Being Antagonistic, Faith and Science Must Finally Amalgamate, as Faith Itself Is the Highest Science, the Science of God.

The Right Rev. George Montgomery, bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles, recently delivered an able address on "The End of Controversy," a part of which follows:

It is needless to say that the century just drawing to a close has been one of extraordinary activity. With all this energy in the industrial, commercial and intellectual world in no pursuit or business or line of knowledge has that activity been greater than in the religious questions that affect man's everlasting happiness. Many false principles have been evolved, and some antagonisms to religion have been developed, but even these show that the religious questions of life have a hold on the human mind that nothing can supplant. The church in this, as in all ages, stands before the world as the most conspicuous object and the most complete organization in it, and she is now, as always, equal to the work that God gives her to do. The church being by her nature and her divine commission the teacher of men, her relation to this activity is largely one of controversy, for the expansion of divine truth provokes controversy.

The object of all controversy ought to be to arrive at the truth in the question in dispute. Can there be found a principle that would put an end to controversy? I do not pretend to be able to suggest a principle that would stop us poor mortals from disputing, for upon many questions we will dispute to the end of the world; nor is this an evil when it concerns the material world, for it is by divine arrangement that it should be so.

The wise man tells us "Almighty God hath made all things good in their time. He hath delivered them over to the consideration or the disputations of the sons of men, so that men cannot find out the walk that God hath made from the beginning to the end." In the physical world man's natural reason has a clear field. God has given him wonderful powers of mind and has set him in the midst of these things to make what he can out of them. He can do little more than penetrate the crust. If he cannot fathom the depths of the natural order with his natural reason, still less can he solve the problems of the supernatural with this same unaided reason. We must have an interpreter like the truths themselves, supernatural, called a divine authority.

Their right interpretation is essential to our supreme good. Reason unaided cannot interpret them. God has given us somewhere that interpreter. The end of controversy, then, in religious matters is a living, visible, speaking divine authority.

In natural things the wisest men have had to abandon reason alone and adopt the principle of authority. The law and the court's interpreting it are the recognized authority to settle disputes and adjust conflicting interests. There is always a court in every civilized community whose decision is final and from which there is no appeal. This principle is of absolute necessity to stop internecine confusion and to ward off social anarchy. All debate presupposes a judge outside the debaters, else there is no end to the debate. Is it not strange, then, that men should say that in the things of time we need so much authority is an order of truth confessedly supernatural? In supernatural things mistakes impair our supreme, our future and eternal welfare.

Can we look forward to a time when reason and revelation shall be what God intended they should be, the complement of each other, guiding man to the possession of a perfect knowledge? I believe the time will come, and I believe it will come through the very source whence some of the enemies of the Catholic truth look for its overthrow. It will come from the enlightened and intelligent men of the world. The great controlling cause in the way of its accomplishment are wealth, luxury and business. They crowd God out of the mind. Men do not deny God. They simply ignore him.

Men admit that in all denominations of religion and in all ages mistakes have been made, but there is truth in all denominations. Take this sum total of truth, and you have the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, believed and practiced by God's people, and in no other can you have that unity of faith of which Christ speaks. But reverse the argument, and you have exactly a contrary conclusion. Admitting that each holds some fundamental truth, it is a fact equally true that there is not one denomination that does not deny some truth that some other denomination holds to be fundamental. Then take all the negations as you took the affirmations, put them together, and you will find that the sum total of the negations is the denial of every fundamental truth held by any denomination, unless it be that there is a God. You have the same aggregate body of Christian believers denying and affirming the same things at the same time. This is intellectual anarchy in religious thought.

In late years the scientist has done much for true religion. He is showing more and more the real relations between true science and true religion, between the natural and the supernatural. If he continue in the proper road, he will soon understand that God stands behind the natural and the supernatural; that he has made to man a revelation through both; that as the God of truth he has not contradicted himself.

The old church stands out from all others. She is a city seated upon a mountain. When in the course of his analysis the scientist sees outside the church the contradictions, self confessed to the world, he will turn to the old church as the logical and historical church of the ages, and she will appeal to him as the counterpart and complement of nature. For this we should pray, for this we should labor. Then shall faith and science meet, faith enlightening science, and science strengthening faith. Rather it will be said that faith itself is science, the highest science, the science of God.

THE SCRIPTURES.

Private Interpretation of the Bible Incompatible With Catholicism.

The Rev. Dr. Charles A. Briggs, who left the Presbyterian church after having been tried by that body for heresy and who is soon to become a minister of the Episcopal church, said in a recent address:

"If the Roman Catholic will recognize the authority of the Bible as he ought to and Protestants will recognize the authority of the church as they should, they will not have so much objection to one another. Whatever differences there may have been will eventually disappear."

Commenting on this utterance, The Sacred Heart Review of Boston says: "Of course Catholics can never recognize the Protestant notion of the Bible, and the Bible alone, without note or comment, and the doctor knows that perfectly well. He knows that the authority of the church to which he exhorts his fellow Protestants is perfectly incompatible with the right of private interpretation of the Scriptures. They can no more coalesce than oil and water. If you claim the right of private interpretation, you discard authority. If you choose authority, you necessarily discard private interpretation. Unity without authority is impossible. There can be no compromise, and Dr. Briggs knows it, if he only had the consistency and the courage to acknowledge it."

SUNDAY RECREATIONS.

Innocent Pleasures Not Forbidden by the Holy Spirit of the Church.

Our holy mother the church does not forbid innocent recreation, not even on Sunday. Our Christian Sunday is by no means the Jewish Sabbath of old nor the Puritan Sabbath, as some of our Protestant brothers understand it. Our Sunday is a day of joy. We should on that day be cheerful without dissipation, grave and religious without sadness and melancholy.

And as Sunday is a day consecrated not only to religion, also to relaxation of mind and body, we are not forbidden to spend a portion of it in innocent recreation. Hence Catholics are not of the opinion that spending the day in absolute quietude and idleness and sitting all day in one chair with a sour face are the correct manner of spending the Lord's day.

But every Catholic knows that the great and main duty imposed on us on Sundays and holy days of obligation is to assist at the hearing or offering of mass. We know that all those who can go to holy mass must do so under pain of grievous sin. Moral impossibility is the only excuse. Pleasure of all kinds must at all times be sacrificed to duty. —Rev. Father Vanhoomissen.

Charity.

Charity is the very breath of God. Charity gave birth to Jesus and nerved his soul to endure the agonies that its winning human redemption and shaping human civilization. Charity touches each dawn and sunset with roseate and radiant glory. Charity makes all human life beautiful. Charity makes morning, though said duty be lonelier than death and has at first only a scaffold for its reward. Charity so molds the hearts of men and nations that the victories of its own greatest heroes are secured, charity in the end turning all bells of hate and crime and darkness into eternal homes of joy. Charity is the only force in all the infinite universe that does not exhaust itself by service and action, but increases its power in the precise measure of the purity and energy with which it is exercised. Let us seek it. Let us live it and so make our lives divine.

Their First Pilgrimage.

The Athenian Catholic paper Harmonia writes: "There is no Catholic nation that has not repeatedly passed before the eyes of the world, while he is surrounded by undying glory and whose head is crowned with imperishable laurels. Day by day almost numerous bodies of pilgrims, even from the most distant lands, arrive at the Eternal City. The Catholics of Greece alone have not yet enjoyed this happiness. We therefore hasten to publish the following good news: At the proposition of Mgr. Gaetano Maria de Angelis, O. M. I., the pilgrimage has been decided upon for an early date. It will carry from all parts of Greece the tribute of our gratitude, veneration and loyalty to our supreme pastor, Leo XIII."

The Mother of God.

Mary, thou art the book in which the rule of my life is written, or rather thou art the book which contains the wisdom of the Eternal Father!—St. Catherine.

Inconsistency.

In the ancient cathedral of Lubeck, in Germany, there is an old slab with the following inscription:

This speaketh Christ our Lord to us:
Ye call me Master and obey me not,
Ye call me Light and see me not,
Ye call me Way and walk me not,
Ye call me Life and desire me not,
Ye call me Wise and follow me not,
Ye call me Fair and love me not,
Ye call me Rich and ask me not,
Ye call me Eternal and seek me not,
Ye call me Gracious and trust me not,
Ye call me Noble and serve me not,
Ye call me Mighty and honor me not,
Ye call me Just and fear me not.
If I condemn you, blame me not.

A GILDED ROMANCE.

HOW A MINER'S DAUGHTER ENTERS THE VANDERBILT FAMILY.

The Story of Jim Fair's Strike in the Comstock Lode and the Social Sequel Which Ensued—The Admission of Mrs. Belmont.

[Copyright, 1899, by American Press Association.]

THE Vanderbilt-Fair wedding brings to mind an old adage which I have heard attributed to Daniel Webster, "There is always room at the top, but those who get there do not find the view as good as they hoped." The evolution of the Fair family is unique and possesses a romantic charm. There is a code of climatic ethics in the atmosphere of California curiously adapted or eliminating most of the rules in the conservatism of eastern bigotry. By substituting individualism and personal freedom the California rises superior to most codes —that is, social codes. Society in this is a barred cage, and his life is his own. He is a slave to nothing in abstract forms.

Jim Fair was a working miner on the Comstock lode earning a wage of $5 a day. His industry and keenness advanced him to the position of superintendent of the Hale & Norcross mine, with a salary of $1,000 a month. During its ascendency he married Mrs. Fair, who was one of Irish parents.

Mrs. Fair was raised in a little mining camp in Calaveras county, Cal. Her brothers appreciated the value of education and saved sufficient money to send her to a country school. Subsequently Mrs. Fair attended the convent for a short time in one of the large towns of California, where she met and married Mr. Fair. She was a handsome girl in her youth, and her daughters have inherited her beauty, like her dark Irish beauty. She lived for some time after her marriage in Nevada, devoting her energy and personality to the interest of her family.

While engaged as superintendent on the Comstock Jim Fair became notable not only as being a very shrewd man, but as the best miner on the lode.

John Mackay, at this time, was working miner in the Consolidated Virginia mine. He called upon Mr. Fair to pass judgment upon the prospects that property presented. Mr. Fair, after a thorough examination, was convinced of the existence of a vast body of ore near at hand. Together Fair and Mackay went to San Francisco to secure capital with which to buy in the majority of the stock. Their efforts met with but little success. They tramped the streets of San Francisco day after day, spending many hours in the offices of small capitalists, the world's reasoning opposed. Eventually they found in two saloon keepers, Flood and O'Brien, some willingness to form a combination. Flood and O'Brien had between them about $60,000, and with this capital thus furnished they manipulated the stock of the celebrated Con. Virginia.

They boosted the stock to $30 a share and sold out a large block at those prices. Then they broke the market and drove the stock down to $7 a share. After a few months the Big Bonanza was opened up and cut on different levels, which put over $100,000,000 worth of ore in sight. They then threw it open to the world, and there was a speculative excitement in the stock never such as the world had never seen. The Con. Virginia stock went to $900 per share, and Flood and O'Brien, Mackay and Fair became the Bonanza kings.

VIRGINIA FAIR.

The sequel to this unique romance, so far as the Fairs go, is known more or less by the world at large. Jim Fair found time and money hanging very heavy on his hands, and before the gates of the splendid palace on Nob Hill were opened to their many friends Mrs. Fair sought a divorce, with which she secured half of his fortune, which allowed her $6,000,000.

The two daughters, Miss Virginia Fair and her sister, Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, were the principal legatees under their mother's will, each succeeding to $2,000,000. Added to this, their paternal inheritance of several millions, we find in the marriage between Miss Fair and Mr. Vanderbilt junior the fusion of tens of millions with hundreds of millions.

The mother of young William K. Vanderbilt is now the wife of O. H. P. Belmont. Among women there are few who have been so conspicuously successful in financial strategy as she. The correct estimate of Mrs. Belmont's personal character cannot be comprehended. She has by her clever manipulations surrounded her life with almost inculcable resources. Her manners are those she owes to fortune. By the invulnerable power of acquisition she holds her rather clouded prestige as a society woman.

Mrs. Belmont's social principles embody the grasping, heartless methods of a trust or monopoly. She is the organizer of a movement in which she is the central figure. It is through her ideas and through her immutable schemes of legislation that she has controlled the Vanderbilt millions. She does control the Belmont millions, and now Miss Fair will contribute to this woman's personal supply the millions obtained from Jim Fair's mining expedition on the Con. Virginia lode.

It is true that Mrs. Belmont invested $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 in the title of the Duke of Marlborough, but then she owns Blenheim castle. Her grandson will become the next duke. The sentiments, political and social, of the relatives of the present duke are antiAmerican in everything American except American money. To acquire that for the little duke and his family they consented to accept an American duchess. But, if the duchess had died without heirs, the invested $15,000,000 were entailed to revert to the Vanderbilt estate.

ANNETTE CRAWFORD.

NOTES OF WOMEN'S WORK.

Mrs. Emily Crawford, the Paris correspondent of the London Daily Mail, is recognised as one of the most successful woman journalists.

Art in the public schools is a somewhat new departure which has been successfully inaugurated by Miss Elizabeth Gonger at Joliet, Ills.

Miss Gordon, a society belle of Atlanta, created a social sensation while on a recent visit to Philadelphia by her impersonations and singing of darky hymns.

A young woman, Miss Gussie Freeman, works on the wharfs of the Wilmington district of New York as a longshoreman and holds her own with the men.

Among the successful business women of the country are the Misses Anna and Kathryn Offerman, who own and manage one of the largest office buildings in Toledo.

Jeannette Mackenheanny, the daughter of a Chippewa chief, has by reason of her almost perfect form and features been for some time employed as a model by leading Boston artists.

Mrs. Kate Collins has found a primrose path to prosperity, having developed a substantial clientele for her work in decorative art, which is the designing of "favors" for social functions.

Dr. Maria L. Mergler, one of the foremost of the women physicians and surgeons of the country, has been chosen dean of the Northwestern University Women's Medical school of Chicago.

The National Society of Daughters of the American Republic will erect a monument to the memory of Reubena Hyde Walworth, who died from fever contracted in nursing soldiers at Montauk.

Miss Caroline Hazard of Peachdale, R. I., the new president of Wellesley college, is widely known both by her writings and by her membership in a family which has been prominent for generations.

St. Louis has the first and, it is believed, the only branch of the National Cooking Teachers' league, which has headquarters at Chautauqua, N. Y. Miss Lizzie Kander is president of the St. Louis league.

Mrs. Fanny Powell Priestman of Jersey City is recognised as the rediscoverer of the lost art of luster painting on china and has produced several pieces which have already attracted attention among the devotees of the ceramic art.

An example of the reward of perseverance and merit is noted in the career of Miss Hallie Hanson, who a few years ago sold papers on the streets of New York and now writes advertisements for a big dry goods firm for $50 a week.

Miss Grace McKinstry, a St. Paul girl who studied art in Paris, where some of her work took rank in the Salamp de Mars, is winning laurels in Washington. She is the protegee of Mrs. Senator Cushman K. Davis, whose portrait she has just finished.

Chicago has a Carry club, the only organization of its kind in this country, which is devoted to those dear little creatures which have lately become the fads as pets for women and children. The founder and president is Mrs. Edith Kingman Pryor, who has the largest kennel of dogs in the United States.

Mrs. Virginia Claypole Meredith of Indiana is known all over the middle west as a stock breeder, the product of her farm taking first prizes wherever exhibited. She is an enthusiastic clubwoman and was recently elected president of Indiana State Federation of Literary Clubs.

A SINGER'S ROMANCE.

The Warwick street flats were always dismal. On a bright day they looked more gloomy and grimy than ever; and when the sun beat down strong and yellow upon the dull red bricks it seemed to be crushing out the life and stifling the breath of the human beings who fought and struggled and laughed and wept inside.

In one of the flats a woman who was little more than a girl wandered listlessly backward and forward, or strummed with weary effort upon her little piano. There was a gnawing fear in her thoughts—a jarring anxiety that refused to be stilled. She had seen Ralph, her husband, growing paler and thinner day after day; she had noticed the weariness grow in his eyes, the tired look that was fast becoming habitual to his face, and she was afraid. What of, she scarcely dared even own to herself; but she knew that Ralph was working too hard, and that the summer heat was undermining his strength.

She sat down presently to practice. Somehow today her voice sounded clearer and stronger than it had ever done before. The keys seemed to fall with scarcely an effort between her fingers, and she found herself singing an old song.

Suddenly an idea occurred to her. She sprang up, with a scarlet flush on her cheeks, and with a sudden brightening in her eyes.

A few minutes later she was marking her way rapidly through the narrow, reeking street, and out into the broader thoroughfare beyond.

She stopped before a house bearing a brass plate, and then the flush in her cheeks began to fade away. She hesitated a moment before she rang the bell, but in her nervousness she gave such a peal that the Professor, slumbering peacefully inside, started up in affright.

"Ach, Himmel!" he remarked. "Vas is it?"

The reply came in the form of a neatly dressed servant, who announced that a young lady was waiting to see him, and the Professor's curiosity overcoming his usual dignity of manner, he gave orders that the young lady should be admitted.

Nellie came in nervously. She glanced at the big, bearded man in front of her, and wished she had not been so hasty.

When she spoke, all her nicely worded sentences, all here carefully calculated eloquence vanished, and she could only stammer helplessly:

"I—I wanted to ask you," she began, "to—test my voice."

The Professor smiled—a grim, significant smile—and she felt in very truth that she was boarding a lion in his den.

"Well, well," he said at last, not unkindly, "let us see. Let me hear you sing."

She sat down nervously to the piano. The notes were indistinguishable before her eyes, and her fingers trembled weakly. For a moment her voice was beyond her control. She felt incapable of steadying it, and she could not remember a word to sing.

Then suddenly out of sight of a song called "Daddy" flying upon the piano, and she took it up and began to play.

She sang through the first verse with all the exquisite pathos of which her voice was capable. It rang out soft and clear across the room, and the Professor almost fancied he dreamed.

He woke with a start, to find that he had stopped and was putting back the music.

"Again," he said harshly. "Sing it again!"

She sang it through once more; and when she looked around, the Professor was standing out of the window and the sight of his back turned toward her sent a chill to her heart.

"I was afraid I should be a failure," she said with a half sob, taking her gloves. "I am sorry—"

He turned around at the sound of her voice. She did not know that his eyes were full of tears, and that the song had conjured up recollections of of his dead wife.

"Nellie!" he said abruptly. And Nellie went back obediently to the piano.

When she had finished, he came over himself and put her through a number of exercises. He tested her voice in every possible way. He made despite pains with her—such pains that would have considerably astonished some of his pupils if they could have heard—and when she had finished, he looked up interestedly into her face.

"Your voice has been well trained," was all he remarked.

"I had a good master," said Nellie, with the chill growing at her heart, "and I have always kept up my practice. I have not had every day since I have been married."

"Good, good!" said the Professor suddenly. "Very good; and if something should turn up, will you take it at once?"

Nellie caught her breath with a gasp of astonishment.

"Take it!" she cried. "Then—then, you do think—you think I can earn some money?"

"I think," said the Professor, forgetting his dignity and his English, with a sudden frantic gesture. "I think you haf a peautiful voice—a very peautiful voice!"

That afternoon Nellie waited impatiently for Ralph to come back from hearsal. She was burning to tell m the news, and to get his permission to look out for an engagement. The Professor had spoken so favorably of her voice—had given her so much encouragement—that she was filled with the wildest hopes.

She lay back luxuriously in her easy chair and dreamed golden dreams.

And the summer afternoon waned and passed, and still Ralph did not come. She sat up listening for his footsteps. Somebody was making such a noise on the stairs outside that she could hear nothing. Men—heavy-booted men—seemed to be tramping up with some heavy burden.

Suddenly they stopped—stopped outside her door; and then there was an ominous silence. The next moment there came a knock, and a policeman looked in.

Nellie started up with a cry.

The policeman came forward and tried to keep her back. Some other men followed him. There seemed to be quite a lot of men crowding into her little room, but she could see none of them distinctly—only one form that lay stretched unconscious on a shutter and over that form she bent, with a ghastly white face, and stared wildly at the narrow stream of red blood that was oozing slowly from her husband's colorless lips.

There was no hope!

The doctor said so, but Nellie refused to believe it, and sat by the bedside, looking eagerly into her husband's colorless face, and trying to find some sign of hope—in vain. This very day he might die or live, and the doctor had said that she must prepare for the worst. It was impossible—she could not, she would not, believe that Ralph might die.

As she sat there the nurse entered and brought her a letter. Nellie looked at it indifferently. What did letters matter now? She took it in her trembling hands and tore it open wearily. As she read a sudden red flush sprang into her cheeks and a sharp light flashed into her eyes. She read on confusedly.

Mme. Lucille, the Professor wrote, was about to sing in the Albert Hall that night, and she, Nellie Underwood, was to take her place.

She looked at Ralph—ill, perhaps dying—on the bed, and then she turned back to the letter. Her chance had come at last—the chance that she had waited for so eagerly had come at last like a wonderful miracle, or else like a fiendish trick.

The manager regretted that Mme. Lucille had been taken very ill. He was extremely sorry, and he was angry, too, for Mme. Lucille's name on the bills had more than half filled the house, and now her place was to be taken by a little pale-faced girl, who looked hopelessly plain and unattractive.

The accompanist sat down and rattled off the opening bars of a famous old song. It was the cry of a woman for a lover she would never see again, and it was said that people thought it was worn out.

The accompanist played on; the notes became slower, and finally ceased, and then he waited.

Apparently Nellie had not heard. The music had fallen from her hands, and she was staring out with a white, set face at the crowded hall before her.

"Stage fright, poor thing," people murmured.

Some of them stared at her coldly; some of them put up their opera glasses to look at her; but they could not see what she saw—a man lying tossing, perhaps dying, on a bed; they could not feel what she felt, that terrible aching at her heart and that throbbing at her temples.

Suddenly the mist cleared from her eyes, and she saw, with a start, the waiting audience before her and the glasses leveled to her face, and she turned to the accompanist. He understood her glance, and commenced again.

Then she raised her eyes and stared straight toward the gallery. When she opened her lips, her voice rang out clear and full across the crowded hall. It never faltered; the notes fell from her lips liquid, wonderful, and the audience suddenly became still. They ceased to stare at her; opera glasses fell—it was strange that they had become dim—and in that great hall there was scarcely a sound to be heard.

The song went on. What was there in that old-fashioned air to hold them spellbound? A girl's fresh voice calling to her absent lover. They had never heard it sung like that before.

The eyes of beautiful women became moist; strong men leaned forward to hide their faces. They scarcely realized it when the music stopped; then they looked up to see her disappearing from the stage, and for a brief moment there was a dead silence.

Then the storm began. Artificial women forgot their artificiality; wearied men woke to life again, and shouted wildly at the platform.

Nellie heard it faintly at the back, but her only thought was to get away to Ralph, and while she was speeding homeward in a cab a man was making profuse apologies to the audience. He was sorry Mme. Lucille could not sing again that night, but he hoped and believed they would hear her again very soon.

When Nellie got home, the room seemed to her very dark. She saw distinctly two figures which came toward her as she entered, and then she heard a faint voice—Ralph's voice—speaking to her from the bed.

She heard neither the doctor's admonitions nor the nurse's entreaties. She only knew that her husband's side and sobbed her heart out on his pillow.

It was a long time before Ralph thoroughly recovered, but when he did there was no longer any fear of starvation staring them in the face.

Nellie's voice had driven the wolf from the door.—Answers.

SHIP ON FIRE AT SEA.

ADVENTURE ABOARD A SMALL BRITISH NORTH BORNEO SHIP.

Running for Safety in the China Sea With Fire in the Coal Bunkers—Only Half an Inch of Wooden Bottom Left on Arrival in Port.

It was August in Hong Kong; and as everybody knows, the worst month of the typhoon season. The "Fame," a small gun-boat, was lying at one of the buoys of Kowloon ready for sea. She had been built for the government of British North Borneo, and had just been equipped and fitted out by an officer sent over from there who was ordered by the governor to proceed back with her to Borneo with as little delay as possible, for the pirates who infest the coast were again causing trouble and she was urgently needed to suppress them.

So a scratch crew of Chinese sailors and firemen was engaged, a European engineer to take charge of her triple expansion engines, and a half-cast deck officer to assist the English officer in command to keep watch. Her bunkers were well stocked with coal, and coal was also stowed in bags in other parts of the ship, for precautionary measures, as well as to take the place of ballast. As she was only for use on the coast, to put down Malay pirates and convey government officers from one station to another, she was only built of wood with iron frames and beams and carried one quick firing gun.

On the 9th of August cable dispatches were received from Manilla that a typhoon was raging in the China sea. So giving it three days to blow itself out the captain decided to start on his voyage on the 15th, trusting to reach a safe latitude before the storm of typhoon was "brewed."

On reaching the open water outside Hong Kong she encountered a terrific sea, but the little craft behaved splendidly and after correcting the compass she started boldly across the China sea for Borneo. All went well until two o'clock the following morning, when the chief engineer reported that the coal in the port bunker was on fire.

Orders were at once given to close the stoke-hole doors on that side, and stifle, if possible, the fire for want of air. At seven bells in the forenoon, the fire was still reported burning, and furthermore, the star-board bunker was also on fire. The situation was getting serious. In the first place it seemed a pity to put back to Hong Kong, for the sea was getting smoother and the barometer showed no sign yet of another typhoon; and in a few days we would be out of their latitude; it was also necessary we should push on with all speed to Borneo, where the vessel was urgently needed. At the same time we had to consider the safety of the ship and the bunkers were not lined with iron. The fire was surely and slowly burning through the bottom of the ship. We only had two small boats barely sufficient to hold us all if we should be compelled to abandon the ship.

Finally it was decided to alter our course for Manilla, to close all stoke hole doors and bunker tops, and use coal from other parts of the ship. Holes were then cut in the decks immediately over the bunkers. The crew were employed drawing water constantly, and pouring it down these holes; to exclude the air, plugs were cut and fitted in these holes. One man would stand by the hole as water was brought and take out the plug, insert the funnel, pour in water, take out funnel and put in plug again. The work was tedious and exhausting, but we drew near Manilla. Two days, after two days, and nights of this, were becoming alarmingly hot. The boats were provisioned and breakers of water were placed in them to be ready if the bottom burnt out of the ship. Any moment the deck might fall in directly

THRILLING STOP OF A RUNAWAY TEAM.

The Twenty-third Capture Made by Brave Dennis Kane.

DANGER DIDN'T STOP HIM.

GRABBED HORSE'S BRIDLE AND WAS DRAGGED ALMOST A BLOCK

Team Attached to Beer Delivery Wagon of Mrs. Eugene Hoerster and Became Frightened at Central Avenue and Front Street—Stopped at City Hotel—Wagon Did Not Collide With Anything.

Those on Park avenue last Monday night about 8 o'clock witnessed a dashing runaway and a brilliant capture by Dennis Kane, who seems always to be on deck when there is a runaway horse to catch. The team belonged to Mrs. Eugene Hoerster, the Somerset street beer bottler, and were in charge of George Schudder.

Schudder was delivering beer at a house near Central avenue and West Front street, leaving the horses unhitched in front. Becoming restless they suddenly started off for home, and tore down Front street at a furious pace, turned into Park avenue, and were caught in front of the City Hotel.

The wagon did not collide with anything on the way down Front street, but in rounding the corner of Park avenue the left rear wheel struck the curb and was dished. Kane seized the off horse as they were turning the corner, but was dragged nearly a block before he succeeded in stopping the frightened horses. Officer Higgins came to Kane's assistance, but the animals were under control before he arrived.

Every one who saw the capture was loud in their praise of Kane's deed, as the act was a daring one, and the catch skillfully made. Dennis says that this makes the twenty-third runaway horse that he has caught, and he has never yet suffered any injury in doing it.

AN EXCITING RUNAWAY.

Horse Frightened by Trolley Car Plunged Into and Wrecked a Bicycle.

Last Monday shortly after 7 o'clock there was an exciting accident at the corner of Front and Somerset streets, when a horse being driven by William Ward, of Westfield, dashed across the curb, completely wrecked a new Crescent wheel owned by Fred Meeker, and almost upset Mr. Ward and his companion.

Mr. Ward drove through Park avenue and when he arrived at Front street car No. 3, of the Plainfield Street Railway Company, came along and frightened the horse. Mr. Ward immediately began striking the frightened animal with a whip. This caused the horse to madly plunge across the street.

An unknown milkman standing near caught the horse just in time to prevent still further damage. The wagon was damaged to some extent, but later in the evening the horse again became frightened at a trolley car on Somerset street, and this morning the wagon occupied by Mr. Ward and his companion was seen standing in a wrecked condition on the upper part of Somerset street. The occupants evidently secured another wagon to reach home.

Fred Meeker, the owner of the wrecked wheel, saw Mr. Ward, and the latter promised to stand the expense of having the cycle repaired, which will cost $10.

A BREATHING PLACE FOR THE POOR.

Westfield Fresh Air Camp Plan for the Summer's Work.

Westfield, April 25.—The executive committee of the Westfield Fresh Air Camp Association held a meeting last night in the W. C. T. U. rooms here, and talked over matters pertaining to the work of the camp for the coming summer.

Officers for the new year were elected as follows: President, Mr. Wolff; first vice-president, Arthur M. Pierson; second vice-president, Miss Florence G. Hawkins, of Plainfield; treasurer, Miss Love, and secretary, Miss Mahr.

Improvements costing about $75 are needed about the buildings, and it was voted to appropriate that sum. Miss Curry, matron of the camp for the past four years, gave a short talk during which she pointed her work, and there were also other talks by different ones present. Miss Curtis will still hold the position of matron for the coming year, and it is expected more work among the poor of New York will be done during this summer than at any time since the camp has been in operation.

A Congenial Party.

Miss Mary E. Martine, of "Cedar Brook," has received a postal from one of the Honeyman party dated Jerusalem, April 33, in which the writer says: "The party is a most congenial one, and all are having a delightful trip."

SOME NEW DRINKS.

WHAT SOME OF OUR NEW LANDS PRODUCE.

Strange Concoctions Which Soothe the Nerves of Hardened Topers—Others that Don't—The Porto Rican Cocktail—Hawaiian Nerve Destroyer.

With the annexation of new territory by the United States the nimble fingered dispenser of liquid refreshments finds it incumbent upon him to extend his repertoire, while the devote of Bacchus has thrust upon him newl and strangely compounded assuagers of the demon Thirst. From Cuba, from Porto Rico, from the Philippines an from the Sandwich Islands come liquid fancies—some native, some invented by residents of more extensive experience, but one and all different from the flips and coolers and cocktails daisies and sours and mashes of our native land.

First of all must be considered pi mento that fragrant stimulant with end less possibilities known as well it Cuba. A glass well filled with ice, a lime well squeezed, a dash of pimento dram, a spray of seltzer or club soda and there you have it—a delightful and yet have a fizz which many think better by far than one of gin or whiskey.

Molasses or brown sugar takes the place of syrup in the drinks of Porto Rico and Hawaii, and they give a peculiar flavor much liked by the natives, but which is not always appreciated by others. In any of the recipes given gum may be substituted for molasses if desired, although in some cases it is the latter which gives the distinctive flavor.

Another tropical cocktail has for its base one-third part of vanilla cordial To this are added two-thirds brandy and a dash of pimento dram. The oil from a bit of lemon rind adds zest to the drink, which is squeezed upon the top after stirring.

Rice wine is not unknown here, although in no great demand. Mulled it is quite a favorite in the Philippines Very much as in Japan its intoxicating effects are fully appreciated A gun barrel is generally used by the natives in preparing the mulled potion, a superstition prevailing that the drink thus compounded absorbs some of the peculiarly effective fighting qualities of the gun and gives strength accordingly.

More deadly than rice wine is barley ale. Old and experienced drinkers have been brought to grief by a couple of glasses of this palatable beverage. It is sometimes mixed with lemon juice to deaden the effects, but for the average American the fascinating flavor is destroyed by such treatment.

Sandwich Islanders are extremely fond of cocoanut milk, but the American and European palate requires to improve on the natural liquor by adding a liberal dash of brandy and shaking the whole with ice.

Samoans have a fermented drink made from awa root, which, however, is not popular with whites who have once experienced its effects. According to report, one glass is sufficient to put the average man under the table, while three or four glasses have been known to put seasoned drinkers in bed for a week.

A favorite cocktail in Havana is made of one-quarter curacoa, one-quarter maraschino, one-half brandy, a few drops of lemon juice and a dash of quino bitters. The mixture is well stirred with ice and strained into thin glasses.

Curacoa and maraschino in equal quantities is a favorite cordial. It is served alone or with a dash of quino bitters on the top. These bitters are much used in the West Indies in all drinks. They are a pleasant stimulant and excellent stomach tonic. They are made from the bark of a tree resembling cinchona.

Guirdlee is made in some parts of the Sandwich Islands. It is prepared from sugar cane. The cane is chopped into pieces an inch or so in length and placed in a trough exposed to the sun. Water is added from time to time as fermentation progresses. When this has reached the proper stage the mass is distilled over a slow fire.

To import new sensations to a hardened palate a moderate use of mequnao is recommended, but long continued use of this tipple results in the complete shattering of the nervous system. The manufacture of mequnao is carried on principally in Honolulu. Native coffee is first roasted and crushed, then mixed with an equal part by weight of molasses and water. The mass is allowed to ferment and the wine is then distilled.

For "long" drinks residents of the Philippines have compounded two delicious beverages which vie with one another for preference in the popular taste. Both are new to New Yorkers, although the ingredients are readily obtainable here. The foundation of one consists of cinnamon, cloves and nutmeg, with strips of orange and lemon peal, the juice of an orange and lemon, three ponies of brandy, one pony of rum and a like quantity of cointreaux. These ingredients should be placed in an earthen bowl for two hours, after which the liquor may be drawn off, iced and served.

The other "long" drink is made by taking equal parts of all the fruits available—limes, lemons, oranges, bananas, pineapples, pears, peaches, grapes, figs, cocoanuts, and berries. These are crushed together in an earthen mortar, water is added and the whole is boiled for twenty minutes. After being allowed to cool and settle the clear liquor is drawn off. To every quart of liquor add two ponies of brandy, one pony of curacao, one pony maraschino, and one-half pony of rum. Mix thoroughly, strain and bottle for future use. Serve with cracked ice.

REPORT IS SET ASIDE.

WESTFIELD AVENUE IMPROVEMENTS RECEIVED A BLACK EYE.

Judge VanSyckel Decides That Awards Were Not Equitably Adjusted and Whole Ground Will Have to be Gone Over Again

Elizabeth, April 25.—The Westfield avenue trolley scheme got another black eye yesterday when Justice VanSyckel set aside the report of the commissioners.

Justice VanSyckel said that the awards were not equitably adjusted as one of the commissioners admitted that he was influenced by the benefits which he thought a trolley along Westfield avenue would confer upon the property-holders along the line.

The whole ground will have to be gone over again by the commissioners.

It is currently believed now that unless the City Council and Senator Kean come to some amicable agreement on the question of fares the trolley on Westfield boulevard will never be realized and the Elker-Gaddis-Hine trolley will have no opposition.

NEW SCHOOL IS READY.

MOUNTAIN AVENUE INSTITUTION TO OPEN THIS WEEK.

Two of the Lower Classes to be Transferred to it on Thursday and by Next Week Entire Change Will be Made.

There was a meeting of the Borough Board of Education last Monday, at which time it was announced and decided to open the new public school on Mountain avenue this week. On Thursday two of the lower classes from the school on Somerset street will be located in the new school and it is hoped by next week that the entire change may be effected.

There still remains a few finishing touches to complete the school, but nothing that will interfere with carrying on school. Eventually all the younger scholars will be transferred to the new school.

The only other important matter considered by the Board was the appointment of W. W. Bowley as taker of the school census. He will commence his work at an early date. The Board paid the usual budget of bills presented, after which they adjourned.

TIN WEDDING AND WHIST

JOLLY WHISTERS ENJOYED A FINE NIGHT OF IT.

Were the Guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hiram A. Woodruff, Who Celebrated Their Tenth Wedding Anniversary

To close the season the "Jolly Whist Club" had its final gathering last Monday at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Hiram A. Woodruff on Woodruff avenue. The occasion being also the tenth anniversary of the wedding of the host and hostess, a few of their immediate neighbors were invited to participate and a most enjoyable time was spent by all. Whist was played in the early evening, followed by dancing and refreshments, the music being furnished by Rogers.

Ten years of married life being generally termed the tin wedding, each of the members and guests came armed with some article of the bright metal. As a consequence the household linware has been considerably increased with many useful articles.

The club also presented a handsome card table as an extra appreciation of their respect for their genial hosts. A most unique, as well as appropriate gift among the many was a tin corsage bouquet for the hostess and a tin boutonniere for the host.

Those participating were Mr. and Mrs. Murray Burtis, Mr. and Mrs. Woolston, Mr. and Mrs. Buckle, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert S. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest A. Lowe, Postmaster and Mrs. Bird, Mr. and Mrs. Van Winkle, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Homan, Mr. and Mrs. Tolles, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Emmons, Mr. and Mrs. John Emmons.

Exchanged Pulpits.

Rev. Mr. Runkle, of Elizabethport, exchanged pulpits with Rev. C. E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, all day Sunday, and delivered two powerful sermons to good-sized congregations. His morning theme was "Two Men"—the first man Adam and the the second man Christ. In the evening his subject was "The Antonement."

INSECTS IN CUBA.

MEN BATTLED FOR A WHOLE DAY WITH THEM.

Venomous Spiders Make Their Homes on Fruit Steamers—Don't Go Looking for an Angry Tarantula—Help Comes to the Rescue.

Joseph Mabry, who has papers to show that he was a member of a Georgia company during the Spanish war and that he was in Cuba, tells this story:

"I joined a company of Georgia volunteers and went off to camp. We did not get to go to the front, and after the protocol was signed I and a friend of mine from Kentucky decided that if we could get over to Havana we would probably be able to get in on the ground floor. We got our discharge and we went to the coast, taking a boat for Havana. We were our army uniforms, and as soon as we reached Havana we were told that we must leave. We were laboring under a grave mistake, thinking that the United States had some authority there in the fall before the peace treaty was signed. We were put under a guard and ordered to leave on the first boat, as our presence in Havana might be dangerous to the peace and safety of the community.

"A British boat touched at Havana, bound for New Orleans with a load of tropical fruits. We managed to get passage on the boat and were refused point blank, as the boat did not carry passengers. Our guards gave us to understand, as we thought, that we must leave or go to jail. We decided to leave. Before the boat sailed we managed to slip aboard by bribing a couple of sailors. We were told that we could climb into the bins where bananas were stored and that the sail would be a short one to New Orleans. The sailors promised to smuggle food to us on the journey, and they fastened us up in the bins of bananas, closing the hatchway. We turned in on a pile of straw and slept soundly till nearly morning of the following day, when I was awakened by my friend calling to me.

"'What is that?' I heard him ask.

"The light was dim, and I could barely see the outline of his form near me.

"'I do not see anything,' I replied.

"'I thought you were tickling me with a bundle of straw,' said he.

"'I did not wake till you called to me,' was my reply.

"'I guess it was a rat,' said he, and we both dozed off.

"Shortly afterward I was awakened by a shriek from my friend. He had jumped up and was staying at a black, fuzzy object in the straw. I recognized it at once as a tarantula. The light was not good, but that much was plain. Soon it was joined by another, and in a few hours we were surrounded with tarantulas on every side. The big spiders regarded us as intruders, for they seemed to be attacking us. We stamped on them, killing many, and fought them with all our might.

"Did you ever see an angry tarantula? If you never did, don't go looking for one, and if you find one, don't look for a hundred. I suppose it is no exaggeration to say that we were faced by hundreds of these angry insects. They spring like rats or frogs, and all of a sudden a black object would come whirling through the air, and as the chances out of ten, it would strike some unguarded spot and inject its venom. I was bitten in half a dozen places on the face, and as many more on the hands and arms, and the insects would creep up the legs of our pantaloons to bite us. Both of us were horribly bitten all over our persons.

"The fight with the insects lasted all day long, and though we were both strong, sound men, when we went on the boat, by evening we were almost too exhausted to stand up. We called for help, we shrieked, yelled and cried, and no help came. We were faint for want of food and dying from thirst. It was a day of horror for both of us. Our wounds were swelling and our throats were parching for water. After continuing to fight the tarantulas and shrieking for help, we finally attracted attention, and some of the sailors came to our rescue. Whether it was the sailors we had bribed who came to us or whether it was some one attracted by our cries I don't know. I was then in delirium and my eyes were swollen closed."—New York World.

Famous War Horses.

Horses in war suffer more fatalities than men. Out of the many thousand who perish in their duty toward their masters, only a few return home to spend their lives in the ease and honor they deserve. One war horse, however, which made a splendid record for himself, and now has his virtues, name and noble deeds engraved on a fitting tombstone, was Copenhagen, the horse the great Duke of Wellington rode at the battle of Waterloo.

Nine years after the Emperor Napoleon died at St. Helena an old white horse, covered with old age and pneumonia in England. The skeleton of the animal is set up in the Royal United Service Institution, and to all visitors it is pointed out as Marengo, the charger Napoleon rode at the battle of Waterloo. Marengo came originally from Egypt, and was left to wander on the dismal battlefield when the emperor was forced to fly for his life. An English officer found and took him, and he was sold to a general in the British army. In English pastures, cared for by kindly grooms, this noble horse passed the latter years of his life far more peacefully and happily than his great and unfortunate master.

LAYING OF SIDEWALKS.

POWER THAT IS INVESTED IN THE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

Present Ordinance Has Been in Operation Since 1894 and Makes it Legal for the Council to Act as it Has Been Doing.

Last week under the caption of "Was the Ordinance Illegal?" the News published a half-column story in which it tried to prove that all action concerning the compulsory laying of sidewalks in the borough, and the effecting of a lein, where the property-owner failed to comply, was illegal. They claimed that competent authorities have made a study of the subject and are of the opinion that the borough officials have no right to compel anyone to lay a sidewalk. The article further stated that legal authorities claim that this procedure is an injustice of the most flagrant sort, and the officials have acted directly contrary to law.

In view of these statements a representative of The Daily Press has been making an investigation of facts, and learned that on February 2, 1894, under the administration of William L. Saunders, who was then Mayor, the sidewalk ordinance was adopted, and has been in use ever since. Since that time there has been no changes made to the ordinance, which evidently complies with the State law. It now seems as though it is a pretty late day to learn that the ordinance is illegal.

The Press representative interviewed a member of the present Borough Council on the subject, and the following statement was obtained:

"There seems to be a notion among some of the people of the borough that any law or ordinance which in any way affects them must necessarily be illegal. The existing ordinance relative to the laying of sidewalks was enacted February 24, 1894, during the administration of Mayor Saunders, and while Mr. Reed was counsel for the borough. There is no doubt in my mind that the action of the last two administrations in laying sidewalks under that ordinance is perfectly legal, and I doubt if any intelligent person seriously questions this, even the chronic compromisers. Every one will concede that we have for corporation counsel a man second to none in the State, as authority on borough laws. No borough ordinance would be passed by any Mayor or Council unless first referred to him to be drafted in accordance with their legal rights under the State laws. I am perfectly willing to back our corporation counsel against any unknown competent authority in position to know, 'Bombeshells' and all. We are not unlike other similar places known in having this opposition to all attempts at progress."

MISS BULKLEY IN TOWN.

VISITED SEVERAL OF THE PLAINFIELD SCHOOLS TODAY.

Is on a Three Months' Vacation From Her Duties at Chicago—A Guest at Home of H. D. James—Addressed Rasores Club.

Miss Julia E. Bulkley is spending a few days in Plainfield and revisited the scenes of her former labors. Most every Plainfielder knows that she was once superintendent of the Public Schools in this city and is now at the head of the department of pedagogy of the University of Chicago. Miss Bulkley is now enjoying a well earned vacation of three months. Part of it she will spend in visiting old friends and the remainder in literary pursuits.

Miss Bulkley arrived in Plainfield Saturday night and is a guest at the home of Henry D. James, of First place. Last evening there was a gathering of her Plainfield friends there who came to meet her again.

Last Tuesday, Miss Bulkley went to the High School and was present at the morning exercises and listened to the regular singing lesson, led by Charles L. Lewis. She then spoke a few words to the pupils. Afterwards, Superintendent H. M. Maxson escorted her to the Lincoln school where she spoke highly of the new building.

She attended the meeting of the Rasores Club, at the home of Miss Haviland, of East Second street, later in the morning and addressed the members.

A VERY GREAT ELECTION.

Y. M. C. A. Debaters Discuss Anglo-American Alliance.

The Y. M. C. A. Literary Society attempted to settle the question of an Anglo-American alliance last Monday. The debate was on the question, "Resolved, that an Anglo-American alliance would be advantageous to the United States." The speakers for the affirmative side were Thomas A. Cuming and Henry Eggerding. C. S. Rogers and N. D. Drake were for the negative. Owing to the few points advanced by both sides the debate was not decided.

The programme also included readings by C. W. Sprague and R. W. Davis and an essay by George Weeks Sandford, the president. Two new members were elected and one application for membership was received.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a member M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of a friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the born fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but as that time others began to be beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the News, I decided to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and think I made a saving of $3 a call.

A dollar's worth of R·I·P·A·N·S lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if they were $1 per dollar." At the time of this interview there were present ten dealers who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which would bear her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I can scarcely take any liberty in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the talking about my case in the papers enables a single sufferer to obtain relief I intend to be as greatly benefited as I have been. I see no objection." The dealers, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

ALFRED SPEER,
THE ORIGINAL
Port Grape Wine Producer in America,

The grape wines made and sold and used in San Francisco and Sacramento was from Speer's Passaic, N. J., vineyards, was shipped around Cape Horn before there was any railroad to California, and are now being used by physicians and first families there as the richest and best wine to be had

The juice of the Portugal Port Wine grape grown in N. J. is thick and rich same as the juice of pears and other fruits grown here. From California pears you can squeeze water as from a sponge; so with all fruits grown in California; while those grown in New Jersey are solid in substance—less juice but thick and richer. The New Jersey apples, for instance, make a cider that was always popular the world over. If you want a wine for sickness or for entertainments don't take cheap, watery wines but choose a first class old, full bodied, high grade wine from Speer's Passaic vineyards. Sold by Druggists.

BOROUGH MAY HAVE TWO FIRE DISTRICTS

Important Measure Discussed by Warren Engine Company.

WOULD MAKE EASIER WORK

SECOND ALARM COULD BE SENT IF FIRE WAS SERIOUS.

By Having Districts It Would Not be Necessary for All the Companies to Turn Out Unless the Fire was a Bad One—Officers Chosen by Warren Engine Company and West End Hose Company.

The annual meeting of Warren Engine Company was held last Tuesday, at which time officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: Foreman, Walter Bennett; secretary, J. J. Stahl; financial secretary, David Bodine; treasurer, Jacob Higgins; assistant engineer, P. Koelleger; second assistant engineer, William Newman; stoker, Raymond Schenck; representative to Firemen's Relief Association, David Bodine.

The members of West End Hose Company have also elected the following officers: Foreman, John Higgins; first assistant, Frank Perry; second assistant, William Pasch; corresponding secretary, Frank Perry; financial secretary, George Kleiner; treasurer, Herman Hansen; representative to Firemen's Relief Association, three years, William Demarest.

An important measure discussed at the meeting of Warren Engine Company last Tuesday was that of setting the borough off in fire districts, so that each company could answer certain alarms. It was agreed that it is not necessary for both companies to turn out on every alarm, but if two companies are needed a second alarm can be given. This fact was evidenced last evening when the members of Warren Engine Company responded to the alarm for the fire in Prideville, and they were not needed. It is believed that a change will be made in a short time.

After the meeting last Tuesday the members and guests from West End Hose Company adjourned to the Crescent Hotel, where a bountiful spread was served under the direction of the good and welfare committee.

OFF TO MANILA.

John Kennedy Joins the Regular Army and Goes to the Philippines.

John Kennedy, formerly a hackman at the North Avenue Station, left Tuesday for the Philippine Island as a member of the Fifteenth U. S. Infantry regulars. Mr. Kennedy's enlistment was on a wager and considered a joke. He met his cousin, Joseph Mawry, of Newark, recently and in a joking way the latter wanted to bet Mr. Kennedy that he did not dare enlist and go to Manila. This somewhat nettled his bravery and he accepted the wager. He then went to New York, was examined and passed. His cousin, who had also accepted a wager that he dare not go, failed to pass. Rather than show any cowardice Mr. Kennedy accepted the inevitable and yesterday he started away with his regiment.

FIREMEN'S FRIENDS WIN

Commissioners Who Opposed Department Appropriation Defeated.

Somerville, May 3—In the election of a Board of Commissioners for Somerville the largest vote was cast in the history of the town. The ticket nominated in the interest of the volunteer firemen was elected by a majority of over 300. All the commissioners who have opposed the appropriations asked by the firemen were defeated, either at the primary or at the election.

The fight made against former Speaker of the Assembly James J. Bergen by former Congressman Alvah A. Clark received very little support, as Mr. Bergen was only about 20 votes behind the rest of the ticket. The following will compose the new board: James J. Bergen, W. H. Taylor, John Gernert, John Hardgrove, John H. Lord, John B. Osborn and A. G. Anderson.

A Chalk Talk.

KEAN ACCEPTS TERMS.

HE WILL BUILD TROLLEY FROM ELIZABETH TO CRANFORD.

The Fare From Elizabethport Will be Eight Cents Until 1905 and After That it Will be Five Cent Fare.

Elizabeth, May 3—Senator John Kean will accept the ordinance as passed at midnight Monday night by the Elizabeth City Council, and will begin as soon as possible the construction of a trolley road from Elizabethport to Cranford station.

The ordinance, as finally passed, does not take away the perpetual clause in the franchise, but stipulates that the trolley company shall carry passengers from Staten Island Sound to the Lehigh Valley Railroad bridge over Westfield avenue in Union township for five cents each way, and from that point to Cranford and Westfield stations of the Jersey Central, and to the dividing line between Fanwood and Westfield, the fare shall be three cents more. The trolley company agrees to carry school children for a three cent fare.

In 1905 the fare over the entire route is to be five cents. It is said here today that Senator Kean will accept these terms, as they are the best he can get from Elizabeth's Council.

PICTORIAL VIEW OF THE WAR.

Interesting Scenes to be Shown in Aid of Soldiers' Monument Fund.

"The New Jersey Naval Reserve in the Spanish-American War," will be the subject of the illustrated lecture to be given next Saturday evening in the Camera Club rooms for the benefit of the soldiers' monument. It will be given by M. S. Simpson, and is probably one of the most complete illustrations of the work of the Navy in the Atlantic waters. It will depict the work of the Reserves aboard the auxiliary cruisers "Badger" and "Resolute," from the northern boundary of the United States to Santiago, the Navy, the blockade, the Cervera fight, Santiago, Havana, the fight of the marines at Guantanamo and the return north. These slides were made for a historical purpose, and public exhibition will not be given through out the country. Almost all of them will be shown for the first time on Saturday evening, and probably no other chance will be given to see them in this city. These pictures also show the part that the Plainfield contingent of the Reserves took in the war, and scenes on the coast of Maine, at Key West, Nuevitas, Dry Tortugas, Porto Rico, Camp Wyckoff, Boston, Brooklyn and League Island Navy Yards. Only two hundred and fifty tickets have been printed for the lecture and they can be purchased of any member of the soldiers' monument committee, Dr. Simpson, J. Harvey Doane, and at the drug stores of J. H. Leggett, A. D. Mallison, L. W. Randolph and T. S. Armstrong. Those desiring tickets should purchase them at once.

The Dangerous Dips.

The accident that occurred to the hook and ladder truck Monday afternoon, is one that may be expected anytime where sharp dips are made in the roadway. The drivers of the fire department apparatus always slow up for them but they are dangerous places, nevertheless, to wheelmen as well as vehicles.

To Decide About Building.

This evening there will be an important meeting of the Saengerbunds, at which time it will be decided whether an addition will be made to the present building.

NAMES OF GRAND JURORS

THEY WILL HAVE BUT LITTLE TO CONSIDER AT THIS TERM.

Justice VanSyckel Made a Very Brief Charge—Quick Work Made in Returning an Indictment Against One Man.

Elizabeth, May 3—At the May term of the Union County Court the number of civil cases on the calendar is large, but several of them may be put off for the term. The criminal cases are few, there being only seven prisoners in the county jail, whose cases are to be passed upon. Nearly all these are larceny or assault and battery cases. Justice VanSyckel in his charge only referred to the case of Sophie Mary Meyer, of Newark, who is held for an alleged criminal operation.

Following are the Grand Jurors for the term: Elizabeth—Mayor William A. M. Mack, John W. Whelan, Albert D. Keys, Lewis W. Kingsley, William Edelstein, Frederick Bender, Jr., James J. Potts, Jr., Augustus G. Doyle, Henry C. Woodruff, Rahway—John Crowell, Nathan Compton, Charles E. Reed, Plainfield—Henry G Runkle, William R. Cock, DeWitt C. Ivins, Charles E. Brooks, William A. Resolutions Adopted Expressing Appreciation of Valuable Gifts.

A meeting of the Board of Directors of the Public Library was held last Tuesday. There were present Director M. W. Tyler, J. B. Dumont, Rowland Cox, J. Evarts Tracy and Wm. M. Stillman.

The following resolution was passed: Resolved, that the Board of Directors hereby give expression to their high appreciation of the courtesy and kindness of General N. Bolet-Peraza in presenting to the library the full report of the Inter-continental railway commission in four large quarto volumes profusely illustrated with views of Central and South America, together with three portfolios containing topographical maps and profiles, and that the Secretary be directed to transmit to Gen. N. Bolet-Peraza a copy of this resolution.

The motion was made and carried that the secretary acknowledge the receipt of the year book of the Holland Society of New York for 1896-97 and '98 from Dr. DeWitt C. Romaine, of New York city, and express the thanks of the Board to him for the same.

It was moved and carried that the sum of $1,000 be appropriated from the Babcock fund for the purchase of books for the Babcock scientific library.

The librarian's report for April was read, approved and ordered on file.

LIGHTNING STRUCK FIRE HEADQUARTERS.

Heavy Thunder Storm Ends the Hot Wave.

OTHER DAMAGE WAS DONE.

FIRE ALARM WHISTLE WAS TEMPORARILY DISABLED.

Bolt Knocked Off Masonry on Corner of Hose Tower at Fire Department Headquarters—Two Trees in the First Ward Splintered by Lightning—Storm Preceded by Great Clouds of Dust that Hid the City.

The first hot wave of the season broke up Tuesday with a series of thunder storms that swept through this section, accompanied by a vivid electrical display and high winds. They brought with them, however, the much needed rains and for the time being drenched the parched ground and gave the spring vegetation a great boost. The lightning was of an unusually severe character and struck in several places in city and borough with varying damage.

At five o'clock great banks of clouds could be seen gathering along the mountain and slowly moving eastward. The clouds were black and threatening while the accompanying wind heaped up the grey dust clouds in front. Faint flashes of lightning and the distant rumble of the thunder told of a coming storm.

The first storm passed to the north of Plainfield but was felt in Fanwood, Westfield and all towns to the shores of Newark Bay. It was followed by a second that grew very threatening at six o'clock. The copper-colored clouds suggested a young tornado. The wind rose rapidly and whirled the dust into the air until a great cloud of it overhung the city, hiding it from view.

The lightning was sharp and fierce while the thunder crackled and roared almost continuously.

The men on duty at the fire department headquarters on East Second street were watching the storm when there came a blinding flash, a terrific explosion and great noises on the roof above them. Each man looked about to see if his comrades had survived. Finding that they had the firemen investigated and found that the lightning had struck the north-east corner of the hose-tower, shattering the brickwork and scattered the masonry over the roof and the surrounding yards. Some of the bricks were thrown a distance of over a hundred feet. The falling masonry crashed through the roof and the downpour that followed soon flooded the Chief's office and the old No. 2 Engine Company room on the second floor.

At the same time, the employes at the power house of the Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company on Madison avenue, were startled by the sound of an explosion. The lightning had followed the wires from the headquarters and burned out the coil to the great fire alarm whistle. The whistle sounded one blast as if in distress and was quiet thereafter. Later in the evening, Charles W. Bunyon, manager of the telephone company, and Assistant Chief Jennings removed the coil and repaired the damage.

A tree that towers up from the side yard to Abram Vail's home, 322 East Third street, was split and torn by a bolt of lightning. The occupants of the house were nearly stunned by the shock.

Another bolt struck a tall evergreen tree in the rear of the residence of Mrs. Margaret A. Meeker, 103 Watchung avenue, and stripped off the bark and cut a deep groove almost its entire length.

The lines of the Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company did not suffer very severely from the storm. The lights in one circuit in Washington Park were extinguished for most of the evening. No wires were blown down, but there were several burnt out.

The damage done to the local exchange of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company was scattered. Several of the telephones were burned out, but the damage was speedily repaired.

One car on the main line of the Plainfield Street Railway was disabled by the storm, the motor being burned out. That was the only damage received. The cars were somewhat delayed by the high winds and heavy downpour.

A tree in the yard of Charles Remsen on East Third street was also struck by lightning and badly splintered.

Last Tuesday during the storm lightning struck a small barn on the property occupied by James Coddington

NOT AGAINST CATHOLICS

REV. C. E. HERRING REPORTED WRONG IN THE NEWS.

He Compared the Presbyterians With the Episcopal and Baptist Denominations and Not Against Catholics.

Rev. C. E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, takes exception to the report of his sermon of Sunday evening published in the News. Mr. Herring says that the account made him say things that he did not utter regarding Catholicism.

He spoke on three points on Presbyterianism. The first point was that regarding the Old and New Testament showing upon what the denomination was founded. The second point showed the sovereignty of God and the perseverance of the saints, and the third point showed that it was not the Pilgrim Fathers, nor the Dutch of New York, but the Irish Presbyterians of North Carolina that stood out for the suppression of English rule and denounced it.

In general Mr. Herring compared his denomination chiefly with the Episcopal and Baptist denominations, and said that while people generally understood what the last two denominations stood for, they did not always know much about Presbyterian denomination. His remarks were in no sense of an antagonistic nature to the Catholics, as the News would have it appear.

BUGGY WAS UPSET.

Thrilling Experience of Two Women With a Horse Frightened at Bicycles.

Four bicycles stacked on East Front street near the "Gables" Tuesday afternoon, frightened the horse attached to a buggy occupied by Mrs. Robertson and a friend from Fanwood. The horse shied across the road and into the ditch on the opposite side of the street, upsetting the buggy and throwing the two ladies out. The buggy was dragged into a tree where it was wrecked. The horse then ran in the direction of Plainfield and was caught at Johnston avenue.

Neither Mrs. Robertson nor her companion were injured although thrown from the carriage while the horse was going at full speed.

FOR KILLING HER CHILD

COUNTRY GIRL ARRESTED FOR THROWING HER BABY AWAY.

Luella Fleming Acknowledges Throwing Infant Baby Into an Outhouse—An Inquest to Look Into the Facts

Bernardsville, May 3—A case of infanticide was brought to light here Monday, and as a result Luella, the 20 year-old daughter of Richard Fleming, a farmer living on the road to Liberty Corner, is under arrest charged with the murder of her newborn infant boy. The Fleming girl has been in the employ of her brother-in-law, Charles Dunster, for some time past.

The girl finally acknowledged that she was a mother and that she had thrown her babe in an out-house where it was subsequently found. County Physician Wagoner, of Somerville, was notified, and pronounced it five born. Word was also sent to County Prose*cutor Dungan, who ordered the arrest.* An inquest will be held.

STORM KEPT MANY AWAY.

Last of Members' Nights at Park Club Not a Great Success.

The plans of the house committee of the Park Club and the weather didn't agree. Consequently, the last of the members' nights, which have proved such an enjoyable feature in the social life of the club this season, was not as largely attended as was anticipated. It was held Tuesday evening But the thunder storm managed to keep many away. Those who did attend spent a very pleasant evening however.

A library social was the attraction of the evening, arranged under the direction of Mrs. S. St. John McCutchen and Mrs. Charles A. Reed. The members and guest represented various well known books and the others were asked to guess their identity. Mrs. W. E. Lowe and Mrs. Alexander Gilbert were the most successful among the ladies, guessing the same number. They drew lots for first prize and Mrs. Gilbert won. Dr. F. C. Ard and Howard Fleming also tied for first prize in the other sex. Dr. Ard winning the cut for the place.

Refreshments were served during the evening in which Mrs. McCutchen and Mrs. Reed were assisted by Mrs. Samuel Townsend and Mrs. J. H. Howell.

BOTH SAY THEY ARE INNOCENT.

VanHorn and VanNest to Have a Hearing on Charge of Robbery.

The two young men, William VanHorn and Frank VanNest, who are charged with grand larceny by Harry B. Dennis, were arrested Tuesday afternoon and locked up. VanNest secured a bondsman in the person of U. B. Crane, but no one would go on VanHorn's bond, so he was left in his cell all night. The two had a hearing before Justice Mosher yesterday at 2 o'clock.

Constable Gettleson was given the warrants to serve, and had no difficulty in locating the boys. VanHorn was found at his home, and so was VanNest. They both protested their innocence, and secured lawyers to defend them.

Not This William.

The William VanHorn accused of drugging and robbing Harry Dennis is not the young man of that name employed by the Metropolitan Insurance Company. The latter's name has been connected with the offense by many who did not know that there are two William VanHorns in the city. The innocent William is greatly concerned lest people may unwittingly accuse him of the crime, and this item is made to relieve the minds of Press readers of a wrong impression.

FIRE BROKE OUT AGAIN.

Flames Still Cause Trouble in Baled Hay at Cedrow' Mill.

Despite the soaking the firemen gave A. L. Cadmus' barn Monday afternoon, and the severe drenching by the shower Tuesday, Michael J. McCarthy, who was on duty there was kept busy during the night putting out incipient blazes. The hay stored in the barn was packed so tightly that the water could not soak in, and consequently the fire was not out, although there were no signs of it when the firemen left.

The first fire broke out soon after 11 o'clock. McCarthy saw it and tried to extinguish it with buckets of water. He was not successful in this so he telephoned for Acting Chief Jennings and turned on the hose, four lengths of which had been left attached to a hydrant for just such an emergency.

The flames were soon out, but at 1 o'clock and again at 4 the soaking had to be repeated.

FOR PRESERVATION OF THE PALISADES.

Members of Newly-Appointed Commission Discuss Plans.

LEGAL RIGHTS UNDECIDED.

WOMEN ARE GREATLY INTERESTED IN THE PROJECT.

Commissioner Hopkins Thinks That it Will Not Be Hard to Form a Plan That Will Be Practicable and Equitable for the Grand Monuments of Nature—State Park May Be Devised.

Jersey City, May 3—Miss Cecelia Gaines, who is president of the State Legal Aid Association, and who has been appointed a member of the Palisades Commission by Gov. Voorhees, says that the appointment was very acceptable to her, as she had been the one to suggest to the Governor that he give the views of New Jersey representation on the commission.

"I am unable to tell you what the commission proposes to do," said Miss Gaines, "as I do not know what plans the other members have. We were appointed to ascertain what steps could be taken to preserve the Palisades. It will be necessary to consult legal authority first of all to learn our rights.

"Then we will have to find out the extent of property owned by individuals on the face of the Palisades, the value of it and the damage already done by quarrymen. I have sent an album to the Governor filled with photographs, showing how the noble beauty of the Palisades has been shamefully defaced. The views were taken last year, when an inspection of the Palisades was made from a boat by the old commission and representatives of the organizations interested in the preservation of the Palisades.

"I am deeply interested in this question. At the last convention of the National Federation of Women's Club, held in Denver, I was invited to address them on the preservation of the Palisades. I did so and the address received great attention. The women of the country, from Texas to Maine, are interested in the Palisades. The delegates at that convention represented 500,000 women, all of whom I am sure would sign a petition to Governor Voorhees and the State Legislature, if it were necessary to preserve the Palisades."

Miss Elizabeth B. Vermilye, of Englewood, is the other woman member of the commission. She is the daughter of Rev. Dr. A. G. Vermilye, a retired minister of the Presbyterian church. Miss Vermilye was one of those who most strongly urged the appointment of the commission.

The members of the commission are William A. Linn, of Hackensack, managing editor of the New York Evening Post; Dr. W. McClure, of Edgewater, and Francis W. Hopkins, of Aldene. In speaking of the work of the commission Mr. Hopkins said:

"I believe we can accomplish what we desire so earnestly, namely, the formulation of a practical, equitable plan for the preservation of the grand monuments of nature. I have travelled a good deal around the world and I never could find anything to equal them in beauty. Even today, disfigured as they are in several points, they are unsurpassed. It is evidently the purpose of the Legislature of New Jersey and of Governor Voorhees himself to take the necessary steps for their rescue without further delay."

The plan will, in all probability, be to create a State park, taking in all the water front up to the State line and extending back over the plateau.

AND NOW IT'S THE FENCE.

Trouble Between Borough Neighbors Assumes a New Phase.

The chicken case in which Louis C. VanNest and Marshal Frank Whitely, of the borough, are the interested parties, will come up for trial this afternoon at 2 o'clock before Justice Smalley. There is likely to be more trouble between these neighbors, as the boundary fence, the absence of which is causing all the trouble, is said to be out of its place and too far over on Whitely's ground.

J. P. D. Kloch represents the plaintiff, and Codington & Swackhamer the defendant. The latter's lawyers have notified the plaintiff to put up the fence on the old line, or else they threaten trouble for him.

Work Does Not Stop Instructions.

There is yet some work to be done at the Watchung School building in the borough, but this does not interfere with the holding of school. The six classes now attending the school are getting along in a satisfactory manner.

CARING FOR SHEEP.

Sheep Will Never Thrive if They Are Too Closely Confined, Even in Winter.

The sheep never does well when closely confined, even in winter. Its fleece protects it from cold, and it needs rather shelter from rains than anything else. So long as snow remains above the freezing temperature its presence can be had at no actual cost of wool, which is one of the best non-conductors in the world, only furnishes additional protection against cold. In fact, sheep have often been found under snowbanks, and if they are provided with food and water they can remain cooped up in this confined position without any apparent discomfort. Usually, however, when sheep are snowed in, though they may have food, there will be no water in reach except that in the form of snow and ice. To eat either of these to secure water occasions always a most intolerable thirst. Snow especially is so full of air and has so little water that what water it does supply is quickly evaporated and the animal is more thirsty than before.

When sheep are pastured they will always select for their retiring places the highest and driest part of the field, not, perhaps, as has been supposed, from hereditary instinct, to escape enemies by night, but because of the pure air which such places afford. If a part of the field is wet and the ground is soft, there are doubtless unhealthy exhalations from it, which the instinct of the sheep teaches it to avoid. In doing this and keeping on high and dry land they are thus less liable to the calamity that the flock will be affected by foot rot. Most high land is more or less rocky.

In walking over stones the hoofs of the sheep are worn down, and are also hardened, so that they are not so easily affected by germs of the foot rot. But when a flock has once begun in a flock no change of pasture will stop it, but will rather endanger subsequent flocks put in the same pasture.

It is always best in pasturing sheep to have the field divided into two or three parts, so as to allow each to be pastured alternately. The sheep seat ures its manure better than any other domestic animal, and it is more sensitive about its feed than any other. It bites close, and after the sheep have pastured a field no other stock can thrive on it. So soon as one field is eaten down turn the sheep into another, and the first after a brief field it will be all the better. In this way the smell from excrement dropped during pasturing will be very largely removed before the sheep are turned on again. If there are any grasses which the sheep refuse to graze, cut them down with the scythe and the fresh second growth will undoubtedly be eaten greedily when the sheep are turned into the field where it is.—American Cultivator.

Bulky Food.

There is no necessity for giving cut clover to fowls if they have the run of a grass plot. If confined in yards, cut grass of any kind may be given once a day, or a sod of grass may be placed in the yard for the hens to pick. Bulky food is cheapest, the cost because it promotes digestion, by which the fowls in a thrifty condition and including egg production. A diet consisting exclusively of grain is too concentrated and unfits the birds for enduring the warmth of summer.

Food For Youngsters.

It is well to prepare the colt's food so that it shall be palatable, nutritious, and easily digested. A good means of doing this is to mix fine cut clover hay along with oat chop, bran and oil cake; moisten this with hot water, covering up with a non-conducting material, and allow it to remain in this state for twelve hours, when it will be in a suitable condition to feed.

The Fat Hog.

Remember that it is not the fat hog of great weight that brings you in the most money, but the one fatted to the point where it will cut up like the Irishman's pig, "a streak of lean and a streak of fat." Such animals bring more per pound and are produced at much less cost, so that you make a profit both ways.

Ensilage For Horses.

Ensilage has been fed to horses with very satisfactory results. At first, it will be necessary to mix a small quantity of ensilage with some other kind of feed, such as bran, corn meal or oats. After a little time the animals will soon learn to like it and will eat it readily.

Live Stock Notes.

An Iowa stockman claims that lumps on the jaws of cattle, particularly those recently dehorned, are often caused by vicious jabs given by the sharp-horned youngsters running with the herd.

The man who has had a taste of spring lamb, like the sheep-killing dog, never forgets it, and he may as well be fed on a well-cooked saddle-flap as to again go back to aged mutton.

When keeping fowls in yards there is nothing more essential to learn than when not to feed. To have courage to withhold feed is an important requisite in management. Fed too often, they become idle and profitless.

Lamb-creeps and pig-creeps are good things in giving the young stock a start in life. You will be surprised to see how young they will begin to eat and how much they will consume if the right kind of food is provided.

FROM PIGS TO PORK.

The Proper Way to Treat Them and How They Should be Fed.

Corn, the best food for fattening hogs, is not the best for the sow. She should be given plenty of nourishing food before farrowing, but should not be made fat; and for a month after farrowing her ration should be, one-half cracked or boiled oats with bran, and it must pay to feed some wheat, even at present prices. This feed should not be sloppy, and slops should never be given the sow immediately before she farrows. If she has too much litter her pigs are apt to hide in it, or the sides of her nest will be so steep that the pigs will fall down them, and in either case they will be laid on and crushed.

Leave the sow alone as much as possible for 24 hours after farrowing. Give her plenty of clean water to drink, which can be done without disturbing her by having a trough that projects outside her pen. For 24 hours she will get along without any food, and needs very little. Keep her entirely free from disturbance. For a time the pigs must be nourished through the mother, and her digestive system will have quite enough to do; hence she should have an abundance of easily digested, highly nutritious food; milk and muscle rather than fat producing food—such food as is good for dairy animals. Milk, and oats and bran slop (not too sloppy) are excellent. Get her on pasture as soon as it is good feed. Red clover is the best. It is the best and most economical hog feed where it grows well.

The pigs should be coaxed to eat and drink as soon as possible. They will very soon learn to drink of it if it is placed in a low trough in a corner of the pen, from which the sow is excluded. They will make more rapid growth and do better if given a small pen or corner where they can find food when wanted, but from which the sow is excluded. Pigs have little work to do; hence she should have an abundance of easily digested, highly nutritious food; milk and muscle rather than fat producing food—such food as is good for dairy animals. They will make more rapid growth and do better if given a small pen or corner where they can find food when wanted, but from which the sow is excluded. As soon as the pigs are weaned, and large breeds should weigh alive from 20 to 25 lbs. at four to five weeks—such pigs will thrive and pay.

Swine.

Pigs intended for early killing should be kept confined in clean, comfortable pens and shed to suit for market. No pasturage for the early porker. Every ounce of food must go to the making of pork, early, tender pork. Herein is the path to profit.

Pork raising should be a part of the routine of every well conducted farm, and consistently followed whether prices be high or low. The experience gained in the practice of economy in times of depression, should contribute toward making the profit still greater when prices tend upward.

While the growing pig should have pasturage and range and should be industrious enough to take plenty of exercise to promote healthy digestion, it is not well at all to force him to "rough it." The profit in raising them results only from raising them right. What is the best method of treating them depends much on local conditions. Pasturage in abundance, plenty of pure water, shelter from sun in Summer and from storms and cold, and clean, well ventilated sleeping quarters are essential everywhere. If the native grasses are not sufficient, cultivated pasturage should be supplied—and the pasturage should be the most important factor in developing the hog.

Yield of Different Breeds.

It may be interesting to know that in a recent experiment with various breeds of cows the largest yield was given in the second or third month after calving with a gradual but not uniform diminution thereafter. With the Ayrshires the highest yield was in the fourth month, with the Guernseys in the seventh. In regard to the yield of fat in milk, most of the breeds gave the largest yield in the second and third months, with the gradual diminution afterwards. In regard to the daily yield of butter, it was highest in the second month of lactation with the Ayrshires, Holsteins and Jerseys, after which there was a gradual diminution. The daily yield of the Devons increased during the first four months and then diminished. The better yield of the Guernseys was uniformly the same during the first four months, and reached its highest in the fifth month of lactation. With them records about the same as during the first four months up to the tenth month of lactation. The general tendency noticed was toward an increase in both the temperament and the length of time required for churning as the period of lactation advanced.

Sheep for Family Use.

Every farmer should have a small flock of sheep to furnish him a supply of fresh meat, if for no other purpose. The sheep is not much more trouble to kill and dress than is a chicken. Its flesh is as wholesome as beef. Almost any farmer's family can dispose of a mutton while it is fresh. The mutton killed on a farm is better than that bought in the market and killed after the worry of shipment and days in a crowded pen. Of course there are other values to the farmer in a flock of sheep, each one of which alone would, under ordinary circumstances, make the sheep a profitable animal on the farm, but the value mentioned above is one that is rarely mentioned, though it is one that has an important bearing on the health and the comfort of the family.

DANGEROUS STOCK FOOD.

Crimson Clover Has Become Very Popular as a Cover-Crop.

The use of crimson clover as a cover-crop has within the last few years become justly popular. Being a winter annual, its season of growth is exactly suited to the use of the orchadist who believes, as he should, in catch crops. If crimson clover be used for this purpose plowing it under in the spring at the proper time the danger from its use as stock food need not be feared, and animals may be turned upon the plants up to the time of its being ploughed under. Injuries to cattle and sheep have so far not been reported, but when used in certain stages of its growth as food for the horse it has been found to produce death from the formation of hairballs in the animal's stomach. These hairballs, often more than three inches in diameter, block the passages from the stomach to the small intestine, producing an irritation that after a period of greater or less duration causes the death of the animal from inflammation of the bowels or similar disorder.

The individual plant hairs of crimson clover that form these hairballs are usually less than an eighth of an inch long, and are covered more or less thickly with little barbs, all pointing toward the apex of the hair. These hairs, when the plant is immature, are soft and flexible and not liable to accumulate in masses in the alimentary canal. But when the plant has become mature the hairs are stiff and bristling and liable to form the balls. It is apparent, therefore, that feeding horses with crimson clover after it has been allowed to pass the flowering stage is attended with a risk that becomes greater as the plants become more and more mature, from which it may be seen that the practice of feeding the clover straw after the threshing out of the seed is to be condemned in the strongest terms, since the hairs are then most liable to collect in masses as noted.

A Mounted Waste-Barrel.

Select a low, tub-shaped barrel in which to collect the waste from the kitchen and the milk-room. Mount it within an old wheelbarrow frame in the manner shown, when it can be wheeled away to the pig-house or poultry-house. Meal and bran can be put in and mixed in the tub with the waste from the house. Scald the tub frequently in hot water. Where one has no boiler for cooking the morning mash for fowls the work can be done very well in such a tub as this. Put in the meal, bran, meat and table scraps, and begin by putting water, making a thin mixture. Cover tightly with an old woollen blanket and leave over night or several hours, at least. Meal thus cooks very thoroughly and swells to a dry, crumbly mass.

Failures With Pure Breeds.

It has frequently been claimed that a flock of scrub fowls will give as good results as pure breeds, but it is doubtful if those who so claim have kept strict accounts of the receipts and expenses for a year. Many flocks of so-called scrubs are really well-bred, and consist largely of birds that are nearly pure bred though not up to the standard in external marks. Failures occur when improper selections of breeds are made. It will not be satisfactory to confine a fowl in small enclosures as they are too active in disposition to endure confinement, and it is frequently the case that when one becomes sufficiently interested in pure breeds as to discard scrubs there is an inclination to feed too liberally. Scrub fowls are given the best results in spring and summer, when they have the conditions favorable, and because they are not overfed and pampered, but they do not prove very profitable in winter. Pure breeds are more valuable because they have certain characteristics that are classified, which serve to guide in selection, but when scrubs are used they combine the good and the bad, possessing no uniformity, selection of meritorious birds being simply "guessing," as the future only determines whether such selection was correct. There can be no failure with pure breeds if judgment is exercised in their management, and one is familiar with their characteristics.

Reduce the Cost.

Do not keep anything that does not pay. It is a loss to retain the young cockerels until they mature, as they then enter the class of "old roosters," and bring only five cents per pound. They may not be "old," but anything having a large comb must be sold with the old ones. The time to sell the males is before the first of June. Sell off all hens or pullets that have not been profitable, as they should have been laying over a month ago. The room in the poultry house is valuable, and by reducing the stock those intended to be kept will thrive better. It does not pay to feed two fowls and have only one of them laying, as it makes the eggs expensive. Do not keep idle stock in stock until the end of the year, but sell now while prices are higher than will be the case later on in the season.

Barn Made Manure.

If the barn-made manure has not been put on the land, or at least if it is not under cover where it is protected from the action of the weather, you are deliberately robbing yourself of part of the income from the farm.

USE OF FERTILIZERS.

Tables Giving Valuable Information to Vegetable Growers.

The following tables are prepared for those who cultivate vegetables and fruits for their own use or for sale in a small way only and are in response to many inquiries. They will be of little value to the market gardener, of less value to the still painfully large class which believes that barnyard manure, wood ashes, and animal matter are inspired sources of plant food, and of absolutely no value to those who have not yet learned that, as a general principle, continued success in the growing of any crop demands that a fertilizer containing the three essential elements of fertility be judiciously used.

Obviously, one who has a small garden and fruit patch does not want 25 or 30 different fertilizers, one for each crop grown. There is no need of it. One fertilizer will suffice for the lot under the conditions which usually obtain about a small place. The fertilizer recommended and used in calculating these tables is one containing three per cent. nitrogen, six per cent. water-soluble phosphoric acid, and nine per cent. potash. The percentages may be slightly varied but the proportion should be approximately 2, 3, 3.

Buy this already mixed and prepared for use, 100 to 200 pounds at a time. It will not spoil if kept dry. Insist that it have but little odor, and do not believe the dealer when he declares that decaying animal matter is an essential ingredient of fertilizers. He is mistaken.

One hundred pounds of this fertilizer should not cost more than $2, and 200 pounds not more than $3.50 delivered. The dealer makes a good profit at these prices.

See that the guaranteed analysis printed on the bag is as follows:

Nitrogen	3 p. c.
Water-soluble phosphoric acid	6 p. c.
Potash	9 p. c.

There may be a number of things aside from the above printed on the bag; eliminate them, only the above data are of value. The name or brand of fertilizer is of no consequence. One who has but a small place cannot afford to go to the trouble of buying separate fertilizer ingredients and mixing them. It is a wise economy, both of time and money, to buy a good complete fertilizer as suggested.

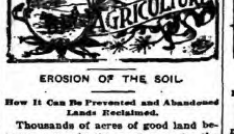
Soil for flower beds, etc.—Prepare as for vegetables using same amount of fertilizer as for lawns.

Soil for potting.—Use black soil. Mix with 1 lb. fertilizer per bushel, 2 oz. fertilizer per gallon, ½ oz. fertilizer per quart.

Liquid manure.—Dissolve one ounce fertiliser in one gallon of water. Thoroughly moisten soil once a week.

Use a Press Drill for Wheat.

Taking one season with another on the land in the corn growing states of the central west, best results with wheat are secured by the use of the press drill, as this compacts the soil over the seed and prevents excessive drying out.



EROSION OF THE SOIL.

How It Can Be Prevented and Abandoned Lands Reclaimed.

Thousands of acres of good land become unproductive each year by the erosion or washing of the soil and has to be abandoned.

The Secretary of Agriculture has caused special inquiry to be made by the divisions of his department to ascertain how erosion can be prevented and abandoned lands reclaimed.

The extent of washing depends apart from the quantity of rainfall and the contour of the surface, upon the texture of the soil, the vegetation covering it and the kind and condition of cultivation. Sandy soil will absorb heavy rainfall, while clay soil will wash badly.

The absorbing capacity of soil is in proportion to the contents of organic matter and humus. Erosion can therefore be prevented by a system of cultivation which will introduce into the soil as much organic matter as possible.

The placing of straw in the furrows while plowing acts mechanically to hold the soil in place and at the same time increase the quantity of humus.

Pea vines, stubble, briers or leaves may be used to incorporate organic matter.

When a sufficient supply of humus has been accumulated, clover, grass, rye, oats or field peas should be planted to help hold the surface.

Underdraining with tile is also effective. The drains carry off the excess of moisture so that much more of the rainfall is absorbed.

Side hill ditches may be employed, the distance between them varying according to the slope of the field. With a gentle slope they should be of intervals of 15 or 50 feet.

The present variations of fertility of the soil are largely due to erosion. The annual washings of nature have denuded the higher levels and enriched the valleys.

The maintenance of the alluvial valleys depends upon the constancy and regularity of irrigation. The Northern forests, by affording a hiding place for the snow from the early spring sun, have provided a reservoir for moisture, which in the past has not been exhausted until the middle of the summer.

The destruction of these forests causes the snow to melt all at once. The water rushes down through the valleys to the sea in a mighty torrent.

Every overflow in the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri or other river valleys contributes to the disintegration of the soils of the higher latitudes by erosion and adds to the alluvial deposits in the lower valleys.

Covering Tile Drain Joints.

The great danger in laying tile drains is that earth may enter where two sections come together. Hundreds of old tomato and corn cans can be obtained from hotels and boarding-houses. Unsolder the bottoms and the rim left about the top in opening, together with the seam at the side, and wrap the cylinder of tin about the joint as shown in the cut. This covering will not keep out water, but will keep out all loose earth, and long before the tin collar becomes rusted out the earth will be firmly packed all about the tiles. If large tiles are used, the tin can be wrapped over the top of the joint and down over the sides, leaving the bottom without protection, as it is from above that loose earth is most likely to enter the joints. With two-inch and even three-inch tile the ordinary tin can will very completely cover the entire opening.—(D.

Farm Colonies.

The problem of the tramp puzzles American rural communities a great deal. A hint on the proper disposition of these worthies may be gained from the experience of the managers of farm colonies in England and on the continent.

Besides the Salvation Army homes, the Christian Social Union has one farm colony, and one of 250 acres is maintained by Mr. Hazel, a gentleman of private means. The latter has dealt with 137 men, mostly young fellows who had committed petty crimes. Of these fifty have apparently been reclaimed, but 87 can only be classed as failures.

The London Boards of Guardians have now the power to send men to their farm, and they find that, while such punishment as stone-breaking and oakum-picking in town have few terrors for the loafer, he has a horror of ditching, turnip-weeding or other country work, and may even turn industrious in town rather than be deported.

There are now twenty-eight farm colonies in Germany, that deal with 15,000 men annually, and they are said to be very successful financially, besides having a good influence on the men.

More farmers are needed who love the soil and are not ashamed of their calling.

PRESERVING EGGS.

Information That is the Fruit of Twenty Years' Experience.

Recent experiments with twenty methods of preserving eggs brought out some valuable information, says an exchange. In each test the eggs were examined eight months after the preserving was done. Of the eggs preserved in a solution of salicylic acid and glycerine, 80 per cent. were found bad when tested. And this method of preservation was sold to the unsuspecting public several years ago in the form of a recipe at a dollar each, and it was calculated from the quantity of mail received by the seller that he reaped a golden harvest from the scheme.

Eggs treated with a solution of alum were 50 per cent. bad, and those put in a solution of salicylic acid alone were also 50 per cent. bad when tested.

Eggs treated with manganese or potassa are 20 per cent. bad, while those varnished with vaseline were all good, as were those preserved in lime water.

Many packers of eggs throughout the country use the vaseline varnish, which is very satisfactory, although it takes considerable time to varnish the varnish. This is a drawback to its being generally adopted, but eggs so treated do not have the disagreeable odor and taste of eggs preserved in lime water, the method most practiced. The vaseline method is to be recommended for home use, though whatever method is used the eggs must be perfectly fresh and clean when the preserving is done.

Eggs From Australia.

The Dairy, of London, thus speaks of importing eggs: Not many years ago the possibility of shipping eggs from Australia with any likelihood of their reaching this country except in a decomposed condition, would have been ridiculed as utterly unworthy of consideration. To-day the thing is not only being accomplished, but the eggs arrive in such first-class condition that they pass as new laid. This has been rendered possible by the universal employment of refrigerating apparatus on shipboard. The eggs, while still perfectly fresh, are forwarded by the Australian poultry-keepers to the cold store, and are shipped to England at the time when eggs are scarce and consequently at their dearest.

Many thousands of dozens, packed in boxes with cardboard divisions filled up with dry pea husks, are now forwarded to this country from November to January.

In a recent consignment the local price of the eggs at the time of shipping was twopence-halfpenny per dozen. Freight and packing cost about three pence dozen, and they realized one shilling and sixpence per dozen retail on arrival at this side of the world.

Pure Water for Hens.

The egg is 85 per cent. water and the supply must come from the outside. If you want good eggs give the hens plenty of pure water.

A weak, puny chicken represents little value and a whole brood may be counted not worth mentioning, but when the year's record is made every chicken has its place to the profit or loss of the grower.

Keep the drinking dishes in the shade and be sure they are filled with fresh water all hours.

Keep the little ones out of the wet. Give them dry, clean pens and runs, and sweet food, and they will respond.

Fertilizing a Garden.

A poultryman who is noted for success in producing vegetables states that he grows twice as much on an acre as formerly. He keeps 100 fowl, and has two lots of ground, one being given up to fowl, while the other is used for garden, the lots being about one and a quarter acres each. The next year he turns the fowl on the garden plot and uses for a garden the plot then vacated by the fowl. By thus giving up the garden plot to poultry every alternate year he keeps the soil very fertile.

Look Out for the Chickens.

Many are expecting that it is far easier to hatch chicks than to grow them, yet here is where the story of success or failure will be learned. Look out for the chickens.

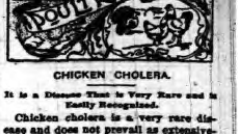
Tubs and buckets are preserved from cracking and spreading if a little water is left in them.



CHICKEN CHOLERA.

It is a Disease That is Very Rare and is Easily Handled.

Chicken cholera is a very rare disease and does not prevail as extensively as supposed, yet nearly all diseases are ascribed to cholera because the prevailing disease is unknown. Cholera does not remain long after it appears. It kills its victims in less than two days, though occasionally some fowls will not succumb before the third day. The birds will be well or dead in less than a week. The symptoms are greenish droppings, prostration, and great thirst. There is no known "sure cure," a teaspoonful of liquid carbolic acid in half a gallon of drinking water being sometimes efficacious. All dead birds should be burnt and the premises disinfected. What is frequently mistaken for cholera is indigestion, due to feeding heavily on grain, the remedy for which is to reduce the allowance of grain two-thirds and give more bulky material, in summer giving no food other than that which the birds can find.

Oats and Peas for Feed.

Experts do not believe there is much if any profit in sowing oats alone to be cut for green feed or for soiling. The oat crop is a very exhaustive one, and even if cut green it leaves the soil in poor condition for any other crop. But with peas the case is different. They really enrich the soil through the nodules which grow on pea roots, as they do on the roots of all leguminous plants. But to sow peas alone is very unsatisfactory. The pea vines cannot support themselves up, and as they fall on the ground the vines soon mildewed. One-third weight of oats sown with peas will probably make the growth of each about equal. There will be some pods with peas in them on peas thus grown, and when cut green for soiling these peas in their pods can be eaten without danger of hurting the stock fed by them. If some gypsum or land plaster is sown with this mixture it will greatly help the peas, and will also be good for the oats by keeping the soil moist.

Variety in Grain.

The reason that corn and wheat are not suitable foods when used exclusively is that they contain but little lime in their composition. Lime is the fowl's very necessary assists in providing shells for the eggs, and it may be mentioned that the lime in oyster shells, mortar, etc., is not in the soluble and digestible form in which it exists in food. It may happen that to procure lime, or bulky food, is difficult, but more mineral matter can be added to the grain diet by giving a variety. For instance, bran contains four times as much mineral matter as corn, and when grain is used it will be an advantage to feed bran, mixed into a stiff dough or cooked as bread, adding also oats, wheat, and buckwheat to afford changes in the food.

Melon Growing.

Melons and cucumbers may be obtained early by starting the seeds on sods four inches square turned upside down and placed under glass. If kept well watered the plants will flourish, take root in the sod and be well started when the weather is warm enough to transplant them into the open field. This plan is about the only way one can be sure of watermelons in Central and Northern New England. Another way is to start seed inside of a turnip which has been scraped out, leaving only a thin wall. When the turnip is set out it will decay, allowing the melon to take hold on the soil.

Care of Grafts.

Experts believe in cutting grafts some weeks before they are to be used, as this secures them when they have not filled with sap as they are in early spring. The graft should be kept in sand very slightly moistened. In this the cut surface will not dry up, but rather a sap will exude from it that when set will help to unite with the stock in which it is placed. If the grafts are cut early, and thus preserved in condition, it is rather better to defer grafting until the buds on the limbs cut away to insert the graft are just ready to burst into leaf.

Perfumed Butter a Fad.

The English have adopted a new fad in the shape of perfumed butter. The butter is of extra fine quality and wrapped in muslin. It is then placed upon a bed of rose leaves and the whole put in a refrigerator, where it is allowed to remain for ten or twelve hours, during which time it becomes perfumed.

Rotation Kills Pests.

Those who have long grown the same crop on the same land and are troubled with insects pests, better plan now to change the crop, as rotation is the remedy for many pests, as well as being helpful in many other directions.

Use the Home Supply.

It is very convenient to buy and apply bone dust and other commercial manures, and often pays handsomely, but that fact doesn't justify the farmer in wasting any part of his home supply.

Profitable Green Forage.

Peas and oats produce the largest yield of green forage per acre of almost any other combination of grains. Heavy seeding is more satisfactory than light.

WARM WEATHER STYLES.

Attractive Novelties For the Summer Wardrobe.

Lace plays a very conspicuous part among the new gowns, as it has among those of the past season. For evening wear there are entire sleeves made of real lace and shaped to the arm, boleros of real lace and entire skirt and bodice draperies of net covered with lace appliqua. Turning to cloth costumes, there are tunics, yokes and sleeves of cloth entirely covered with heavy net, upon which are incrustations of the cloth again, forming elaborate designs outlined with cord, which are fastened through the net upon the cloth beneath, so that all form one fabric. These are made up in combination with plain cloth to match. Large lace collars are also worn, and lace is much used upon hats.

Shirt waists of white piqua are embroidered with pink, blue, lavender or black. The embroidery appears upon the body of the goods, ornamenting the plait in the middle of the front and the material at each side of it for a width of several inches; also the collar and cuffs. Those are very pretty, but no prettier than some of the new waists of stamped percale, which are less expensive and quite as effective. There is a fancy this season for adding a touch of black to printed designs in light colors, and the result is often highly pleasing. Thus, a blue and white or pink and white striped madras will be sprinkled with black dots and a colored percale with a white design will have a smaller black figure scattered here and there upon it.

The picture shows a gown of green satin cloth, the skirt buttoning over at the left side with buttons of cut silver and folds of old rose velvet appearing under the edges of the green laps. The tight bodice buttons across to the left and is adorned in the same way as the skirt, and the wrists of the tight sleeves are trimmed to match. The collar and little plastron are of white surah, the belt being of old rose velvet. The sequa of old rose faille is trimmed with tea roses

PREVAILING STYLES.

The Fancies of the Moment In Minor Fashions.

The fashion of circular flounces is in some respects an unusual one, as it facilitates the making over of skirts which have become defaced around the lower edge or are outgrown and require lengthening. It is sometimes impossible to match goods, but the prevailing mode permits the flounce to be of another material from the skirt, provided that it harmonizes well.

The fashionable coiffure demands a high arrangement of the back hair, which is worn on the top of the head. The hair at the sides is waved and left rather loose, concealing the top of the ear, while in front it is dressed in whatever way is most becoming to the face—in pompadour style or with loose curls falling upon the brow or parted in the middle. The tortoise shell comb continues to be the preferred ornament. It is plain, carved or decorated with gold and jewels. The short locks at the back of the neck are caught up and fastened to the rest of the hair by a little brooch unless they curl, in which case they are allowed to hang loose. Plain shell or imitation shell hairpins are used almost to the exclusion of wire pins, as they are much less injurious to the hair.

A cut is given which illustrates a pretty trad to be worn under a bolero or open jacket. It is of lisere silk and has a full front, with rows of shirring at the waist, across the bust and chest and around the back. Between the upper bands of shirring are narrow black velvet ribbons arranged to form vandykes. The collar is trimmed with velvet bands and wired velvet loops. This same idea may be attractively carried out in pale green silk with darker green velvet.

TAILOR MADE COSTUMES.

They Are Less Severe Than In Previous Years.

The tailor made gown is becoming less masculine not because it is less carefully constructed, but because fashion has decreed that it shall be more ornamental. Brightly colored material is employed, and there is a more or less elaborate decoration of stitched bands of silk or cloth. Jackets and little coats accompanying tailor made gowns are short, and turned down collars have the preference.

The new bolero, which terminates at the waist line, is very tight at the back, but falls straight in front, where it is opened or closed according to fancy.

The skirt opening at the side will be the favorite during the coming season, and the opening is either skillfully concealed so that it does not appear at all or is else rendered ornamental by some arrangement of buttons, galloon, passementerie or embroidered motifs.

The illustration given today depicts a tailor made gown of heliotrope cloth. The skirt is trimmed with applications of black passementerie simulating a redingote. The bodice is tight and has short basques sewed on at the waist line. The trimming, like that on the skirt, consists of applications of black passementerie outlining a sort of corselet and designing motifs upon the upper part of the sleeves. There is a scalloped white collar, and the sleeves have flaring cuffs, sewed on. The hat of black chip is trimmed with velvet roses.

BOLEROS.

They Are In the Van of Spring Fashions.

Bolero costumes take the lead this spring in tailor made and other styles. The skirt is of the already accepted flowing fashion, rippling round the lower edge, tight around the top, with the addition of trimming or a tunic, according to taste. The bolero, however, shows more variety, being open or closed, single or double breasted, straight in front or with darts, made with large or small, double or single revers. Every degree of elaboration is seen, from the plain bolero of cloth, finished with stitching and a coat collar and revers, to one covered with applications, embroideries and ruches. A chemisette is, of course, the essential accompaniment of such gowns, and the wearer may choose a simple percale shirt waist, a waist of fine nainsook with tucks, valenciennes lace and embroidery or a silk bodice adorned with all sorts of frippery. There are pretty mannish vests also to be worn under the bolero, with a little plastron showing at the top, like a man's shirt bosom.

Beside the bolero the usual jacket costumes appear, in which the upper garment has a more or less long basque. A hybrid between the jacket and the bolero is also seen, in which the bolero ceases to be one, in virtue of an apology for a basque about an inch long.

A cut is given which shows a gown of mauve cloth. The skirt is trimmed with three bands of pansy velvet with mauve spots, the bands being bordered by stitched straps of cloth. The open bolero has long fronts, with small gold buttons as each edge, and the collars and revers are of the dotted pansy velvet. The close sleeves have cuffs to match the revers. The plastron is of mauve taffeta horizontally plaited, across which is a sort of short vest of white cloth embroidered with gold. The hat of mauve straw is trimmed with pansy velvet and pansy ostrich plumes.

HATS IN EMBRYO.

Odd Looking Shapes on Which Lovely Easter Bonnets Will Be Built.

I do not suppose that the average male creature will know what the illustration herewith is meant for. But he will soon find out. These, dear brothers, are the embryos out of which will evolve the Easter hats. You will not only learn to know them, but to take a great interest in them. You will even go so far as to hand out your shekels of gold and silver for them.

And you will never forget them, particularly those paid for by other men, when poised over the lovely faces of the other men's daughters. You will feel like singing a joyful psean of thanksgiving when you remember that you may feast your eyes upon the beauty of the hat and that of the wearer's face without money and without price. I am sorry for the other man, for hats are very dear, far dearer than they ought to be, considering. One can get a nice full tailor made suit of good stuff, or an elegant tea gown all covered with lace and ribbon, cheaper than some of the hats.

But all that is irrelevant, as the lawyers say. I started to tell the women what Easter will bring them and then lost the thread of my discourse in sympathy for the mere men whose hard dollars will have to pay for them.

These are the foundations. They are in the primary, secondary and tertiary colors besides black and white, and the shapes beat anything I ever saw, but one consoling thought is that the more twisted the straw is the less trimming it requires to make it becoming.

One thing with a crown like a hen's nest upside down has a bent and crooked brim of rough straw of all the resada colors. The brim is scalloped in the weaving, and the left side is higher than the rest. Then in front are a pair of bent wings also of the straw. They stand up several inches and would still more were it not that they are bent down. Around, in and among these scallops and wings a perfect bed of violets, roses, rose buds and forget-me-nots sprays cluster. Nothing but the flowers.

One other hat of this same design had white violets and pale yellow crocuses with spearlike leaves standing up straight, but violets seem to be in the ascendency on these new hats. Shaded from white to the deepest hue possible for that flower, they are beautiful and springlike.

Another shape of rough straw has a brim turned down somewhat like the old grypy, but the crown of black and white straw looks like a broken down wastebasket, yet this, with a very full drapery of silvery malines net and a baker's dozen of pink peonies—bless you, the thing is beautiful!

Poppies very double and with pink tipped petals are also seen on some mingled with bunches of grasses and grains, though these are green, not ripened.

One hat is shaped just like the old sailor's "sou'easter," only the long part of this comes over the face instead of hanging down the back of the neck to carry off the rain.

There are some surprising made feathers to be put on these. No mere cold, pale, passionless words could describe them. They are too, too utterly, consummately wonderful, but they trim well, especially when they are soft tints where faint creams grow into soft pinkish drabs mottled with dark brown. They are nearly all on the plan of a wide curled quill feather, with other feathers glued to them on centers, edges and ends. With gauze, mallines, a few bright spangles and a busbelful of flowers the hat is trimmed, always making these wondrous feathers the most salient point.

Then there is the "shovel nose" hat in fine black chip. There is no shape which is adapted to so wide a range of faces and ages and styles of trimming. Black tips and pink roses, with an upstanding frill of black French lace, made one of these into a "love."

The gray, drab and brown alpine is here, but with a high crown and shaded brim. It is of fine, rather flexible straw. With a scarf of velvet or velling and a couple of fancy quills and a buckle this becomes a "duck." Then there is a most quaint little black satin straw hat with a round flat brim and a high crown flaring out much larger at the top than it is around the head. The chic of this is to have a regular little velvet necktie fastened like a cravat directly in front. This is a "darling."

The next is a chip sailor with a wattered silk band, with a very mannish bow at one side. I really cannot classify this, but I may say it is very fetching above a bright young face. The capote is of dark gray and has a frill of straw. The neatest of these was trimmed with a whole lot of black lace standing up in ruffles, with a jet ornament, an aigret and fancy steel and jet buckle. For middle aged ladies there are strings of velvet.

HENRIETTE ROUSSEAU.

The state of Illinois has made an appropriation of $9,000 to be expended on having a memorial of Miss Frances E. Willard, the great White Ribboner, placed in the capitol at Washington. This, if no unforeseen obstacle prevents it, will be the first time in the history of the nation the statue of a woman will occupy a niche in the famous statuary hall of the capitol.

OUT OF DOOR STYLES.

Dainty Capes and Mantles For Summer Weather.

Very short little capes, which coma scarcely below the shoulders and are not much more than large collars, are a novelty of the season. They are of silk, satin, mousseline de soie, tulle or gauze and are much ornamented, all available trimmings being expended upon them. There are plaitings of silk or gauze, ruches of the same materials or of ribbons, ostrich tips or chiffon frills with an edge of ostrich plume fibers. Spangled trimmings and lace are also lavishly used. As a rule these capes have a fanciful collar or neck ruche and a smooth yoke, upon which are mounted points, scallops, circular ruffles or plaitings to form a little pelerine.

There are likewise very attractive evening capes, often with a hood to match, which is attached to the cape or made so that it can be worn separately. The materials employed are of the richest, and the usual form is circular, with rounded fronts.

Capes of black or white lace over silk, black, white or colored, are a pretty novelty. Mantles are also seen which embrace every grade of difference between a cape and a jacket. One of the simplest is rounded at the back and has two longer ends in front, which may be round, square or pointed. Guipure embroidered with silk and metal is used over silk for elaborate wraps, but there are all degrees of richness and simplicity.

The cut shows a costume of nickel gray cloth, the skirt being ornamented with lines of stitching which ascend in the form of points in front. The tight coat has a round basque of medium length, with a tailor collar and revers of mandarin faille. There are mandarin faille cuffs and gold buttons as the wrists of the tight sleeves. The masculine vest of white cloth is fastened with small gold buttons, and shows a chemisette of plaited white batiste and a batiste collar. The toreador cravat is of mandarin faille. Gold and cut steel buttons adorn the fronts of the coat. The hat of nickel gray felt is trimmed with a drapery of white faille, a gold buckle and an argus feather.

MILLINERY NOTES.

Hats, Bonnets and Accessories For the Coming Season.

Collars and cuffs of linen and lawn are much worn with tailor made costumes and also with woolen gowns. These accessories are plain or are decorated with hemstitching, little plaitings or ornamental stitching. Linen plastrons and chemisettes are made with masculine shirt plaits.

Hats of tulle are a conspicuous feature among the new millinery. These hats are often large and are made in all sorts of ways. Sometimes the tulle is arranged over the wire shape in thick braids and twists; sometimes it is puffed; sometimes it is shirred with innumerable little beadings, or it is made into ruches, the edges of which may be finished with a line of jet. Flowers are the favorite trimming, and a jeweled buckle or ornament is usually introduced also.

Chip hats are again seen, and a new idea for trimming them is to outline ribbonlike bands of the chip, which are twisted into loops and bows. Leghorn hats are trimmed in the same way, strips of the leghorn braid being employed. Of course these bows are not the only trimming; they appear in connection with flowers, ribbons, velvet or mousseline de soie.

Straw hats of vivid colors are to be worn again this season. They are chiefly of wide fancy braid and appear in blues, purples, greens, reds and yellows. There are also very attractive gray and fawn shades, which are trimmed with the same tones and afford a pleasing relief from the brilliant colors.

Toques are rather large, and, like all millinery, are profusely trimmed. The toque of which a picture is given has a crown of pink roses, around which is arranged a thick tornado of black tulle. The brim has a border of steel trimming and is lifted at the left side by a twisted knot of pink velvet, which terminates in points at the back. Above the velvet is a large group of those powdery, white leaves which were worn years ago and have now been revived

FASHION HINTS.

Facts Concerning the Details of Present Styles.

The draped tunic and the redingote opening over the skirt are enjoying eminent success in fashionable circles and appear in all sorts of gowns, from the tailor made costume to the evening toilet. The skirts over which the tunic or redingote appears need not be of the same color or goods. It may be entirely different if the same materials or of ribbons, ostrich tips or chiffon frills with an edge of ostrich plume fibers. Spangled trimmings and lace are also lavishly used. As a rule these capes have a fanciful collar or neck ruche and a smooth yoke, upon which are mounted points, scallops, circular ruffles or plaitings to form a little pelerine.

coat bodice is the more dignified of the two and is therefore more suitable for matrons women, but as the bolero now comes down to the waist line behind and sometimes a trifle below is while in front it is frequently elongated in points or squares it is not very flippant and may be appropriately worn by almost any woman.

A picture is given of one of the simplest of the present fashionable petticoats. It is open and blue glace taffeta and, like the skirts of gowns, is molded to the figure at the top. Around the foot is a deep flounce, increasing in height toward the back and headed by a pinked ruche of taffeta. The flounce is bordered by a pinked ruffle of taffeta. The corset usually matches the petticoat in color, or at least harmonizes with it, and in this case a corset of either fawn or blue satin might be chosen.

PRETTY ACCESSORIES.

Attractive Details of the Summer Fashions.

Some of the new parasols have painted designs or flowers thrown across them or forming an elaborate pattern around the entire circle. The simplest painted parasols are of plain, thin silk, white or of a delicate color, with a spray of apple blossoms or roses at one side, but more elaborate ones are ruffled with gauze and also most covered with painted flowers. Another novelty in parasols has the edge cut in deep tabs or scallops and bordered with lisere.

Incrustations of cloth have been much worn, but now there is a new development, in which the cloth designs are appliqued on a foundation of heavy net, the goods thus created being used for parts or the whole of costumes.

Manie and golden tan straws are the newest. Italian straws and straws mingled with chenille, tulle and gauze are also seen. Hats are still worn forward over the eyes, and the back is more or less lifted, with trimming placed under the brim near the hair. Violets and blues are the most fashionable millinery colors, and therefore violets and bluets, or cornflowers, are used in great profusion in both dark and light shades.

Children's hats are extremely attractive this season. They are large and are usually simply trimmed. Some of the prettiest are chiefly ornamented with field flowers—buttercups, daisies, poppies, cornflowers or red and white clovers, with grasses and plain or plaid ribbons. The hat shown in the sketch is of the old fashioned leghorn variety and is trimmed with pink and white ribbon at the top and under the brim on each side, the ribbon also forming strings which tie in front. A spray of hawthorn is placed in front, falling upon the brim

SUMMER FASHIONS.

White Promises to Be the Leading Favorite.

White continues to enjoy great consideration in the fashionable world. Aside from the white wash costumes prepared for summer, toilets of white cloth, wool or silk are well represented. The revers and pocket flaps of jackets of light or dark cloth are also frequently white, white gloves retain their vogue and white trimmings in the form of folds, pipings and applications are lavishly used. White shirt waists promise to preponderate over all others during the summer, and although there are many comparatively plain ones of lawn or pique there are some which are shirt waists only in shape, being sometimes simply a mass of open embroidery in insertings, bands or separated by lines of lace insertion. A favorite means of introducing a touch of white into the costume is to wear a plastron of white silk, cloth or guipure under an open fronted bodice.

Two shades of the same color are now often combined, and when the plastron is not white it is frequently another tone of the color of the gown. Dark and light shades of brown, green and blue are thus used, also gray and black. Gray and white are always a peculiarly refined and pleasing conjunction, especially when the gray is of a medium or light tone.

The gown illustrated is of bright red cloth. The skirt is cut with a redingote effect, having a circular flounce which is extended to form a tablier. The redingote portion is bordered with black embroidery. The bodice consists of three superimposed boleros, each embroidered with black and pointed over a plastron of white embroidered with black. The sleeves have black embroidery at the flaring wrists. The belt of red grosgrain is fastened with a gold buckle, and jet buttons ornament the bolero. The cravat is of white tulle with black satin lines secured by a gold buckle. The toque is embroidered with straw has a spray of red azaleas at the side.

NEW MATERIALS.

Light Goods and Light Colors For Warm Weather.

The new materials are all light in weight and many of them they are meant for warm weather wear, but because the increasing amount of tissue used in skirts makes it necessary to diminish heaviness as much as possible. The cloth with a glossy finish are favorites and are much used in decided colors and pale tones. Beginning with the cloths verging on white, these are chalk, putty, pale shade and pearl shades, which are at the very head and front of fashion and are sufficiently delicate and unserviceable to please the most expensive fancy. Fineness and brilliancy are combined with extreme lightness of weight, and the result is charming. After these tints beige, gray, blues and violets claim fashionable attention, and the latter violets are very numerous from the deep Russian shade to lavender and a pale pinkish lilac. Reds and greens are also seen in new shades and will compose some effective gowns.

Satin de bengale, a new fabric, is having a decided vogue for entire costumes and for elegant bodices and is displacing taffeta, as it lends itself more kindly to the tucks, puffs and shirrings demanded by fashion. Taffeta is not abandoned, however, and has been brought out in wider widths and new designs.

The cut shows a costume of sky blue and white glace taffeta. The plain skirt is covered over the hips with guipure embroidered with silver, which extends downward in long points. The tight bodice has a horizontal drapery in front bordered with a band of embroidered guipure and gathered at the right side under a chou. The yoke of embroidered guipure extends to the waist in a long point at the back. The close sleeves are plaited at the top and have guipure points at the wrists. The collar is of white mousseline de soie.

OUT OF DOOR GOWNS.

Street and Outing Costumes of Various Kinds.

The coat bodice and the tunic are more becoming to a tall than to a short figure. The tunic in particular, which suggests the classical loss, requires height and dignity in the wearer to appear to the best advantage. The bolero, however, is becoming to almost everybody in its present rather elongated form and may be safely chosen by any woman.

For bicycling and golf suits reversible woolens are used, in which the sides are different. No lining is employed. For example, a suit of dark beige goods consists of a short skirt finished around the edge by many lines of stitching and a double breasted bolero. The wrong side of the goods shows a brown and beige check. The suit is unlined, the seams being neatly bound with ribbon. Such a costume is exactly suited for out of door sports, with the addition of gaiters and an alpine or sailor hat, and in it a woman is comfortably equipped for mountain climbing or any athletic amusement. With a short skirt the petticoat is decidedly replaced by bloomers of black material or of goods matching the color of the gown.

There are many odd and pretty ways of decorating the bodice, and one of the new methods of trimming is illustrated. There is a yoke, or rather applied plastron, of plaited white mousseline de soie, around which is a drapery of white lace, fastened at the right shoulder by a jeweled buckle and at the other side by bows of red satin. The lace is confined down the left side in roquilles and fastened again at the waist with red satin bows. The collar of red satin has ecques of the same material and a bow still.

TAILOR MADE GOWNS.

Materials, Styles and Trimmings For Such Costumes.

Tailor made gowns have lost no portion of their prestige and are seen in greater variety than ever because of the wide range of color and trimming allowed them this season. There are many blues besides navy blue—old blue, bluet and a sort of purplish blue both deep and multitudinous series of faint tints just off white, grays and pale beiges, as well as the usual deep colors and red. Then for materials there are mannerest zero thin cloth with a velvet, silk, kid or satin finish, thin serges and cheviots of a hairy surface and both coarse and fine venetian cloth. The simplest style of gown shows a plain, straight skirt, touching the ground all around, very tight around the hips and with an invisible fastening, and a short jacket or a bolero with open or closed fronts, plain stitching being the only decoration. For more elaborate gowns there is the tunic skirt or the skirt with several circular flounces and the bodice with a pelerine or double revers. As for trimming, there are folds and stitched straps of cloth or satin, galloons, velvet ribbons, circular ruffles, applications of cloth and embroideries made directly upon the goods, not to mention braiding, either plain or fanciful. Attractive costumes of black venetian cloth show appliqua decorations of black silk or satin outlined with braid or cord, the same adornment covering the revers, which are, however, of white silk or cloth instead of black. The lining of skirts and boleros is usually of silk of a light or bright color—rose, mauve, cherry or pea green.

The illustration shows a jacket of mauve cloth. It has a tight fitting back, without seams, and the basque is shorter on the hips than elsewhere. The front is straight and crosses over to the left, closing with two rows of pearl buttons. The large collar is faced with white cloth, and the jacket is finished with lines of stitching. This little coat may be worn as a separate jacket or may be accompanied by a skirt to match.

Looking Ahead to Fall.

In discussing the political situation the Trenton correspondent of the Philadelphia Record thinks that the contests over local offices in the big New Jersey cities are sure to have some bearing on the next State election, and whatever it may be cannot be truthfully predicted. Then seven State Senators and a House of Assembly will be chosen. The new Senators will each have a vote for a successor to General Sewell in the United States Senate. His term will not expire until 1901.

Every one concedes that the General is a hard man to beat. State elections are quite different from those held in municipalities. The same issues do not prevail. A city may go Democratic in the spring, and in the fall be carried by the Republicans.

General Sewell has a great many Democratic friends who would like to see him continue in his office as United States Senator, and that fact alone makes him a hard man to beat. Doubtless the Democrats, when the proper time arrives, will make a contest for the seat, and they may conclude to make it very hot. The hotter the better.

General Sewell may then meet a foeman worthy of his steel, and there will be an interesting time all around. One thing is certain—should the Republicans carry the day General Sewell will not fine much difficulty in having himself re-elected. In the event of Democratic success, then Allan L. McDermott, James Smith and Edward F. C Young may enter the race for Senator.

For Lower Insurance Rates.

The adoption of the fire ordinance by the Common Council Monday is one of the most important improvements that the city has experienced in some years. Under the old volunteer system Plainfield ranked high in the standard of its fire department, but under the paid call system, which the new condition of affairs will bring, it will take a still higher position.

The efficiency of a fire department is generally considered to bear a close relation to the rate of fire insurance—the higher the department's reputation for good work the lower the insurance charges. Plainfield's experience, however, seems to have been a contradictory one in this respect. Notwithstanding the excellence of the fire department the insurance rates have been abnormally high, and have been a drawback to the commercial position of the city in more ways than one.

Much has been said with reference to the probability of a lower rate for insurance in the event of a paid system of call firemen, and it is to be hoped, now that that municipal feature is assured, that the change will come in the early future.

As might be expected, Senator Reed is mixed-up in the quarrel in which the Somerville Republicans are involved over the appointment of a postmaster for that place. Though the differences between the factions headed by the Senator and Mr. Thompson have been allowed to slumber quietly since last fall, the complications over the Somerville position has stirred up the whole political mess again. George W. Cooper, who came near outwitting the Thompsonites by being appointed by President McKinley before they knew that Alvah A. Clark had resigned, is Senator Reed's right hand man in Somerville. It was Cooper for whom Reed sought to secure the nomination of Surrogate two years ago, and since then the former has done every thing in his power to put the Senator's influence first in Somerset. G. O. P. ranks. If Senator Reed succeeds in landing Cooper as postmaster of Somerville it will be the biggest political stroke he has pulled in sometime.

Trolley Terms in Elizabeth.

The terms which John Kean finally accepted from the Elizabeth City Council Monday night in connection with the authorization of a change of motive power on the horse car line in that city, together with an extension of the right of way over certain streets, to connect with his proposed county boulevard trolley road, are an emphatic argument in favor of the position assumed by the majority members of the Council in holding out for better terms than the Senator originally offered.

Of course, the conditions are not exactly what was desired, but the compromise is decidedly in favor of the people. The position of the majority members of the Council at the start was for Mr. Kean to make a five cent fare from Elizabethport to Cranford at the beginning of the operation of the proposed new line. Mr. Kean wanted to make it an eight cent fare for the distance, and have the right to charge that perpetually.

The terms finally settled upon by the Council, and it is understood that Mr. Kean has announced his intention of accepting them, include an eight cent fare between Elizabethport and Cranford until 1906, after which the fare is to be reduced to five cents. The advantages of this arrangement over that proposed by Mr. Kean is of supreme benefit to the public.

Since the negotiations have been going on the Council has been importuned constantly and aggressively to allow Mr. Kean to build the road at his own terms, it being insisted that the best interests of the city were being menaced by the failure to immediately grant everything that the shrewd corporation man asked. That such pleadings and arguments were fallacious and ill-conceived, it need hardly be said now in view of the terms that have been settled upon.

It is the custom of corporations such as street railway companies, in applying for franchises, to offer the most meagre benefits in return for the privileges petitioned for, and to attempt to drive the municipal authorities into a bargain with them by stirring up a public sentiment that is conceived in a short-sighted policy. It may be accepted as a pretty good rule for the legislative officials of every town and city not to make haste in granting franchises to corporations whose only asset of practical value is the privileges that the public grant.

The Elizabeth Council has accomplished splendid work for its constituents by the sound stand that they took in dealing with Senator Kean.

Drunken Men's Rights.

Justice Dixon, of the Supreme court, has filed an opinion that is of more than passing interest because it effects a class of cases with which every community is surfeited, and particularly Plainfield.

The Court holds that under the "act concerning disorderly persons" an intoxicated man is not guilty of any legal mischief by loud and indecent language, as long as he does not loiter. The syllabus of the opinion says:

"It is clear that the statue does not make the use of loud and offensive or indecent language by intoxicated persons disorderly conduct, unless such persons are loitering or assembled in the public place mentioned."

In accordances with the common practices of the City Judges the local police force has never exercised a discrimination in making arrests of disorderly persons such as Judge Dixon points out. There may be points to the acute legal mind that the ordinary layman cannot see, but from a practical standpoint we should say that there is the same degree of offense in a man leaving a trail of profanity in his wake as there is for him to stand stock still and make the air blue in chunks. We do not imagine that because of the Supreme court decision the police of Plainfield are going to stand around looking wise and and let every drunken man, who may be plodded along in reeling steps, roll off profanity without being called to account in a severe manner.

An Uncertain Phrase.

Senator E. C. Stokes, who has been instrumental in having the State Village for Epileptics in Somerset county created, is much exercised over the possibility of the State refusing to contribute any moneys for the use of the village this year. The trouble all comes about over a construction of the clause in the Appropriation bill relative to the epileptic village. The bill, in this clause, contains specific items aggregating $41,000 for the maintenance of the village, and concludes with the words, "provided such specific sums shall be authorized by an enactment of the Legislature."

The State Comptroller interprets this latter phrase to mean that the money can be paid in case separate laws have been enacted for each specific item. Senator Stokes says that the Appropriation bill itself specifically appropriates the money, and says that the phrase was an error. He thinks that it in no wise affects the law, and is urging that the money be appropriated. Governor Voorhees has referred the matter to Attorney-General Grey for an opinion.

As in this country, the woman's rights movement makes progress slowly in England. During last week in the House of Commons the question was whether women are competent under the new London Government bill to become Mayors, Aldermen or Councillors of the new London municipalities. Mr. Balfour personally favors woman's suffrage, though he declared Thursday that the possibility of women becoming members of Parliament "is an extension of the privilege which would be absolutely intolerable." The House visibly shuddered at the thought, and the Cabinet is, like Mr. Balfour, on this subject at sixes and sevens; so woman's suffrage is practically hung up.

The Newark News observes that not children alone but even grown men and women like good fairy stories. Therefore, it is pleasant to read that the new Copper Trust, incorporated at Trenton recently, "does not propose to advance prices, but rather to prevent an undue advance, as, by keeping the price upon a fair basis, it is believed that the demand for the metal will be fostered and the profits to the company be all the greater."

MAY WE INQUIRE WHY.

The humorist who makes jokes out of the trials of the suburban resident lives out of town?

The individual who pokes fun at the Harlem goat keeps one of those useful but homely animals?

Why the gossiper on things about town is never seen at any of the haunts he writes about?

Why the polished writer on dramatic art goes by way of choice to the filmiest burlesques in town?

Why the editor who writes so learnedly on political reform goes as a delegate in the interest of the machine?

The man who writes comic ditties about the woes of a man with a mother-in-law lives with his wife's mother?

Why the philosopher who tells the world how to be happy though married never entered the matrimonial state?

The young husband who indulges in airy persiflage on the subject of Easter bonnets wedded a woman who makes her own?

Why the newspaper man who writes articles on "How to live on fifty cents a week" goes in debt trying to manage on $25 per?

Why the authority on social etiquette receives visitors in his shirt sleeves and goes out to lunch with a disreputable-looking corncob pipe?

The chap who evolves funny paragraphs on the pushing of a lawnmower hurries home to trim the lawn with that instrument of torture?

BALES OF HAY ABLAZE.

STOREHOUSE TO CACMUS' MILL GUTTED BY FIRE.

The Loss will Reach Nearly $2,000—Insurance Amounts to $1,000—There Was No Apparent Cause for the Fire

A large storehouse on South Second street, belonging to A. L. Cadmus, with its upper story filled with nearly fifty tons of baled hay and straw, kept the Plainfield fire department busy for several hours Monday afternoon. The flames sprang up from some unknown cause and gutted the building and its contents, inflicting a loss of some $2,000 on the owner.

The employes of the mill were in and out the stable yesterday morning and afternoon. They noticed no sign of fire. At 2:45 o'clock Henry Freeman, a colored man in the employ of Fred J. Harris, coal dealer, passed the building. Looking in, he saw the interior of the stable a mass of flames. He gave the alarm. An alarm was immediately sent in from box 45, nearby.

When the firemen arrived the blaze had spread into the hay and straw that was stored in the second story. The flames were bursting out on every side and threatened to destroy the mill close by. Four streams were turned on the fire. The flames soon disappeared but great clouds of smoke continued to pour out of the building.

Within half an hour the fire was well under control, but it was not until 5 o'clock that all signs of fire had disappeared.

The building was gutted from roof to cellar and the contents practically ruined. The building was a good sized one. There was nearly fifty tons of hay and straw stored on the upper floor.

Assistant Chief Jennings left two men at the scene of the fire to watch for a renewal of the fire. Several times during the night the fire broke out in the bales of hay where it had been smouldering, but it was speedily extinguished.

The loss on the building itself will reach $1,000. It was covered by $600 insurance in the Hamburg Insurance Company. The loss on the stock will be $600 or over, on which the insurance is $400 with the Boston Insurance Company. All the insurance was through the agency of H. B. Tapscott.

There is no clue as yet to the origin of the fire.

CHICKENS IN A GARDEN.

Lewis C. VanNest Wants the Owner of the Fowls to Pay $100 Damages.

Lewis C. VanNest lives on Duer street and Marshal Frank Whitely's home is around the corner on Steiner place. The marshal keeps chickens, and VanNest says that the fowls have been trespassing on his garden, scratching up the seeds and tender plants as fast as he put them in the ground.

VanNest has retained Lawyer J. P. D. Kireh to represent him, and has brought suit before Justice Smalley for $100 damages. The case will be tried Thursday.

Still Alarm of Fire.

A still alarm and an alarm from box 12 was sent in Saturday night at 8:45 o'clock for a supposed fire in Yoehl & Waldron's plumbing establishment on East Front street in the Yoehl block. The store was filled with smoke which was found to come from the stove.

HEAVY THUNDER STORM.

on Harrison street, Prideville. Mrs. Charles Kellar, who lives nearby saw the fire, sent in an alarm from box No. 155, corner of Harrison and Cedar streets.

The West End Hose Company turned out promptly and fought the fire bravely. The barn was burning fiercely when the firemen arrived and the sharp lightning, accompanied by a heavy downfall of rain and the roar of thunder, made it exceedingly difficult for the firemen. However, they succeeded in saving most of the burning building and about the only damage done was that caused by the lightning which tore off about two feet off one end.

There was very little in the barn, the principal thing being a small quantity of hay, and it was this that burned the most. The members of Warren Engine Company also responded to the alarm, but by the time they arrived the fire was well under way and they were not needed.

A large tree standing in front of Abraham Cox's place, on East Third street, was struck by lightning and a deep groove was torn all the way down the trunk. No other damage was done to the tree.

CHAMBER MUSIC HEARD.

EXCELLENT CONCERT GIVEN IN THE CASINO BY PROF. STEPHENS.

The Affair Attended by 200 Music Lovers, Who Were Highly Pleased by the Work of the Artists Present

The music lovers who assembled in the Casino to attend the chamber music concert, held there Monday, found much to enjoy. The programme was a particularly pleasing one and included selections by artists who were thoroughly acquainted with their instruments, and consequently were able to give one of the most successful concerts of the season from a musical point of view. The concert was well attended, some 200 people being present.

The artists were Miss Marcellina Gonzalez, soprano; Ward Stephens, pianist, and the Kaltenborn String Quartette, composed of Franz Kaltenborn, first violin; Edwin Walther, second viola; Ernest Bauer, viola, and Hermann Beyer-Hane, violoncello. Clarence Reynolds was the accompanist.

The rendition of Chopin's funeral march by Mr. Stephens was particularly deserving of commendation.

A Branch From Upper Lehigh to Freeland Has Been Ordered—Will Give Central Equal Footing With Lehigh.

A despatch from MacAdoo, Pa., states that the Jersey Central Railroad is considering plans for extending its lines in that region and opening up new and valuable territory. Another branch is being surveyed across the mountains to strike the Silver Brook grade, which will give entrance to the Hazelton district.

These new branches will give the Jersey Central an equal footing with the Lehigh Valley for the trade in the Hazelton region.

CAUSE OF LEHIGH WRECK FROM AN EXPERT POINT OF VIEW.

Railroad Gazette Explains How the Train Dispatcher Violated a Certain Rule in the Standard Code Used.

The Railroad Gazette of March 24th last gives a report of train accidents in the United States in January. In this account, under the head of "Collisions, Butting," it describes that of the Lehigh Valley at West Dunellen Jan. 9th. After describing the circumstances of the disaster the article says:

"The immediate cause of the collision was the failure of the operator at South Plainfield, the eastern end of the single track, to show the conductor of train 71 a holding order, which had been in force at his office for more than an hour. The operator, Butland, had just come on duty (at 12 o'clock). He delivered to the conductor and to the conductor of an engine which was to run to New Market (about two miles) ahead of No. 71, two orders which had to do with minor matters, but said nothing about the holding order. Mehaffey, the operator who went off duty (as operator) at 12 o'clock, remained in the office (signal cabin) as lever man; and as soon as he saw the orders delivered he cleared the train order signal and allowed the engine and train No. 71 to go. He did this without asking Butland for authority. Butland sat with his back to the track, and, it appears, neither saw or heard the trains start. The standard code is used by the Lehigh Valley, but the train dispatcher in this case violated the rule under Form J, forbidding him to depend exclusively upon a holding order to hold a superior train. He sent an order to the eastbound train without sending a duplicate of it to the westbound."

BISHOP'S KIND WORDS.

Rev. Mr. Scarborough Spoke Highly of the Services of the Holy Cross Rector.

Bishop Scarborough, of New Jersey, paid his official visit to the Church of the Holy Cross Sunday afternoon and in addition to taking part in the services made an address and preached a sermon.

The Bishop stated before he began to preach that he was glad to learn the rector is to enjoy a much needed rest. He spoke of the twenty-two years of service that Rector Murphy had given to the church. He sincerely hoped that the rector would find the needed rest in his trip abroad, and that at the end of two years he would feel so much better in health that he will be willing to return to service again and live many years to do good in the church.

The Bishop at Grace Church.

Sunday morning was the occasion of the annual visitation of Bishop Scarborough to the parish of Grace P. E. church. The rite of confirmation was omitted as the rector, Rev. E. M. Rodman, had thought best to defer the preparation of a class until his return from the trip through the Holy Land. In his discourse, the Bishop congratulated the parishioners on their liberality in making it possible for the rector to gratify the desire of a lifetime in visiting the Holy Land. The Bishop also complimented the curate, Rev. Floyd Appleton, who has conducted the spiritual affairs of the church so satisfactorily during the rector's absence, "undertaking the responsibility without the authority."

At the Church of the Redeemer.

Bishop Scarborough visited the Church of the Redeemer Sunday and confirmed a class of six—three young men and three young women. He delivered a sermon in which he congratulated the society on its prosperity in all respects and its prospect of having a home of its own.

WITH THE FAST STEPPERS.

Horsemen Enjoyed Some Lively Speeding at the Driving Park.

Last Saturday afternoon on the track of the Gentlemen's Driving Park Association there were several trial speeds between horses owned by Mayor Newton B. Smalley, Douglass Darby, Thomas Brantingham, John Cosborne, of this city, and J. S. Irving, of Westfield. Some of the gypsies camping out in this vicinity entered the sport and placed their horses on the track. Altogether the events proved to be of great interest to the good-sized crowd present.

At an early date there will be a meeting of the association and an at*tempt will be made to arrange for a* circuit association with meets at New Brunswick, Trenton and Plainfield. There is a possibility of a big meet in this city Monday and Tuesday, June 3d and 4th, and there has been some talk of holding a State meet in this city.

KNIGHTS GALLANT TO THE FAIR ONES.

Ladies' Night Celebrated in Trinity Commandery.

THE TENTH ANNIVERSARY.

A NUMBER OF DISTINGUISHED GUESTS WERE PRESENT.

They Were Received Under the Arch of Steel—Programme of Musical and Literary Selections—Interesting Address by Right Eminent Sir Rome—Commander Sebring Gave History of Commandery.

Ladies' night was observed Monday evening by Trinity Commandery, No. 17, K. of T., with a dash and spirit that was pleasing to all. It was also the tenth anniversary of the Commandery, although its birthday fell on February 2d. The Knights were out in all the brightness and freshness of their uniforms and paraphenalia, and mingling with the more sombred coloring of the guests made a pleasing contrast.

A programme of music and recitations was presented, but before any of the numbers were announced the Knights welcomed to their reception several distinguished guests. They were Grand Standard Bearer R. A. Sherrefs, of St. John's Commandery, Elizabeth; Right Eminent Sir John E. Lowe, Newark, Past Grand Commander; Eminent Sir Charles P. Little, of Clinton Commandery, Brooklyn, and Grand Commander William H. Sebring, who, although a member of Trinity Commandery, was yet accorded the additional honor of being received, like Sirs Rowe and Little, under the arch of steel.

The programme consisted of selections by the Metronome Banjo and Mandolin Club, recitations by Miss Mary Lucky, and vocal selections by a trio composed of Mrs. Asa Collier, Miss Julia Ketcham and Elmer E. Bunyon. The playing of the club was up to their usual standard, and during the evening Fred VanEps, one of the members, gave a banjo solo. Miss Lucky recited two or three times, each one being very good.

During an intermission Right Eminent Sir Rowe made a brief address, in which he paid high compliments to Commander Wm. H. Sebring, who has lately been lifted to such a high office in the gift of Free Masonry. Past Eminent Commander Jacob Nirkner, who was master of ceremonies, introduced "Our Bill," as Commander Sebring is familiarly called, and the audience was favored with a few words from him, in which he rehearsed a part of the history of Trinity Commandery.

A surprise was in store for Eminent Sir Dungan, of Somerville, commander of Trinity Commandery, for in ap*preciation of the esteem in which his* comrades hold him he was presented with a handsome basket of roses.

This ended the speech making, and after a few more selections by those who had taken part before, refreshments were served and the reception was over.

When the Commandery was instituted ten years ago there were thirty members. Now there are about 100. Although it is still "in the morn and liquid dew of its youth," as was printed on the invitations, the Commandery has a bright future before it. These receptions will hereafter be annual affairs, as the two already held have been so successful.

PRINTERS AS FARMERS.

MEMBERS OF TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION ENJOY COUNTRY LIFE.

Pleasant Retreat on Historic Ground—About Thirty Typos Now at the Herbert Farm With Number Increasing.

From the "case" to the farm is quite a change in employment for a man, but when old age or infirmities lay hold of one who has spent the best years of his life in a printing office, so that he is no longer able to perform his exacting duties there, it is a satisfaction for the veteran printer to know that he will be well taken care of amid rural scenes during the balance of his life, says the Bound Brook Chronicle.

Such is the assurance of every member of Typographical Union, No. 6, of New York, one of the strongest and most widely known labor organizations in the country. When a member becomes so disabled that he cannot work he is sent to the Childs-Drexel printers' home in Colorado and there permitted to receive his last "stick."

If a member is out of employment and requests to be sent to a retreat he now comes to the historic Herbert farm at Bound Brook where he has either the privilege of entering the "sick ward" with no remuneration, or he can till the soil and receive therefor the sum of three dollars per week, two of which go for board.

A Chronicler visited the farm Wednesday and interviewed those in charge. The matron, Mrs. Palen, and her daughter, Miss Josephine, are the only women on the farm. Their time is pretty well taken up in preparing meals for the printers. Mrs. Palen is employed by the Union of which her husband is a member.

Order has not yet been brought out of chaos, because of the non-arrival of the necessary furniture from the former home at Pelham Bay Park, L. I. The rooms are large and numerous in this old mansion and it is the rule to put about five men in a room, they to take care of it and fixtures, which will consist of iron bedsteads, straw mattresses and only needed articles. Wednesday there were thirty men enrolled. At least twenty more are expected. The large hall is used as a dining room.

The farm has been cut up in sections, portions of which have already been plowed. Each man as he arrives is given a portion, two acres, one of which will be devoted to raising potatoes and the other to an assortment of vegetables.

Mr. Palen buys meat and groceries at wholesale, but local merchants in other lines are being patronized.

All those connected with the "home" are loud in their praises of the location, the mountain scenery being especially attractive.

The house is one of the oldest in this part of the country, having been erected before the Revolution by Philip VanHorn. It was the headquarters for several American officers during the war. Here it is that men here of Typographical Union, No. 6, of New York, find rest and recreation.

Mr. Saltzman Going Abroad.

Augustus Saltzman, who is now visiting his daughter, Mrs. A. S. Fritts, at Rawley, Pa., expects to sail at an early date for Switzerland where he will remain for an indefinite time with his mother who lives at that place.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

New Lodge Instituted.

Loyal Council, No. 17, Sr. O. U. A. M., was instituted last Tuesday in Washington Hall with about 25 charter members. Delegates from Camden, Trenton, Elizabeth, Rahway, New Brunswick and other places were present. The next meeting will be held May 10 in Exempt Firemen's Hall, when more names will be enrolled.

Crop Report.

The weekly bulletin of the New Jersey Weather Service contains the following from Observer Naegle, of this city:

During the week there has been excessive sunshine, with only a trace of rain, but notwithstanding the drought the ground is in good condition for working; planting of potatoes and plowing for corn are progressing rapidly; wheat growing very fast, but in some places crop will be poor, owing to being frozen out; oats and rye look well. ELEVATOR AND MAN FELL THREE STORIES.

P. H. Zimmer Just Escaped Hanging En Route.

HE WAS ON THE ELEVATOR.

HAND-ROPE WAS TWISTED ARCUND AROUND HIS NECK.

Rope to Balance-Wheel Became Unhooked and Caused the Accident in the Bird Building—Fell From Third Floor to Basement—Wonderful Escape From Serious Injury of P. H. Zimmer.

The elevator in the Bird building on East Fourth street, near Park avenue, fell Monday morning from the top of the building to the basement with Phillip H. Zimmer as an unwilling passenger. En route to the bottom of the elevator shaft Zimmer managed to become entangled in the ropes and narrowly escaped death by hanging. Zimmer is still alive to tell the tale, but he doesn't know how he did it.

Zimmer has a machine shop in the basement of the Bird building. Yesterday morning he went to work as usual. There is an open freight elevator in the rear of the building. Shortly after 7 o'clock Zimmer went up in the elevator to the top floor. After leaving something there, he started to descend.

Mr. Zimmer stepped on the platform of the elevator he did not look at the rope fastened to the balance wheel and which prevents the sudden de*scent of the car. In some way it had* become unhooked. So when Zimmer started the the car it simply dropped without hinderance.

The distance the elevator fell is about thirty feet. As the car was falling the hand rope at the side used to stop and start the car twined round Zimmer's neck, lifting him clear of the platform of the car. The rope tore portion of his neck. He was thrown against the wall and cut and battered. Finally the car came to a sudden stop at the end of the shaft and Zimmer landed in a heap on top.

His side and thigh were badly injured by the fall. He was also badly cut and bruised about the body. The car is a wreck. Zimmer is out again today and at work, but he is still very sore as a result of his experience.

Waiting for a Completed Nose.

The marriage of Miss Kuntzman and Augustus Mobus, of Washington ville, did not take place Monday evening as announced. The wedding will probably take place next week after Mr. Mobus completes the furnishing of his house.

Soon to Leave the Hospital.

The remaining three patients at Muhlenberg Hospital, who were injured in the Lehigh Valley Railroad wreck at West Dunellen, will soon be able to go home. They are now almost well and improving rapidly.

Daily Sessions in New School.

Daily sessions are now being held in the Watchung School in the borough. School was opened there last Monday when six classes were transferred from the High School.

Cornelius B. Allen, a farmer at Mannington, Salem county, has a cat that has from time to time reared from kittenhood in a duck house. One morning Mr. Allen heard the quack of a little duck in the cellar, and upon investigating found thirteen little ducks huddled about the cat. It seems that the cat had had a litter of kittens killed, and had carried the ducks to a new home.

LESS HOURS TO WORK, BUT PAY TO BE SAME.

Concession to the Employes in Potter Press Works.

NO DEMAND; A REQUEST.

PETITION SIGNED BY THE MEN SENT TO MR. POTTER.

Hereafter the Men Will be Given a Full Hour for Dinner. But on Friday They Will be Permitted to Quit an Hour Earlier—Shows the Good Feeling Between Employes and Employer.

During Friday afternoon the men employed in the Potter Press Works were notified by big placards, posted in the shops, that after this week the regular number of hours to be worked each week would be fifty-four, but that would be made for fifty-five. This change was the result of a petition presented to Mr. Potter a few days ago, which had been signed by nearly all the men in the factory, and is evidence of the close friendship and good feeling that exists between the employes and the employer.

Ever since the shop has been in operation it has been the practice of the employes to take less than an hour's nooning, the few minutes gained at the time being applied to a shorter workday Friday, when the week ends at the shops on account of the proprietor being a Seventh-Day Baptist.

Recently some of the men started a petition asking that they be allowed a full hour for dinner each day and also be permitted to quit work Fridays at 5:30 o'clock, one hour earlier than is required to make the fifty-five hours service for a week. There was no dissatisfaction among the men; in fact all were well pleased, but they thought that the concession might be made by Mr. Potter without trouble.

The matter was taken under consideration by Mr. Potter and it was finally decided to grant the request of the men, giving them the extra hour a week without any reduction in their pay.

MODERN OFFICE BUILDING.

A. D. Thompson Has Plans in View for a New Business Block.

Though his plans are not fully decided yet, A. D. Thompson will soon commence the erection of a new building on the site of the structure on North avenue that was burned last fall.

At present his plans are to put up a four-story brick building of a modern design. The first floor, with its wide front, will be devoted to one large store. The upper floors will be offices, and possibly a lodge room or two. An elevator will be put in, and every other convenience of modern offices will be used.

In the rear of the lot, facing East Second street, where the stables were located, Mr. Thompson intends putting up a flat building.

TALKED TO THE PYTHIANS.

Dr. Raymond Addressed Secret Society Men at Y. M. C. A.

About forty Knights of Pythias, composed of members of Unity and Perseverance Lodges, attended the men's rally at the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon. The speaker was A. A. V. Raymond, president of Union Theological Seminary, and during the service a trio from the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church sang.

The Knights of Pythias occupied seats in front of the hall, and the speaker's words were aimed directly at them. Dr. Raymond lived in Plainfield at the time the question of organizing a Y. M. C. A. was first agitated, and mentioned this in his remarks. The difference in the buildings and surroundings of the association now to what they were at that time was alluded to.

President Cahoone opened the meeting, and introduced the speaker. During the offering, Assistant Secretary Davis rendered a cornet solo.

The rails are expected this week and then work of laying them will commence and the road between Westfield and Garwood will be completed within two weeks. The latest report has it that if the Roselle council refuses to grant the company a franchise the road will be built from a point this side of Roselle and thence to New Orange and thence to Irvington and Newark.

PARK GOLF CLUB'S SEASON OPENED.

Under the Shadow of the Mountain the Game is Played.

SENATOR REED A PLAYER.

MADE HIS DEBUT ON THE LINKS SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Entered Into a Contest With Charles Syde, and Was Beaten by the Latter—Event of the Day Was a Scratch Tournament in Which Good Scores Were Made—Tea Served by the Ladies.

Last Saturday afternoon the course of the Park Golf Club was formally opened for the season under most favorable auspices. The charming day and the fine condition of the course attracted a large number of enthusiasts to the grounds. In the morning there were a number of players going over the course, but in the afternoon the attendance was large.

It is stated by those competent to judge that the course is the equal, if not superior to any in this vicinity, and playing thereon is a pleasure. Mr. Hyde, the owner of the grounds has been making some excellent improvements, and as the grounds are well supplied with natural drainage, this precludes all possibility of having a sticky course or soggy ones. Everyone who went over the course Saturday were delighted and expressed satisfaction.

During the afternoon there was a pleasant social event when a tea was given by Mrs. Henry A. McGee and Mrs. Samuel Townsend. Many of the guests visited the clubhouse and enjoyed a chat and cup of tea, as well as the genuine hospitality of those in charge.

The event of the day was the scratch tournament, eighteen holes, medal play, open to the active members of the club. Two prizes consisting of golf sticks were offered for the best scores. W. D. Anderson won the prize for the men with a gross score of 104, while Miss Edith Hyde, with a score of 156, secured the prize for the women.

A decided feature of the afternoon play was the contest between Charles Hyde and Senator Charles A. Reed. Mr. Hyde has played on the course a number of times and is becoming quite familiar with it. His colleague, the Senator, has not engaged in the game to any extent and Saturday he played for the first time on the course and he was beaten by a score of 154 to 136. The Senator accepted his defeat in his usual affable manner, notwithstanding the fact that he felt sure of defeating his opponent. It can now be said that the Senator is a golf enthusiast and his friends may expect to see him on the the course very often during this season.

The scores in the tournament, other than those mentioned above, include the following: R. M. Shepard, 106; Thomas S. Looser, 106; A. Crowe, 108; W. O. Townsend, 110; W. J. R. Thiers, 120; C. S. Fetter, 121. S. S. Squier, 124; W. J. Boome, Jr., 131; Arthur Peck, 135; A. T. Douglass, 143; J. H. Howell, 144; Bessman Douglass, 145; Miss Edith Hyde, 156; Miss Sadie Howell, 172; Miss Adelaide Ball, 184.

THE PUMP GAVE OUT.

And Then the Fire Consumed the House of Charles Donelson, Near Craceland.

The family of Charles Donelson, who recently moved from Westfield to the Hayes house near Craceland, were rudely awakened from their quiet Sunday rest Sunday afternoon about 5:30 o'clock by the crackling of flames. An incubator burning three lamps was the cause of the fire.

As soon as the blaze was discovered the family started in to fight it and were succeeding very nicely when the pump, the only water supply about the building, broke. An alarm was then sent to the Scotch Plains Fire Department and the apparatus of both companies made a quick run of the nearly two miles but it was then too late to save the house.

Their attention was then directed towards saving the barns and out buildings which were already on fire. After a hard fight they finally won but not until the flames had caught three times. By the timely assistance of the neighbors a great deal of the furniture was saved, and it is said the loss on the house is covered by insurance.

"DIPLOMACY" ACTED BY AMATEUR TALENT.

Excellent Presentation of Sardou's Great Drama.

A FASHIONABLE AUDIENCE.

CLEVER WORK DONE BY THOSE TAKING THE LEADING PARTS.

Mrs. W. L. Saunders Was Natural in the Part of "Dora," and as the Adventuress Miss Cooley Gave a Splendid Portrayal—Good Character Work by W. L. Saunders and F. J. Pinecoff.

Before an audience that completely filled Music Hall Saturday night "Diplomacy," Sardou's popular and strong drama, was performed by a company of local players. In their dramatic attainments they ranked very close to professionals, and gave a presentation of this sterling play that was highly creditable to their talent and pleasing to the large audience.

Not since the last amateur production of a play in Music Hall four years ago has such a fashionable audience gathered within the walls of this theatre. A major portion of it was in full dress and thereby lent dash and magnificence to the affair that was fitting to accompany the admirable results that prevailed behind the footlights.

As for the performance itself, it was all that could be desired and much more than might be expected of those who took part, in view of the fact that their participation in the thespian world was but brief and only fitted by instruction in the artifices of the drama at odd moments and under circumstances not as propituous as accorded those who make acting a profession. In fact, some of the impersonations exhibited an intuitive appreciation of the theatric requirements quite remarkable in amateurs. This result was due, of course, in a large degree, to the careful rehearsing conducted by Alfred Young, under whose direction the performance was perfected as seen on the stage. But without the natural talent which was gathered together in the several characters, with which Sardou works out his interesting story, the results would not have possessed the finished touch that was given. It was due to the combined efforts of all, working in unison and appreciation of what was required, that brought out the strength of the play and impressed the audience so favorably.

It is a fact that no matter how perfect the dramatic talent of a production may be, if the scenic accessories are inadequate the performance fails in many respects. This difficulty did not exist in "Diplomacy," however, for the stage settings were of such a character that no essential was missing. A large orchestra, under the leadership of George Rogers, furnished the incidental music in a satisfactory manner during the progress of the play, and between the acts rendered overtures.

And now as to the personal work of the performers. As "Dora," around whom the action of the drama is carried out in excellent form, Mrs. W. L. Saunders scored a success that was evidenced in the hearty applause provoked by more than the perfunctory admiration of friends in the audience. Mrs. Saunders' conception of the character was skillful and true, and she played it in such an unconscious and natural way that it possessed a charming effect to the audience. In her emotional scenes she was excellent. Though amateurs are prone to be stagey at periods of their impersonations, Mrs. Saunders avoided such distressing instances, and instead gave a thoroughly sympathetic and artistic portrayal of the part.

Alfred Young's portrayal of "Capt. Beaulere" was typical of the straightforward, resolute and faithful young fellow who puts honesty above the devious ways of society. As one experienced in theatrical work much was expected of Mr. Young, and he did not fail in fulfilling the requisites of the character.

As the adventuress, "Countess Zicka," Miss Grace Webster Cooley was splendid. Her appearance, her voice and her manner were all in accord with the character, and she furnished a clever portrayal.

W. L. Saunders appeared to a great advantage in the part of "Baron Stine." In the character make-up he looked every inch the crafty, conscienceless man the part is. The sang-froid manner, the patronizing ways, the suave tongue and easy going acts of the villian were stamped in his every move. The "Baron" is a difficult character, but Mr. Saunders acted it with dramatic strength.

P. A. Hincoff had a difficult character part also in "Count Orloff." Mr. Pinecoff had given the part careful study and as the unwitting medium through which the "Baron" and the "Countess" endeavored to work out their respective ends, he was fully capable of the demands needed for a finished performance.

In the part of "Algie Fairfax" Laurence H. VanBuren was equal to every occasion where the young English swell had to put in a word to give the piece its comedy parts. Mr. VanBuren's opportunities were not many, but he did perfect justice to them all.

J. Frank Dallon gave a faithful portrayal of "Henry Beaulere." He had played the same part in the production of "Diplomacy" by the Amaranth Club, of Brooklyn, and Saturday night his previous experience stood him in good stead.

Miss Lily Gordon Wickersham was very real as the doting mother of "Dora." Her make-up as an elderly woman was true to life.

Miss Florence Waring as "Lady Henry Fairfax;" Miss Marie W. Honeycutt as "Mion," the servant; Authur Murphy as "Antoine" and "Sheppard," and Harry M. Curtis as the clerk, were not afforded any chances to distinguish themselves by special work, but they acted in the spirit that "little things deserve to be done well," and thereby contributed their part towards making a highly satisfactory performance.

WORKING THEIR WAY TOWARDS THIS CITY.

Important Move of Consolidated Traction Company.

WILL GET INTO METUCHEN.

THEN THE ROAD TO PLAINFIELD WOULD PROBABLY BE BUILT.

Negotiations are Now in Progress for the Acquisition of the Controlling Interest of the Perth Amboy by the Consolidated—It Has an Important Relation to Plans to Tap Plainfield.

The Perth Amboy Railroad Company has secured a right of way from Perth Amboy to Metuchen and from Perth Amboy to Woodbridge, connecting at Metuchen with the Consolidated Traction Company. It is said that negotiations are now in progress for the acquisition of the controlling interest of the Perth Amboy Company by the Consolidated Company.

The absorption of the Perth Amboy Company would give the Consolidated Company a direct route to the Staten Island Ferry.

The officers of the Perth Amboy Railroad Company are: President, Leonard Lewisohn, president of the well known copper corporation of Lewisohn Brothers, of New York city; vice-president, C. J. Wittenberg, and secretary and treasurer, J. C. McCoy.

The fact that the Consolidated Traction Company is spreading out in the direction indicated in the above paragraphs is of importance to Plainfield in view of the prospective trolley road from this city to Metuchen. Though the latter project does not seem to be progressing rapidly at this particular time it is understood that plans are gradually shaping themselves for consummation at an opportune moment, and it is not unlikely that in the event of the Consolidated Company securing an entrance to Metuchen that the projected road to this city would soon be built.

SPILLED IN A RUNAWAY.

AN EXCITING BUT LUCKY EXPERIENCE OF E. D. BARRETT.

He Was Riding to the Borough Fire With Several Friends When His Wagon Was Upset in Turning a Corner.

When the fire broke out last Friday in the building in the rear of Dreyer's Hotel, corner of Somerset street and Lincoln place, a somewhat serious accident occurred near the hotel. Ernest D. Barrett, the plumber, was driving at a reckless speed to the scene of the fire and in his wagon there were five or six friends.

When the hotel was reached Mr. Barrett tried to turn the corner into Lincoln place, but he turned to short, and the result was that his wagon was completely wrecked and the occupants of it were thrown in all directions into the street. Those who saw the accident felt sure that someone would be killed, but fortunately everyone escaped with comparatively slight injuries.

Mr. Barrett was bruised considerably and he received several cuts. The other persons escaped with slight bruises and sprains.

As soon as the accident occurred some friends caught the horse, who was uninjured, and placed him in a nearby barn. Mr. Barrett was taken to a local physician where his injuries were properly treated.

Busy in the City Park.

Within the past few days workmen have been busy with the city park, cutting the grass, trimming up the trees, and digging the flower beds. The settees have been brought out and placed in the centre, and the park begins to be an ornament to the city.

Mrs. Wilson, of the borough, mother of former Chief Marshal Wilson, is improving from a severe illness. Her condition was not as serious as reported.

HIGH SCHOOL WON FROM RUTGERS PREP.

Lively Baseball Game at the Crescent Oval.

THE SCORE WAS 10 TO 8.

SEVERAL HUNDRED PEOPLE TURNED OUT TO WITNESS IT.

Interesting Game From the Start—Edwards and the Plainfield Infield Was Too Strong a Combination—Visitors Errors Were Costly and They Couldn't Bunch Their Hits—Fine Team Work by High School.

The faculty of being able to take advantages of the other fellows' mistakes and, incidentally, helping themselves along, gave the victory to the baseball nine of the Plainfield High School, in their opening game with the Rutgers Prep School at the Crescent Oval Saturday afternoon. The Plainfield boys won by a score of 10 to 8 and several hundred people found the game a very interesting one to watch.

It was the first chance that the Plainfield enthusiasts had of seeing the High School boys pitted against outside talent. It demonstrated the fact that they could play well together and could bat when it became necessary.

The visitors were rather demoralized in the first inning when a base on balls, singles by Radford, Millar and Craig and some costly fumbling by the Prep School infield netted four runs for Plainfield. Nobody scored again until the fifth when the visitors began to bat. A single by Kip and doubles by Little and Edgar made things lively. Then Edwards threw the ball wild to Squires and let in two more runs. A single by Colson added another. The inning ended with five for the visitors which would have been more but for a sad mistake by the umpire in calling a runner out at the plate.

Plainfield tied the score and then made five runs in the next inning on singles by Fisher and Edwards and sundry errors for the visiting infield. In the eighth and ninth innings the Rutgers team made three more runs but Edwards and the Plainfield infield held together and refused to get rattled.

Edwards pitched a good game with the exception of one wild throw. He had excellent support, Fisher at short particularly distinguishing himself.

The game was entirely free from kicking and was very interesting. The detailed score was as follows.

DRILLING THE FINEST.

Police Put Through Maneuvers Saturday Afternoon.

The last afternoon drill of the police took place Saturday afternoon in the Crescent Rink. Each year the officers are given one solid month of training and drill, usually in April. Every Saturday afternoon during this month Sergeant Kisly puts them through an hour's work, and the good results of this little training is felt all through the year.

It was expected that the members of the Council and the Mayor would be present at Saturday's drill, but the only spectators besides the Chief were Chairman Buckle, of the police committee, and Mr. Barrows. The officers appeared in full dress and made a fine appearance. Mr. Barrows took a hand in drilling them towards the last, and as he is a Seventh Regiment man he put a dash in his orders that the men could not fail to appreciate.

SAYS HELL IS DIVIDED.

Rev. H. W. McKane Makes Some Novel Claims in the Pulpit.

Rev. H. W. McKane, of the Christian church, believes that hell is divided just as the Apostle teaches us that Heaven is. He preached to his people last Sunday upon that subject, and taking the passages of Scripture that teach that there are different places in Heaven, used them to prove the same state of things to exist in the other place.

Mr. McKane believes that the very bad will receive a punishment heavier than that meted out to those who are not so deep in wickedness.

Excitment Over Appointment of Postmaster.

ALVAH CLARK RESIGNED.

AND GEORGE W. COOPER ATTEMPTS TO STEAL A MARCH.

Mr. Clark's Resignation Came Unexpected, But There Was a Suggestive Timeliness of Mr. Cooper's Application for the Appointment—Congressman Howell Induced to Have President Withhold It.

Somerville, May 1.—A fierce fight over the postmastership of Somerville has been precipitated by the unexpected resignation of Alvah A. Clark, the present Democratic postmaster, and the active candidacy of George W. Cooper for the place. Mr. Clark was appointed by Mr. Cleveland in the last year of his term. There were a number of candidates, several of whom allege that Mr. Clark had promised to use his influence in their behalf. The town was greatly surprised one morning to read the announcement that Mr. Clark had been reappointed. His term does not expire for nearly a year, and their had been no intimation of a resignation.

There had been no open canvass for the office on the Republican side until Thursday, when Mr. Cooper started with a petition for himself. It was thought that this petition was to be sent to the department to be considered with those of other candidates, but Friday word reached here that Mr. Cooper's petition and Mr. Clark's resignation had reached Washington by the same mail that day. Congressman Howell was in Washington and received them. His filed them at once with President McKinley's secretary, with his recommendation that Mr. Cooper be appointed.

The town was stirred over the news. It was openly charged that Mr. Clark and Mr. Cooper had worked together to accomplish Mr. Cooper's appointment, and that he was not likely to receive the place if it was left to the decision of the people. There were rumors of all sorts of deals. Republicans were particularly indignant, because they alleged that a Democratic leader was trying to dictate who his Republican successor should be, and they resented such interference.

Friends of opposition candidates hurried to New Brunswick and conferred with Congressman Howell, who had just arrived from Washington. They presented the matter in such strong terms that the Congressman consented to withdraw his recommendation and sent word to Washington at once. There is great indignation here against Mr. Cooper among many Republicans. For it probable that Mr. Clark's resignation will not be acted upon until the matter has been fixed up here.

CARTRIDGE EXPLODED.

Veteran of the Spanish War Had His Face Filled With Powder.

Thomas Welch was a gunner in the Sixth United States Artillery during the Spanish-American war but all his experiences there were not as exciting as the one that happened to him Saturday afternoon, when he nearly lost his eyesight by the premature exploding of a cartridge and incidentally nearly shot George Gould in the back.

Welch lives on Madison avenue. Recently, since his honorable discharge from the army, he has been in Gould's bicycle store and repair shop on Park avenue. Saturday afternoon he was there repairing a rifle. He was adjusting the breech mechanism and had placed a loaded cartridge in position. When he closed the breech, the cartridge exploded, blowing his eyes and face full of powder. The bullet whizzed past Gould who was in the front part of the store, struck the wall and fell at Gould's feet.

While Welch's injuries are painful, they are not of a very serious nature and will not injure his eyesight. The escape was entirely too close for enjoyment, however.

ANOTHER BIG CORDAGE PLANT.

Largest in the World, it is Said, Will be in Elizabeth.

Elizabeth, May 1.—Word was received here yesterday that the directors of the National Cordage Company held a meeting Wednesday night in New York city and decided to build on the company's land in Elizabeth avenue, in this city, what they say will be the largest cordage works in the world. The site will be where the former cordage plant of the company destroyed by fire in 1891 was located.

The plans of the immense structure were exhibited, it is said, and were approved by the company's managers.

Miss Thorn, of East Third street, has returned from a visit with relatives in Brooklyn.

Miss Polhemus, of East Millstone, has returned home after a short visit with Plainfield friends.

SOMERSET HOTEL WAS THREATENED BY FIRE.

Flames Broke Out in the Barn a Second Time.

OF AN INCENDIARY ORIGIN.

APPEAL TO JURY INTERRUPTED TO GIVE THE ALARM.

Lawyer Swackhamer Noticed the Flames in the Midst of His Summing Up to the Jury—Building Owned by Mrs. R. A. Boyce—She Offers $200 Reward for Detection of the Guilty Party.

Three fires in the borough in one day is something that rarely happens, but such was the case Friday. Friday morning a fire broke out in the apartments over Drake & Mundy's butcher shop on Somerset street. Early in the afternoon another fire was discovered in the hotel sheds in the rear of the Somerset Hotel, corner of Lincoln place and Somerset street. It was reported that some small boys were playing about the sheds and barn and had started a small fire that was discovered and extinguished just in time to save the buildings. This fire was supposed to have been put out, and Chief Fairchild informed a Press representative that it was.

Another fire broke out in the barn in the rear of the hotel about 6 o'clock last Friday, and this time the barn and sheds were completely gutted and rendered practically useless. The fire seems to have started in the hay loft of the barn, and at the time a case was being tried in the hotel. While Lawyer Swackhamer was talking to the jury he noticed a volume of smoke arising in the rear of the hotel and he gave the alarm. In a few minutes an alarm was sent in from Box 143 corner of Manning avenue and Somerset street, from which box the other two alarms were given.

People hastened to the scene of the fire and the buildings by this time was wrapped in flames that were sweeping toward the hotel. At one time it was feared that the hotel might go, but the quick arrival of the firemen prevented this and at the same time confined the fire to the burning buildings, which was done by hard work. Several lines of hose were laid and water was thrown from the hydrant at the side. There was no live stock in the buildings, and only a few wagons. There was also a quantity of hay and straw in the upper part of the barn.

Mrs. R. A. Boyce is owner of the buildings and there was an insurance of $600 on them. The general belief is that the fire was of incendiary origin, and Mrs. Boyce, in another part of The Press, offers a reward of $50 for the arrest and conviction of the person or persons who set fire to the buildings, and it is hoped that the guilty parties will be caught.

Great credit is due the firemen for the way in which they handled the fire and saved the adjoining buildings that are of more value.

At this fire as in the case of the other two the apparatus was taken out of the engine house by hand, the team of horses being out of the house.

WILLIAM R. MOORE SUCCUMBS TO COMPLICATION OF DISEASES.

He Was Born in Mt. Horeb, But Went West Where He Enlisted for Service in Civil War—Prominent G. A. R. Man.

The death of another of Plainfield's oldest citizens occurred Saturday afternoon when William R. Moore, of New street, passed away after a long illness from a complication of diseases.

Mr. Moore was born at Mt. Horeb and was sixty three years of age. When a young man he moved to Verdon, Ill., and from that place he enlisted in Co. After that he moved back to this State and took up his residence in Plainfield, where he has lived for thirty-four years.

By trade he was a mason. He was married in 1864. His wife and two children, Mrs. Isaac N. Wyckoff, of this city, and Willis Moore, of Newark, survive him, also a grandson, Roy Wyckoff.

CLUB WOMEN APPEAR IN WAX WORKS SHOW

Eleventh Anniversary of the Monday Afternoon Club.

HISTORICAL PERSONAGES.

PERIOD FROM 1558 TO 1660 WAS SHOWN WITH CHARACTERS.

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall Acted as Mrs. Jarley-Ward—The Various Characters Were Portrayed in a Pleasing Manner—Large and Fashionable Audience Present—Supper was Served Later.

Every April 27th the Monday Afternoon Club celebrates its anniversary in a way to make it long remembered by the members and their friends. Thursday night another birthday, the eleventh, came around, and this was observed in an elaborate entertainment at the Casino, when "Mrs. Jarley-Ward's New Wax Works Show" was presented.

The period shown was that from the reign of Queen Elizabeth to the accession of Charles II. from 1558 to 1660. During the year the members of the club have been studying the events of this period, so the selection was a pertinent one.

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall was Mrs. Jarley Ward. She wore her grandmother's dress, which is 75 years old. It was an embroidered strawberry colored China crepe. There was also the crossed handkerchief, fastened at the throat with a brooch, bearing a portrait supposed to be that of the late Mr. Jarley.

Her two assistants were Eugene Hatch and Mr. Hall. Mr. Hatch wore a Lord Fauntleroy suit and Mr. Hall, who was supposed to have just arrived home from Manila, was attired in white trousers and vest, topped off by a red turban.

The characters were well taken and the ladies who took life parts deserve much credit. Their costumes were the cause of much favorable comment.

The first figure was that of Queen Bess dancing before the Spanish Ambassador. The character was represented by Mrs. Charles Reed, in a dark blue and black silk, with a magnificent stomacher of gold. There were brilliant gems in her hair and over her was the conventional black veil. The traditional ruff was about her neck.

The next was Mrs. W. L. C Glenny as the "troublesome witch" on her way from Plymouth to Salem. Mrs. Glenny had on the witch cap, with its pointed crown, a hump on her back, and rode a broomstick.

In red cardinal robe and cap was Mrs. Samuel McCutchen as Cardinal Woolsey about to lose his power at the court of King Henry. In the next scene John Hall as Sir Walter Raleigh, in the yellow and black costume of his period, was seen throwing down his cloak for Queen Elizabeth to walk upon. Miss Elizabeth Stewart was Queen Bess, and in a garnet colored bodice and pink silk skirt, with white brocade panels, looked a vision of loveliness.

The most amusing scene was Charles Stewart escaping from England on a bicycle. Miss Shrieve was Charles Stewart, who was supposed to have made his escape in female disguise. She wore a sword and crown, and her face was hidden in the depths of a big sun bonnet.

The last was called the "six ages of woman." Mrs. Stephen Haff was considered the best as a baby. The school girl was Mrs. Eugene Martin, Mrs. William M. Sullman sat in state as a lady love, gorgeous in a costume of organdie muslin and lace. Mrs. Gibbs, of Fanwood, made a pretty Red Cross nurse. As judge Miss Elvira Kenyon was stern in black robe and powdered wig. In the last age Mrs. J. M. Whiton, as club president, in an up-to-date tailor made gown, with high collar and mannish hat, pounding on the table with a gavel, called the audiences back to present times again.

At the conclusion all the figures were brought upon the stage and wound up for a finale. The committee in charge of the entertainment consisted of Miss Emily Tracy, Mrs. Eugene Hatch and Mrs. Albert Atterbury.

Miss Ada Marsh furnish the music, a very necessary accompaniment. In the absence of the president, Mrs. E. C. Perkins, Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, first vice-president, took her place.

The club members invited their friends to a supper after the entertainment, which was served in the Casino. The decorations were pretty, palms, plants and flowers being scattered profusely about.

Surprised Her on Her Birthday

Mrs. Wm. Thompson, of Liberty street, celebrated the anniversary of her birthday Friday, and in honor of the event a large number of her friends gave her a surprise party last evening under the direction of Mrs. Howard Thompson, who arranged the affair. During the evening there was a phonograph entertainment, dancing, the playing of games, and at a late hour a bountiful supper was served.

PLANTED AN OAK TREE.

HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS OBSERVED ARBOR DAY.

Pretty Little Ceremony in Yard of the Stillman School—President Wm. A. Fisher, of the Class, Dedicated it.

Arbor Day was observed at the Plainfield High School last Friday with special exercises and the planting of an oak tree by the members of the Senior class. The programme of the exercises, as published in yesterday's Daily Press, was followed. Then the pupils and visitors were invited to adjourn to the girls' yard where the tree-planting was to take place.

After a short address by Superintendent H. M. Maxson, the tree was placed in position while the Seniors sang a round in which the parts were "Arbor Day, Pine Oak, Plainfield High, '99. William A. Fisher, president of the class, made a short dedicatory speech and then the roots of the tree were covered, each Senior adding a handful of earth. It was planted by Mr. Udall.

The class prophecy was read by Miss Helen Lovell. Then followed the class song, "Neath the Oak," adapted by Miss Angie Kuhl for the occasion. The '99 yell and the High School yell ended the dedication.

There were twenty-one in the Senior class. Most of the young women were gowned in white, trimmed with red. A high class banner in the class colors, red and white, formed a background about which the class grouped.

DONE "IN HIS NAME."

Tenth Anniversary of the Whatsoever Circle of King's Daughters Celebrated.

To celebrated their tenth anniversary the What-so-ever Circle of King's Daugters of the Park Avenue Baptist church gave a reception Thursday in the chapel.

In the way of entertainment there were musical selections and recitations. Miss Carrie Dunham, the secretary, read a short history of the circle from the time it was organized ten years ago to the present.

A piano duet was rendered by Miss May and Miss Essie Thompson. There were recitations by Miss Euphemia Demarest; vocal solos by Miss Elma Bunyon and Thomas A. Cuming; a piano solo by Harry Smalley, a young musician, but one who surprised many there with his ability, and selections by the orchestra.

This orchestra was composed of the members of the circle, and although their selections were played on combs the music was as much enjoyed as though it was the melody drawn from harps and violins. Clarence Mills on the violin accompanied Mr. Cuming in his solo.

AN OLD RESIDENT DEAD.

A Combination of Grip, Rheumatism and Paralysis Ended His Life.

Another death has occurred among the old citizens of Plainfield in the person of John J. Sharp, of 442 West Sixth street, who passed away at 7:30 o'clock last Saturday. Mr. Sharp had been ill but three weeks. First he had an attack of grip, then muscular rheumatism and lastly a slight attack of paralysis, which caused his death.

Mr. Sharp was a blacksmith by trade. He was born in Reading Township, Hunterdon county, this State, and moved to this city in 1880. He first opened a shop on West Sixth street, where Adam Blair's livery stable now is, but later moved to another part of town.

Besides the widow, Mr. Sharp leaves seven children, Mrs. R. P. River, of Newark, Mrs. N. Y. Hull, of New York, Mrs. S. C. White, of Newark, John B. Sharp, of Staten Island, and Miss Minnie Sharp, Miss Gertrude Sharp and William B. Sharp, of Plainfield.

SAENGERBUNDS HAVE GOT TO HAVE MORE ROOM.

MUCH DISCUSSION OVER PLANS.

Some of the Members Want the Society to Sell Present Building and Put Up a New One.

The members of the Saengerbund met last Thursday in special session to consider the advisability of enlarging their hall on Somerset street, and extending it in the rear a distance of fifty feet. The meeting was a lively one and it was nearly 1 o'clock this morning when it adjourned.

Some of the members wanted to sell the present hall and buy a new and large place, while others wanted to expend a small amount of money to improve the hall. After a great deal of talk the members finally agreed to put the plans out and ascertain from contractors just what it will cost to make the improvements.

RODE HORSEBACK THROUGH PALESTINE.

Interesting Experience of the Honeyman Tourists.

DR. RICHARDS' ENDURANCE.

COVERED 200 MILES IN THE SADDLE IN SEVEN DAYS.

Dean Rodman and Messrs. Estil and Honeyman Came Near Succumbing From Exhaustion, But Soon Recovered After Their Arrival at Haifa—Dr. Richards Preached at Nazareth.

Advices from the Honeyman party from Beyrout state that the camping tour through Palestine was accomplished without accident and, though the first two days were stormy, no one suffered except from fatigue.

Dr. Richards carried off the honors as to endurance, with Mrs. Foster of his congregation a close second. Dean Rodman, Mr. Estil and Mr. Heyman nearly succumbed under the strain of heat and seven or eight hours a day in the saddle, especially when the way was through dry beds of streams full of boulders and over plains nearly red hot and with no breath of air.

The journey of two hundred miles was made in the saddle in seven days. But all were well and fresh the day after arrival at Haifa and would not have given up their delightful camp experiences and views of Samaria and Galilee for a large sum.

The itinerary, at last accounts, was being strictly followed. At Nazareth, when in camp, Dr. Richards preached to the party on "The Silence of Jesus when at Nazareth between twelve and thirty years of age."

Dean Rodman is reported as having accomplished wonders in endurance for one of his age, and as being very joyous.

HAD BOTH ARMS BURNED.

THREATENING FIRE IN FLAT OCCUPIED BY MRS. PARKER.

She Attempted to Strike a Match and the Head Flew Off and Ignited the Fringe of a Sofa in the Room.

The lighting of a match came very near resulting in a very serious consequence in the flat of Mrs. Parker, over the plumbing establishment of E. D. Barrett, 148 East Fifth street, shortly after midnight, Friday night. Mrs. Parker lighted a match and the head flew off and set fire to the fringe of the sofa, closely. There was bedding on the sofa which blazed up and threatened the building with destruction.

Mrs. Parker screamed "fire" and then brought water from the bathroom and attempted to put out the fire. She had the fire under control when James Babbitt, who lives in the rear of the property, sent in an alarm from box No. 25.

The fire department responded promptly and the remaining blaze was put out with an extinguisher. Mrs. Parker had both arms burned in her efforts to put out the flames.

Her loss will reach nearly $50, all of which is covered by insurance. The damage to the building is slight and is also covered by insurance. The alarm was sent in at 12:26.

SUMMIT'S COMMON COUNCIL.

It Will Ask for the Appointment of an Excise Board.

The Summit Common Council has unanimously decided to request the Union County Court to appoint three excise commissioners for the city, to have full control of granting liquor licenses. Councilman Buckley was appointed chairman of the sewerage and drainage committee, and a bicycle ordinance was referred to the law and ordinance committee, as was also one regulating the police force.

The latter fixes the salary of the captain of police at $60 a month and of patrolmen at $50 a month. The Mayor is given exclusive control of the police, with power to appoint and remove subject to the Council's approval.

A Big Sunday-school.

The officers and teachers of the Sunday-school of Trinity Reformed church met last Thursday in a regular business session to talk over matters pertaining to the general welfare of the school. The business was of a routine nature and nothing of any great importance was considered. A report was read showing that there are 435 members of the school, which includes officers, teachers and scholars.

MOST BARE FACED FRAUD

BOGUS INTERNAL REVENUE STAMPS FOR CIGARS ARE FOUND.

Deputy Revenue Inspector VanVoorhis Finds Jacobs' Counterfeits in Great Numbers, but None in Plainfield.

Deputy Internal Revenue Collector George E. VanVoorhis, for the district covering Union and Middlesex counties, has discovered quantities of the counterfeited cigar stamps said to have been manufactured by William M. Jacobs and confederates, and has seized about 12,000 of the cigars in the boxes thus stamped.

So far none of the bad paper has been found in Plainfield, but in other sections of his district Mr. VanVoorhis is making discoveries. He confiscated 2,150 cigars in Rahway, and 9,600 cigars in New Brunswick.

The dealers from whom the seizures were made were ignorant of the fraud against the government, and notwithstanding the vigilance of the laws governing the dealing in tobacco, there was on the boxes containing the cigars, on which no duty had been paid, a notice to this effect:

"The manufacturer of these cigars herein contained has complied with all the requirements of law. Every person is cautioned not to use either this box for cigars again, or the stamps thereon again, nor to remove the contents of this box without destroying said stamp, under the penalties provided in such case."

The use of this notice is probably the most barefaced offense against the revenue laws of the United States and against the rights and privileges of the legitimate manufacturers that the counterfeiters have dared to perpetrate, and the probabilities are that their punishment will be the more severe as the result of this discovery.

CHANGES IN BOROUGH SCHOOLS

Six Classes Are Transferred to the New Building.

Monday last six classes from the Borough Public High School were transferred to the new school at the corner of Watchung and Mountain avenues. Owing to the fact that several changes in the High School had to be made last week the classes were not transferred. Principal Wightman has just completed a change in the top floor of the High School which presents a chapel appearance, and after the six classes are removed the additional room gained will be used as a reading room. There is considerable work attached to the change, but when completed it will be a great relief to the instructors who have been handicapped by an overcrowded condition.

To Reconsider the Matter

The question of locating a private drain in the upper part of the borough as proposed by A. I. Smalley, for the purpose of draining surface water from surrounding cellars, will be brought up at the next regular meeting of the Borough Council on Friday evening, May 5th, in an amended form. It will no doubt be satisfactory to all parties concerned. There is a disposition to grant this privilege to Mr. Smalley, and hence a reconsideration of the matter.

Insurance Settled.

The insurance companies have satisfactorily settled the loss for the fire that distroyed the contents of the Philadelphia Candy Store, West Front street, with John Mantika and Company. The loss on the stock and fixtures was fixed at $641.64, and the insurance companies settled for that amount. William Stevens represented the proprietors of the store in the settlement. The loss on the building has not yet been settled.

Could Not Agree.

A suit to compel payment for work done as a surveyor and civil engineer was brought by F. A. Dunham, through Ephriam M. Vail, to whom he assigned the claim, Friday, against Frank W. Miles. The case was tried before Justice Smalley and a jury of twelve men, who could not agree upon a verdict, and the case will have to be tried again.

Extending Their Mains.

The Plainfield Water Supply Company is now engaged in extending their mains on South avenue so as to locate two additional fire hydrants along that thoroughfare. Steady progress is being made by the company in laying mains for their new standpipe on the mountains.

Plenty of Work.

The wave of prosperity has struck this city and The Pond Tool Works is feeling its effects. There is plenty of work on hand and more help has been secured.

SPREADING THE GOSPEL.

THAT IS WHAT KING'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY CIRCLE DOES.

Third Anniversary of the Society Held in Warren Chapel Last Evening—A Letter Read From Miss Rachel Maier.

The third anniversary of the King's Foreign Missionary Circle of Warren chapel was celebrated last Thursday at the chapel. Rev. J. O. McKelvey, pastor of the chapel, presided. He made a few introductory remarks commending the members of the circle on the completion of their third year. He spoke in a congratulatory manner and told of the work that the members are doing for foreign missions.

After Mr. McKelvey's remarks there was a piano solo by Miss Dewey. A pleasant feature was the reading by Miss Mary Maier of a letter from the president of the Circle, Miss Rachel Maier, who is a missionary in Africa.

After the reading of the letter an enjoyable vocal solo was rendered by Edson Martin, accompanied by Mrs. J. O. McKelvey. Mr. McKelvey then introduced Rev. Dr. Main, pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, who gave a talk on foreign mission work.

The concluding numbers on the programme included a song by Ada Thompson, a recitation by Helen Woolley and a piano solo by Miss Dewey, after which refreshments were served in abundance by a committee consisting of Mrs. Edward Bliss, Miss Randolph, Miss Wilson, Mrs. Drake, Miss Sowden, Miss Hattie Taynor and Mrs. Louis Mowhring.

Mrs. L. C. Ely had full charge of the literary part of the affair, and Miss Maier assisted in a general way. The Circle now numbers 20 active and 30 honorary members. During the past year two barrels valued at $40 have been sent to foreign fields and $22 in cash. In all about $75 has been contributed. At present a Scripture quilt is being made to be sent away. The Circle is also supporting several children in Africa.

CHILDREN WITH MATCHES.

They Found a Combination That Made a Lively Time For Borough Firemen.

Children playing with matches is a bed room at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Steiner, on Somerset street, over Mundy & Drake's butcher shop, called the fire department out last Friday at 10 o'clock. The fire damaged to more or less extent matting, furniture, woodwork, clothing, carpets, etc., and owing to the room being quite small the firemen had difficulty in fighting the fire. It was finally put out with extinguishers.

The alarm of fire was sent in from box No. 142, corner of Manning avenue and Somerset street by Chas. Stahl, and the firemen were quick to respond. If they had been obliged to go much further a serious fire would have resulted.

Mrs. Steiner fought the fire bravely until the firemen arrived and in so doing she burned her arms quite badly and the burns cause intense suffering. She rescued her children just in time to save them from receiving serious burns and probably fatal injuries. There is no insurance on the contents of the house, but the building is insured.

FUNERAL OF GUSTAVE GROTMAN.

Attended by Lodge Members and Fellow Workmen From Ponds.

The funeral services of the late Gustav Grotman were held last Saturday at 2 o'clock from the German Lutheran church on Grove street and Rev. Mr. Eyme, the pastor, officiated. There were present members of Central Lodge, A. O. U. W., and Court Plainfield, I. O. O. F., while there was also a delegation of fellow workmen from the Pond Machine Tool Works. Representatives from the organizations served as pallbearers and the members escorted the remains as far as the Park Avenue Baptist church, after which the cortege proceeded to Hillside Cemetery, where the interment was made.

The floral tributes consisted of pillows and wreaths from the Workmen and Foresters and a pillow from the family. On each their were appropriate inscriptions.

New Type of High-Speed Engine.

The American Engine Company, of Bound Brook, of which F. H. Ball, of Myrtle avenue, is one of the prominent officials and F. O. Ball, of Mercer avenue, superintendent, has just completed a duplex compound stationary engine. It is a new type of high-speed engine and has two cylinders, one above the other, drawing to the same crosshead. It will be exhibited at the coming electrical exhibition at New York, this spring.

An Informal Affair.

The regular semi-monthly dance of the Plainfield Catholic Club was held in the clubhouse last Thursday. The young people turned out well and the informal affair proved a very successful one. It was arranged by the house committee. Prof. O'Reilly furnished the music.

APPLICATIONS FOR LICENSES REFUSED.

Strong Remonstrances Presented to the Court.

DECIDED THIS MORNING.

ARGUMENT MADE FOR JAS. LOUGHLIN BY R. M. CLARK.

W. K. McClure, Representing James Sisser, Who Wanted a Saloon License, Withdrew the Application—Baldwin Boys Sentenced to Pay Costs—Horse Thief Sentenced to Six Years.

The Somerset County Court in session at Somerville Friday morning was occupied with a number of cases of interest to Plainfielders. Judge Bartine was on the bench.

One of the important cases was that of the application of James Loughlin for a liquor license at Mountainside Grove. He was represented by Lawyer R. M. Clark. He read several letters, including one from John Adelman, superintendet of the trolley road, in which the alleged advantages of a licensed place in th mountain near the end of the trolley were set forth. On the other hand Murphy & Blatz, representing the people who remonstrated against the granting of the license, told the court in a plain manner of the evils that would come with the granting of the license. Judge Bartine, after hearing both sides, refused to grant the license.

In the case of Mr. Sisser, of Raritan, applying for a license for Charles Bock's place on Somerset street, Murphy & Blatz again represented those remonstrated, and were successful in defeating the license. The application was finally withdrawn by W. K. McClure, who represented the applicant.

In the case of George Baldwin, Augustus Baldwin and Wm. Hazlefelder, charged with trespassing on the Corby farm, Murphy & Blatz, representing the young men, entered a plea of non vult and requested leniency. They were fined just the costs of the case.

The case of Daniel O'Connor, of the borough, charged with assault on Mr. Pearson, was represented by Murphy & Blatz, and a plea of non-vult was entered. In this case Mr. O'Connor was fined $1 and costs.

A man named VanFleet, charged with stealing a number of horses throughout the County, was sentenced to six years in State Prison. The defendant in a rape case was also called and this matter was laid over till May 11th.

WANT PLAINFIELD TRAFFIC.

Lehigh Valley Talking of Establishing an Office Here.

The Lehigh Valley Railroad Company officials are making arrangements to give the people of this city and vicinity better facilities for using their road. They are now considering strongly the advisability of establishing a ticket office in this city, possibly on Front street, where tickets for any station on their road can be purchased.

They also have under consideration some sort of a plan to transfer their patrons back and forth between this city and South Plainfield. The present method is slow and tiresome and cannot always be depended upon. Recently an official of the road was in this city getting points which will be used in making several proposed improvements.

Their Last Gathering.

The Tuesday Evening Euchre Club were entertained last Thursday by Mr. and Mrs. William N. Tier, of Bank place. This was the last meeting of the club for this season. During the evening there was vocal and instrumental music, which was in charge of Benj. LaVere and Edward Clark. Miss Charlotte Messersmith and Miss Clara Williams were awarded the first and second prizes for the women, while the first and second for the men were won by Theodore Mantz and Fred Boss.

Cars Jumped a Crossing.

Three goodsh cars on the main line of the Jersey Central jumped the track at 8 o'clock Friday night and one of them plunged into Henry Leahy's greenhouse, in East Broad street, Elizabeth, whose plant adjourns the railroad tracks. The greenhouse was wrecked and Leahy's damage is fully $1,000. No one was hurt. The cars were empty. Leahy and his clerks were badly scared.

Powerful Engines.

It is said that the two new engines on the Central Railroad can draw over 200 empty cars and can run from Hampton Junction to Jersey City, a distance of 80 miles, without taking water. With these exceptions they are the strongest locomotives ever built.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

New Telephone Company.

There is a rumor afloat in the borough that a new telephone company is soon to locate in that place and that more advantageous terms will be granted boroughites than those now given by the local company.

PAID CALL FIREMEN ARE NOW ASSURED.

Council Adopts Ordinance Reorganizing the Department.

MR. HETFIELD OPPOSED IT.

FIRST WARD COUNCILMAN TRIED TO HAVE ACTION POSTPONED.

His Efforts Were Fruitless, But They Stirred Up Considerable Discussion in Opposition Was Not Expected—Corporation Counsel Marsh Communicated With Council About City Affairs.

There were unexpected developments in store for the members of the Common Council at the regular May meeting held Monday evening. In the absence of City Clerk MacMurray, who was detained on account of illness, the place was filled by George B. Wean, the stenographer.

It is said that it is the unexpected that always happens and in this case it proved to be the new fire ordinance. While no one was looking for any great opposition, it appeared through Mr. Hetfield and a lengthy discussion followed. The business of the evening was apparently concluded and the auditor's report had been called for and made. Mr. Hetfield moved for an adjournment, when Mr. Coriell happened to think that the fire ordinance was due, and, as he intended to call it up on its third reading, he asked for that privilege inasmuch as he had forgotten to do so at the proper time.

Mr. VanHerwerden asked a question as to whether it granted any additional privileges to exempt firemen, and when he was told that it did not, Mr. Hetfield took the floor and made a few remarks. He said that the ordinance had been drafted to keep in power certain officials, and he advised the Council to go slow about adopting it. He thought it should not be a question of politics or friendship, but inasmuch as the ordinance did not place any limit on ability, age, etc., he thought there should be some restrictive measures.

He stated that during the past few years the fire insurance premiums had increased and yet he could not explain this when the city is paying so much for the fire department. Mr. Hetfield then moved that action be postponed till the next meeting.

Mr. Coriell, chairman of the fire committee, said that it was necessary to start the new measures at once. He thought the only way to judge was by results and no one would say the officers are inefficient. He believed that the officers were competent and if any change should be made now it would make a great deal of trouble. He stated further that if Mr. Hetfield had any objections he should have presented them while the committee was discussing the ordinance.

Mr. Buckje coincided with Mr. Coriell. He believed in considering the merits of the men. There are persons who can find fault with Chief Doane, but he is honest, conscientious and knows his business.

Mr. Hetfield took exception to Mr. Coriell's action and words and said that he resorted to personality and did not argue to the point. He did not consider that it was Mr. Coriell's business whether he remained at a meeting, came to a meeting or stayed at home. He said that last year the ordinance came up and he objected for the reason that he did not think the people's money should be voted away to pay for the advertising of an ordinance when an almost identical ordinance was on the books. There were many objections to the ordinance but the most important one is that which provides life tenure. "You will probably adopt the ordinance, but go with my vote," continued Mr. Hetfield.

After a little further discussion on the subject the ordinance was finally adopted.

The next important matter received was the report from Corporation Counsel Marsh regarding several cases in the courts wherein Plainfield is interested. The first item was that regarding the confirmation of the report of the Martin Act Commissioners April 24th. Under the provisions of this law sixty days is given after confirmation to settle, and if taxes are not paid within six month property can be sold. Mr. Marsh suggested that those affected by the Act be notified in a proper manner. He also mentioned the fact that the bills submitted to the court by the commissioners for their work, $1,500 each, were received, but the court was desirous that the Council's views in the matter should be received before allowing the same, and at the suggestion of the court the Council adopted a resolution postponing action for two weeks from today.

Mr. Marsh reported on the case of the city against Rev. P. S. Gibson. He said that a judgment of $300 had been secured, and that Spencer Conway, Mr. Gibson's bondsman, had turned all of his property over to his wife. Mr. Marsh asked for instructions as to whether the city desires to proceed against Mr. Conway or try and settle with him for the costs of the case.

Mr. Leifke, chairman of the license committee, reported favorably on the application for a transfer of Martin Kane's license to Hugo Kurzhals, but Lawyer Robert M. Clark, representing Patrolman Totten, asked the Council to postpone action on the license until after the charge against Mr. Totten was investigated and settled. He said that Mr. Kane was Mr. Totten's main witness and being away the case could not be settled at once. The Councilmen were not favorable to the plan and they granted the transfer.

According to requests A. I. & N. B. Smalley and C. M. Meeker were given extension of time till June 15th next on their street work.

Mr. VanHerwerden called up the tax ordinance, and it was adopted on its third reading. Another resolution by the same member provided for the borrowing of $3 000 for the general fund and $3,000 for the fire fund in anticipation of the collection of taxes

Building Inspector Doane reported that during the past month twenty-one building permits were granted, and Street Commissioner Gavett reported that he had granted fifteen sewer permits.

Residents of Madison avenue petitioned the Council for an electric light to be located on their avenue between Third and Fourth street. Michael Walsh applied for a liquor license to sell at 211-213 Grant avenue. This matter was referred to the license committee.

Overseer of Poor Hansen reported that during the month there were fifteen applications for relief, ten of which were granted and four were for temporary aid. Two deaths occurred. At present there are twenty-six beneficiaries, twelve of whom are at the City Home.

After Mr. Barrows moved that when Council adjourn it be to meet Monday evening, May 15th, the Council adjourned.

MILLINERY NOTES.

Colors and Styles of Warm Weather Hats.

Fine Milan straws are again in style. The braid is used alone or combined with fancy braids of other kinds, lace braids and chips. There are very open braids, through the interstices of which are run braids of straw of a different color. Piece goods of woven straw and chip are also to be obtained, very soft and flexible, which are used for draped toques. When these goods are of an open character, they are lined with mousseline de soie of the same color as the trimming of the toque.

Tulle and mousseline hats are a feature of the new styles and are very pretty as well as being light and comfortable to wear. The great fault of many hats is their weight, which is bad for the head and the hair. A comparatively large hat of tulle or chiffon, even although covered with ruchings and puffings, is so light as to be no burden unless it is loaded down with other trimming.

Bright colors are characteristic of the prevailing millinery. Not only are the trimmings gay, but the foundation upon which the decoration is built up is often of a lively coloring, whether it be straw, crepe de chine, tulle or mousseline. Red, deep rose, green, violet and bright blue are favorite shades, and there are also golden browns, delicate grays and fawns which are extremely attractive. Fawn with gold trimmings and gray with silver trimmings are two of the fashionable combinations in delicate effects.

The hat shown in the picture is of pinkish lilac straw. It has a waved brim, under which is a ruche of tulle to match. The left side is lifted by a cluster of small pink roses with foliage, and around the brim is a drapery of mauve taffeta with groups of tucks, passing through a gold buckle at the back. At the left side is a high trimming of plaited tulle.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

BODICES.

Big Bouquets Are Worn Upon the Front of the Gown.

Light bodices are to be worn this summer. They will be made of taffeta, mousseline de soie and foulard and will be worn with separate skirts of lightweight goods like etamine, crepe de chine and mousseline de laine. Among the materials brought out for warm weather are very attractive wool and mohair grenadines in both plain and fancy weaves. They require a silk lining, as they are transparent and will compose cool and attractive gowns, especially in the light and bright colors. All the new shades are represented—a dull reddish pink, the whole gamut of blues and even the violet range, also a rather light but subdued greenish blue, which is particularly pleasing. Pearl gray or light beige grenadine over a highly colored lining has a changeable effect which is often satisfactory.

Immense bunches of violets are now worn upon the front of the bodice in the street, and the clusters are sometimes eight or nine inches across, suggesting great purple pin cushions rather than the modest and poetically retiring violet. The latest novelty is to tie a violet silk cord with tasseled ends around the stems of the flowers.

High collars continue to be ornamented with points, tabs and wings, bordered with puffings, ruches and plaitings.

The illustration given today shows a long mantle of black bengaline. A ruffle of black mousseline de soie hemmed with black silk and headed by a vine of black embroidery designs a rollingpin outline upon the skirt, and the embroidery passes up the sides of the front. The yoke is tucked, and from it depend pointed pelerine sleeves embroidered with black and terminating in triple ruffles of black mousseline bordered with satin bands. In front are revers of black satin bordered with a ruche of mousseline de soie, and the valois collar is trimmed in the same way

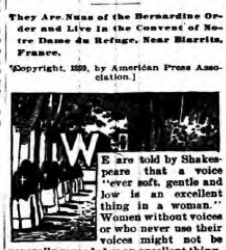
SISTERS OF SILENCE.

COMMUNITY OF WOMEN WHO NEVER USE THEIR TONGUES.

They Are Nuns of the Bernardine Order and Live in the Convent of Notre Dame du Refuge, Near Biarritz, France.

[Copyright, 1899, by American Press Association.]



"HE are told by Shakespeare that a voice low is an excellent thing in a woman." Women without voices or who never use their voices are usually not be generally regarded as an excellent thing, except by crusty old bachelors and henpecked husbands. There is, however, a community of women, who dwell under the shadows of the Pyrenees, close to the border line between France and Spain, whose voices are never heard, having achieved the rare art of continuous silence.

They are the self sacrificing and humbly devout nuns of the Bernardine order, or, as they are more generally known, the Sisters of Silence. They live close to the convent of Notre Dame du Refuge, of which institution they form a part, among the sand dunes and scattered fir trees on the coast of the bay of Biscay near Biarritz, France.

They are penitents who are bound by their order to mortify the tongue and the eye, who never speak and who never look into a human face. Here, under the hardest and strictest conditions of life, women secreted from the world seek pardon in self denial and good works. However bitter their tasks, however humble their dwelling, however lowly and unadorned their chapel, their refectory and their cellules, which almost resemble a prisoner's cell, with nothing but sand for the floor, these solitary and silent women are never idle. They till the almost barren soil and make it fruitful; they cultivate flowers and grow vegetables, which are sold in the markets of France and Spain; they make dainty lace and paint cards with exquisite taste. All these things are sold for the benefit of the convent.

As one approaches the home of solitude and silence there are to be seen in the fields and pastures, instead of rough peasants and laborers, silent women in their somber habit of black and white, hooded in black and with large white crosses on their mantles, tilling the soil, gathering in the fruit, guiding the cattle, all speechless and with eyes cast down to the ground.

When the bell on the convent clock tolls, as it does every 15 minutes, the sisters fall on their knees for a moment's silent meditation and prayer. The severity of the rules of self denial are everywhere apparent. The simplest diet prevails. In their sanded refectory at nightfall the penitents receive a piece of dry bread and a jug of cold water. Everywhere there is an utter absence of adornment.

Even the chapel is severely plain and bare. Its floor is sanded and its walls are whitewashed. Unlike the chapels of other convents, there is here no colored statues on the altar, no stained glass windows and frescoed walls, no paintings of the stations of the cross, no altar cloths, laces, light or music—nothing anywhere of brightness and cheer to relieve the austerity, dreariness and monotony of the new cells. There is but the single figure of "Our Lady of Loneliness" on the altar.

Before this altar had knelt upon the sanded floor Eugenie, then empress of France, now sorrow stricken and in exile, and prayed for strength and guidance. The former empress took an especial interest in the Sisters of Silence, and frequently visited their house of refuge. There is at Biarritz, overlooking the blue bay of Biscay, the former palace of Empress Eugenie, where she passed much time. It is now the Hotel de Palais and the temporary home of the hundreds of tourists who annually visit this popular resort.

Queen Victoria and Princess Beatrice on their frequent trips to the south of France never miss an opportunity to visit the Convent of Notre Dame du Refuge, and are greatly beloved by the silent sisters, and in turn feel a most kindly interest in these self sacrificing women.

THE COMMENCEMENT TO BE HELD THURSDAY, JUNE 22ND.

Six Bids for the Coal Supply of the Schools were Received—New Typewriters for High School—Rev. Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, President of Union Theological Seminary, to Make Address.

Superintendent Maxson reported tuition collections amounting to $383.49. The report of the medical inspectors showed that 143 more children had been vaccinated during the month.

At 7:45 o'clock the reporters and interested coal dealers were called in and the bids opened. They were for 500 tons, more or less, of Lehigh coal, tons of 2,000 pounds. They were as follows: Fred J. Harris, for stove, egg and chestnut sizes, $4.14 a ton; for pea coal, $3 88 a ton.

ODD FELLOWS EIGHTY YEARS OLD.

Anniversary Observed by Plainfield Lodge Monday Night.

The eightieth anniversary of Odd Fellowship was celebrated Monday by Queen City Lodge, 226, I. O. O. F. The principal attraction was an address on Odd Fellowship by Mr. Gilmore, a lodge man of some prominence, who has been making Plainfield his home for several weeks. Mr. Gilmore spoke of the grand work done by the organization. He also alluded to national affairs, and the hero of Manila, the anniversary of whose victory the country at large were keeping.

Mr. Gilmore was followed by B. W. Hand, who made a few remarks, and John H. Carney amused the audience with some German dialect stories. Refreshments closed the evening.

Two candidates were initiated, and there were three propositions for membership.

CYCLIST ATTACKED BY A DOG.

Mrs. U. H. Cory the Victim of a Canine on Grove Street.

A few days ago Mrs. E. H. Cory, of Somerset street, was riding her wheel on Grove street, and as she passed the residence of James F. Parker the latter's dog bounded over the hedge and began attacking Mrs. Cory. At one time he got close enough to catch hold of her dress, made of stout material, and his teeth penetrated the goods.

A complaint was made to Marshal Campbell and he said that he would inform Mr. Parker that he must keep his dog in the yard or the animal would be shot.

Coming to Plainfield to Live.

H. E. Rider has sold two of the new houses on West Sixth street, near Monroe avenue, belonging to the Plainfield Real Estate Company, one to Albert E. Park, of East Orange and one to Chas. B. Rittenhouse, of Paterson. Both gentlemen are New York business men and will take up their residence in Plainfield, with their families, this week.

Hard Chimney Fire.

A still alarm was sent in to fire department headquarters Sunday afternoon at 1:45 o'clock for a chimney fire in the Hetfield row on Arlington avenue. Assistant Chief Jennings and the No. 2 hose wagon responded. The fire was quite a lively one and took four extinguishers to put it out.

New Telephone Offices.

It is expected that the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company will take possession of their new offices on Park avenue sometime this week. The finishing touches are now being made on the new building.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I associated that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tab-ules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for them?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with these is very general. When once they are began I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them especially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her cure: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never lost my faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, always found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and find I pursue a saving of $2 a call.

A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar. At the time of this interview there were present two dealers who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case in the papers enables some other person similarly afflicted to be as benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

One dozen of the five-cent packets (or six dozen packets in a carton) can be had by mail by sending twenty-four cents (24 cents) to the Ripans Chemical Company, No. 10 Spruce street, New York City. Ripans Tabules may also be had of some druggists in bulk, at the rate of sixty cents (60 cents) for the dozen. Ripans Tabules may also be had of some druggists in bulk, at the rate of sixty cents (60 cents) for the dozen. One gross retail for six dollars (72 tabules) will be sent for five cents

KEAN'S TROLLEY PATH IS NOT AN EASY ONE.

Elizabeth Franchise is Being Held Up by President Ryan.

MAY REFUSE TO ACCEPT IT.

SENATOR SAYS IF THERE IS ANY MORE DELAY HE WILL QUIT.

It is Feared that the County Boulevard Scheme is Doomed to Defeat Owing to the Opposition Which It Has Encountered in Cranford—Elizabethport Road May Not be Built.

Elizabeth May 10.—The franchise which the Elizabeth City Council granted to Senator John Kean May 1st to build and operate a trolley road from Elizabeth to Cranford is being held up for some unknown reason by President Ryan, of the Board, and has not been submitted to the Mayor for his signature. The trolley company is angry over the strange delay in signing the ordinance. It is said that a special meeting of the City Council will be held tonight.

In the mean time the Board of Freeholders is going ahead granting concessions to the rival trolley syndicate which is coming down to Elizabeth from Plainfield and Westfield, and it looks as if the County Boulevard and trolley scheme, for which Senator Kean received a franchise and for which he is to pay the county $250,000, may never be carried out, owing to the opposition it is meeting at Cranford.

It is rumored that a new demand on the Kean Company is to be sprung at the special meeting of the City Council.

Senator Kean's representatives declare if there is any more trouble with the franchise the company will refuse to accept it, and the Elizabethport-Cranford road will not be built by them.

BISHOP ON DIVORCE.

For Illustration of His Meaning He Points to Recent Cases.

Princeton, May 10—The annual diocesan convention of the Episcopal church of New Jersey was opened at Princeton yesterday and will be continued today. Yesterday afternoon Bishop Scarborough delivered his annual address. Among other things he said:

"I believe that ironclad laws should be adopted in regard to the separation of those who have been united in marriage. It is gross immorality that divorce should be granted one month and in the next either or both of the parties concerned in the first transaction should be again joined by that holy bond, which should be regarded as eternal, but is often looked upon as a mere business contract. Illustrations of my meaning may be drawn from recent divorces granted to members of the so-called higher class of society. We must have rigid laws to erase the stigma from the fair escutcheon of our morality."

SALE NOT TALKED OF.

ANNUAL MEETING OF UNION COUNTY COUNTRY CLUB.

Six Trustees Elected by Unanimous Action—Special Meeting to be Held to Consider the Foreclosure of the Mortgage.

Nothing has yet been done regarding the sale of the property of the Union County Country Club. It was expected that the subject would be discussed at the annual meeting of the club held last Tuesday. It wasn't, however. The only business transacted was the election of six trustees. The polls were open for three hours according to the constitution. Then a short meeting was held at which the subject of the sale was entirely avoided.

There was only one ticket nominated and that ticket of six trustees was unanimously elected. The six trustees were E. H. Booth, H. G. Runkle, L. E. Waring, W. R. Cock, W. W. Smith and C. E. Brooks.

A meeting of the trustees will be held in a few days and officers for the ensuing year elected. A special meeting of the club will also be called shortly by the new president, when elected, and the action to be taken regarding the sale will then be considered.

ABOUT CHILD CULTURE

SUBJECTS TO BE DISCUSSED BY FEDERATED CLUBS.

Spring Convention to be Held at Rutherford Tomorrow—New Feature Will be the "President's Hour."

Federated Club Women of New Jersey will hold their spring meeting in Rutherford today. This will be the first time the federation has met in the northern part of the State, and the selection of a small suburb as a meeting place for all the women's clubs of the State is rather surprising, but they have the assurance of a generous entertainment and hearty welcome.

The announcement that there will be no reports submitted by the secretaries or other officials has been received with joy. It is always rather an irksome task to get up an interesting report or to listen to other people's reports. The State meeting is to be devoted to the subject of "Child Culture," Prof. Edward Howard Griggs will speak on "Child and the Race," and in the general discussion Mrs. MacClary, of Rahway, will lead.

A new feature of the convention will be "The President's Hour." During that period of time Mrs. Emily E. Williamson, the president, will talk and listen to questions. In the afternoon music and readings will be given by Mrs. A. Kitchel, and those who have prepared the programme have endeavored to place upon it "just enough, and no more."

The women are always very much fatigued after conventions. They have to discuss subjects, listen to long speeches and attend to all sorts of club matters, which task results in severe headaches, late for dinner and other little inconveniences which husbands hold against the clubs. All this is to avoided at the Rutherford meeting, and the last session is to be over in time for all the women to get back to their homes before husbands arrive from their day's toil. This is considered an important new departure.

STUDYING THE RULES.

VALUABLE DRILL THROUGH WHICH CENTRAL EMPLOYES ARE PUT.

After the Instruction is Absorbed by the Classes the Members are Given a Test—Officers Showing Their Capability.

The drill which the railroad employes of the Central from Easton to New York and from all points on the Long Branch route of the road are being given in the "Book of Rules," is something new. The rules upon which the men are being examined are not new though, but are the same old ones that have been in operation for years. To men who have been used to railroading all their lives, and who are supposed to know the regulations of the road by heart, this sudden movement on the part of the officials is a surprise, but judging by the way the men answer the simplest questions put to them it shows that it may be easy enough to act properly at the right time, yet not be able to tell why one does so and so.

Classes have been established at Jersey City, Elizabethport, Elizabeth, Somerville, Phillipsburg and at other places where railroad men are gathered, and are held at such hours as are convenient to the men. Some classes meet in the evening so as to accommodate best those men who are on duty in the day time. Others are held at 9 o'clock in the morning for the night men. Conductors, brakemen, switchmen, telegraph operators and others directly responsible for the running of trains are expected to attend these classes, and take a little instruction in them. At Jersey City two passenger coaches are used as class rooms. In one are the men who are being taught how the rules are to be interpreted; in others are the men taking an examination in what has been taught them. When they successfully pass the examination they are given a certificate which shows that they have done so, which certificate may be useful to them in a variety of ways, and ultimately lead to their promotion. The principal thing every man is first taught is the fundamental rule of the whole book: "When you are in doubt, do as your judgment dictates."

TROUBLE IN THE KITCHEN.

Cook and Waiter Aired Their Differences in City Court.

Mrs. Malinda Jackson, the colored cook at the home of Mrs. J. R. Truell, of Central avenue, and Honor Jearnaud, a young man of Hebrew descent, who waits on the table there, fought their battles over again in the City Court yesterday a. m. Jearnaud was charged by the cook with profane and indecent language and with assaulting her.

Her story was that he pestered her all day last Saturday and wound up by striking her in the face. He claimed that she had threatened him with a knife and he had merely struck her in self defence. He was represented by William G. DeMeza. His witnesses were his brother, Emil, and Mrs. Truell's grandson. Mrs. Jackson claimed that they were all in league against her. Their stories were the same however, and so the complaint against Jearnaud was dismissed.

NEW ROAD BEING BUILT.

$30,000 BEING SPENT ON IMPROVEMENTS IN SOMERSET.

Movement on Foot to Have Work Done That Will Make a Continuous Macadam Road From Morristown to Trenton.

When the work of macadamizing the old Mine Brook road from the boundary line of Somerset and Morris counties at VanDorn's mills to the north branch of the Raritan river at Far Hills, a distance of six and three-quarter miles, shall have been completed, Bernardsville will be connected with Morristown by a smooth and substantial driveway. Ground was broken March 9th, and it is expected that the work will be finished in August at a cost of $29,777.44.

A movement is on foot among many of the leading business men of Somerset county to have the macadam extended to Somerville, in event of which there will be a continuous macadamized road from Morristown to Trenton, a distance of fifty-one miles, with the exception of a stretch of eight miles south of Somerville.

SEVENTY YEARS WEDDED

LONG MARRIED BLISS OF MR AND MRS. HARVEY JOHNSON.

Anniversary Celebrated in Their Picturesque Cottage in Union Township, Where They Have Lived 60 Years.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Johnson celebrated Monday in their picturesque little cottage in Union township, their seventieth wedding anniversary. The couple have spent sixty years of their long and happy life in this old cottage, and Mr. Johnson tilled the many acres adjoining it for more than half a century.

He is now ninety-five years old, but for the last five years has not done any work, although his health has been good nearly all through his long lifetime, and he attributes this to outdoor exercise and simple, regular habits. His wife is eighty-five years old, and has been an invalid for several years.

The couple has raised a family of thirteen, of whom ten children are still living, the eldest, a daughter, being seventy-three, and a resident of Newark. She was present at the anniversary, as were the other members of the family, with their children and grandchildren. It was a very happy and joyous reunion.

PLEADED GUILTY, BUT TO BE TRIED

Ash Carter's Statement Was Not Satisfactory to the Court.

Special Officer Thomas O'Gorman has been on duty at the city dump on East Third street, near Johnston avenue, to watch the contents of the carts and see that no garbage is dumped there. Robert Randolph, a local ashcarter, offended and a warrant was consequently issued for his arrest at the request of Health Inspector Addis.

Randolph came up before City Judge Runyon yesterday. He told the Judge that the garbage had been hidden in the ash barrels so that he had not known of its existance until the officer told him about it and pointed out the garbage. Randolph pleaded guilty, but the degree of guilt he admitted did not satisfy Inspector Addis. So the case was set down for trial for Saturday morning when the man, who pleaded guilty, will be tried.

On the banner are the names of Ray Carroll, George P. Smith and F. O. Bristol, who upheld the honor of the association in the contest.

BROTHER AGAINST BROTHER.

Jacob J. Holmes Sues Henry J. Holmes to Secure a House.

Westfield May 10—Papers were filed yesterday before Justice E. B. Collins in a case of forcible entry and detainer brought by Jacob J. Holmes, of Mountainside, to regain possession of a house at Branch Mills. Sheriff Kirk served the writ on Henry J. Holmes late in the afternoon. The case will be tried before a Sheriff's jury next Monday.

Actions under the forcible entry and detainer law are rare, this being the first case in Union county in nearly twenty years. The people of Mountainside are greatly interested in the case, the litigants being brothers and well known.

CHANGE IN TAILORING FIRM.

Partnership of Cloos & Richardson Has Been Dissolved.

The partnership of Cloos & Richardson, the well known West Front street ladies' tailors, has been dissolved. George W. Richardson, the junior partner, has purchased Mr. Cloos' interest in the business and will continue the establishment on the same lines that it was run before. He has associated with him Henry Wald, who has been head designer and fitter for the National Cloak Company, of New York, for twenty-five years. The new firm have added a new branch of dressmaking, with the tailor-made finish.

Mr. Cloos leaves Plainfield to go to his old home at Havana, Cuba, to recuperate and improve his health, which is not good at present.

DESIRE TO SPREAD OUT.

PROPOSED CHANGES IN TERRITORY OF ST. ANDREW'S BROTHERHOOD.

Annual Spring Session to be Held in Elizabeth Next Week When the Matter Will Come up for Consideration.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew of the Newark Council will hold their spring session in old St. John's Episcopal church on Broad street, Elizabeth, next week. The Rev. Dr. Otis Glazebrook, chaplain of the Spanish-American war, is rector.

The first meeting will be held next Monday evening. The Elizabeth local council is desirous of enlarging its territory and organizing a council that will enable the whole diocese of New Jersey. The local council of Newark desires to do the same in regard to the whole diocese of Newark.

There is much opposition to such a movement on the part of the most prominent members of the brotherhood. The council of St. Andrew in Elizabeth includes the chapters of that city, Rahway, Westfield, Plainfield, Bound Brook and New Brunswick. The officers feel that they could not systematically cover any larger territory.

The Newark Council embraces the chapters of Newark, Jersey City, Roseville, Irvington and the Oranges.

TAX BOOKS INCORRECT.

BERNARDS TOWNSHIP AFFAIRS TO BE INVESTIGATED.

Former Tax Collector DeMun Kept a Bad Set of Books, But He is Not Thought to Have Been Dishonest.

Bernardsville, May 10.—A petition is being circulated among the residents of this place for signatures the object of which is to have the courts appoint an expert accountant to examine the books of former Tax Collector DeMun, of Bernards township, whose resignation has been received and accepted. A question has also been raised as to the correctness of the books of Assessor McCollum, and the books of both officials have been turned over to the township counsel, Lindabury, Depue & Faulks, of Newark, for examination.

The accounts of the former collector show a balance on hand of $3,160.29, with an acknowledged discrepancy of $13.43. If there is anything wrong with Mr. DeMun's books it is generally believed that the trouble is due more to incompetant bookkeeping than to dishonesty. John Day has been appointed to succeed Mr. DeMun.

CAPTURED GAME COCKS SOLD.

Fighting Birds Only Brought Fifty Cents Each at Cranford.

Cranford, May 10—Seven game cocks were sold here at auction yesterday morning by Justice of the Peace Cox on application of George Morrison, agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The birds were captured in a raid on the Union County Hotel, at Garwood, a week ago. The attendance at the sale was small. The birds sold at fifty cents each. Seven were bought by H. C. Cook, of Cranford, and one by Robert Woodruff, of Westfield.

The owners of the birds did not appear to claim them as they threatened to do.

Struck a Rusty Nail.

Frank McCormick, head bill poster for the La Pearl circus, met with a painful accident yesterday. He was posting bills on the rink building, and in jumping from one roof to the ground, came down on a rusty nail which penetrated his foot. The young man was taken to Dr. Long's where the injury was attended to. The Doctor says that with careful attention McCormick will escape lock jaw and blood poisoning.

Collector VanVoorhees discovered and confiscated two small lots of about 700 cigars. Plainfield is the next place he will visit.

Harry Page, of Elmwood place, spent Sunday in New Brunswick with friends.

Miss Grace Adams, of Netherwood, has returned from a visit in Staten Island.

OLD MAIDS MADE FUN BY THEIR DRY HUMOR

Clever Entertainment Given in Monroe Avenue Church.

THEIR WISHES GRATIFIED.

PROF. MAKEOVER WAS A MAN OF GREAT ACCOMPLISHMENTS.

Able to Take the Old Maids and Convert Them into Entertainers of Various Kinds—Entertainment Given Under the Auspices of the Epworth League—Those Who Took Characters.

"The Young Ladies' Single-Blessedness Debating Society" held an old maid's convention last Tuesday in the Monroe Avenue M. E. church under the auspices of the Epworth League. The edifice was hardly large enough to accommodate all those desiring to witness the fun.

Those taking part were supposed to be old maids, and while they did not care to enter matrimony they devoted most of their time in discussing man and his qualities.

The characters they represented are as follows:

Miss Charlotte Aldridge, president; Miss Charlotte Beekman, secretary; Mrs. N. Mansfield Smith, deaf old maid; Miss Emily Haff, fat old maid; Miss Elizabeth Foster, played piano forte; Miss Georgie Beekman, old maid with parrot; Miss Alice Foster, old maid with dog; Miss Sue Pound, old maid who reads papers on woman's rights; Miss Mary Sauzon, old maid who keeps posted on hotels and marriage statistics. Others who took part were Mrs. VanFelt, Miss Anna Stafford, Miss Whittley, the Misses Wendell, Miss Lottie Beekman, Mrs. Grannett, Miss Kittie Ackerman, while Edward Beekman took the part of Prof. Makeoves, and N. Mansfield Smith was the assistant to the professor.

There was a piano solo by Miss Lizzie Foster, followed by Miss Susie Pound reading a paper on "Woman's Rights." The club song led by Miss Haff, was pathetic, while Miss Baums was reading the marriage statistics a mouse appeared and created great excitement. This was followed with the reading of the market report, giving the names of the eligible men to marriage. Miss Georgie Beekman, chairman of the Congressional committee, read a report showing that Congress will help all old maids. Miss Laura Wendell recited a pathetic poem on "Jonah." while Mrs. VanFelt reported for the vigilant committee.

At this time Prof. Makeover and his assistant, Jonathan, appeared and promised to make the old maids over.

The various participants expressed their wishes and were put in a machine, and their desires gratified. Miss Whittley wanted to be two musicians. Theresa Walter Serrell and Lindley Hillman appeared, playing flute and violin, accompanied by Miss Florence Serrell, Miss Haff wanted to be a little girl, and little Irene Aldrich made her debut and recited a poem. Miss Anna Stafford and Mrs. VanFelt wanted to be twin musicians, followed by Miss Ida Tallamy and Miss Randolph appearing and playing a piano duet.

Miss Foster and her dog went in the machine, after which a small piece of bologna appeared. As a prima donna, Miss Griswold appeared and sang a solo accompanied by Miss Hillman. Miss Mary Pound wanted to appear as a fairy, and her wish was gratified when Miss Charlotte Messersmith appeared and sang a pleasing selection. It took two old maids to make a man, and Miss Mary Beekman and Miss Kittie Ackerman agreed to go into the machine. Bert Tallamy appeared and gave a vocal selection. Miss Aldrich wanted to appear as Tribby, and she succeeded in breaking the machine. After a recitation by Miss Georgie Beekman, the entertainment closed.

Shipyards Enlarging.

Elizabeth, May 10.—The Crescent shipyard has been enlarged and is being yet further enlarged in an effort to make adequate room for the orders on hand. The keels for two yachts have been laid in the new addition and more will follow. In some of the departments the men are working overtime, especially on the vessels being built for the United States Navy.

Growing in Membership.

Plainfield Council No. 44, Chosen Friends, received two applications for membership Tuesday. This lodge is growing fast in membership, as applications have been received for membership or there have been one or more initiations every meeting night since the first of January.

Miss French, of Brooklyn, returned home yesterday after a short visit with relatives in Washington Park.

to act on the wheel of the machine, thus revolving the fan. The blades are directed toward the operator of the machine and a constant current of cooling air is playing around the latter's face all the time that the machine is being worked.

To Make Ice Cream.

Some good points to remember in the making of ice cream are these: Milk should always be scalded or it may taste watery. If flour is used to thicken, cook in a double boiler for twenty minutes. If corn starch, cook an hour. When candied fruits are used a double amount of sugar is required. In making brick ice cream, allow two tablespoonfuls of gelatine to each quart. For ginger ice cream, use the preserved ginger. In freezing ice cream takes one-third as much salt as ice, and the ice should be on top. In packing after the freezing, leave the salt on top. Always allow the cream to stand for two or three hours before serving, as it makes it richer. Caterers in making cream for entertainments usually make it two days ahead.

Pineapple Pancake.

The Germans make a delicious pineapple pancake that is worthy of general adoption. A plain, thin pancake batter of eggs, flour and milk is made and poured into a big buttered frying pan, but enough to cover it when baking at once. As soon as the batter spreads out, cover with a layer of stewed pineapple, not too juicy, and dredge with powdered sugar. Bake pan in a hot oven, and bake for eight or ten minutes, until brown and well done. Cut the cake into triangular pieces and serve hot.

Things About the House.

After mixing a wedding or any rich fruit cake, allow it to stand three days in the refrigerator before baking. An expert in making wedding cakes always steams them first, then bakes.

Beaten biscuit dough fritters used in combination with rice or corn starch and served with lemon sauce. They may be combined also with pineapple, which furnishes the acid the bananas lack.

If grease is spilled upon the kitchen floor, do not pour hot water upon it, but cover the spot with a strong solution of unslacked lime and sal soda dissolved in cold water, and scrub vigorously with a clean scrubbing brush.

Cocoa is frequently used in place of chocolate for icing cake. Add to the white of an egg a teaspoonful of cold water two teaspoonfuls of cocoa and as much confectioners' sugar as is needed to make it of the consistency required to make it spread well.

New flatirons should be allowed to stand on the stove when hot before using in order to get off the coating of black. When they are rusted they must be cleaned with a strong soda solution, unslacked lime and sal soda dissolved in cold water, and scrub vigorously with a clean scrubbing brush.

WOMEN OF ALL LANDS

WILL MEET IN INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL AT LONDON, JUNE 27.

It Will Be the Greatest Convention of Women the World Has Ever Seen," Says Susan B. Anthony, Who Will Be There.

THE quinquennial session of the International Council of Women, which meets in London in June, will be the greatest convention of women the world has ever known." Thus declares Miss Susan B. Anthony, who, though now in her eightieth year, will soon make the ocean voyage in order to be present and greet the progressive women from various countries who will compose that remarkable body.

Miss Anthony was one of the founders of the International Council, which was organized in Washington on March 31, 1888, being the outgrowth or rather the outreaching and expansion of the National Council of Women of the United States, and formed upon substantially the same lines. It is a federation of national councils and now embraces the United States, Great Britain, France, Germany, Finland, Sweden, Canada and Holland, the latter being the last to become affiliated.

The National Council of Holland was organized last summer by Mrs. May Wright Sewall, the vice president at large of the International Council, and enjoys the special patronage of young Queen Wilhelmina.

The present officers of the International Council are the Countess of Aberdeen, Haddo House, Aberdeen, Scotland, president; Mrs. May Wright Sewall, Indianapolis, vice president; Baroness Alexandra Gripenburg, Helsingfors, Finland, treasurer; Miss Teresa F. Wilson, London, corresponding secretary, and Mme. Maria Martin, Paris, recording secretary.

It is generally understood that Mrs. Sewall will at the coming meeting be named to succeed the Countess of Aberdeen as president, the constitution providing that no person shall hold that office two terms in succession. The presidents of the several National Councils are ex officio vice presidents of the International body.

The eight affiliated National Councils will give the International Council a voting strength of only 21, including the five general officers, as each country is represented officially by the president and one delegate from the National Council. Miss Susan B. Anthony is the official delegate from the American National Council, and Mrs. St. John Gaffney of New York is its president, both of whom will be present.

While the scope and purpose of the International Council of Women are broad and comprehensive and its representation is cosmopolitan, its constitution is exceedingly brief and simple. Its first article defines its objects to be "to provide a means of communication between women's organizations in all countries" and "to provide opportunities for women to meet together from all parts of the world to confer upon questions relating to the welfare of the commonwealth and the family." Its general policy is thus defined:

"This International Council is organized in the interest of no one propaganda and has no power over its members beyond that of suggestion and sympathy. Therefore no National Council voting to become a member of the International Council shall thereby render itself liable to be interfered with in respect to its complete organic unity, independence or methods of work, or shall be committed to any principle or method of any other council or to any utterance or act of this International Council, beyond compliance with the terms of the constitution."

As yet the International Council has done little besides organize. The week's programme for the quinquennial at London will show something of the results of the federation, as it will be the first convention since the eight National Councils have been crystallized into one organization.

The programme will embrace a wide range of subjects, and the speakers will include many of the most distinguished women of the world. Among the American women who have accepted invitations to address the council are: Mrs. Sewall on "The Value of Organization as a Factor In Contemporary Social and Political Life," Miss Anthony on "Present Position of the Suffrage Question," Mrs. Gaffney on "Responsibilities of Women as Citizens," Mrs. Cynthia Westover Alden on "Journalism," Rev. Anna Shaw on "Temperance," Rev. Ida C. Hultin on "The Necessity For an Equal Moral Standard For Men and Women," Miss Octavia Williams Bates on "The Study of Law For Women," Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, Miss Florence Kelly, Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Stetson, Mrs. Elizabeth B. Grannis, Mrs. Adelaide Johnson, the sculptor, and Mrs. Julia Marlowe Taber, the actress.

These are a few of the many of our countrywomen whose voices will be heard at this great gathering of progressive, thinking women, whose purpose is the elevation of the sex, the increase and enlargement of its opportunities and privileges and the construction of new and higher ideals for the sex and the race.

There will be two large public meetings held in Queen's hall. The first, on June 27, conducted by Lady Aberdeen, will treat of "International Arbitration," and the other, under the direction of the political section, will discuss "Suffrage." The other meetings will be divided into sections for the discussion of various subjects in smaller halls.

These sections, which will be divided and subdivided according to their scope, are educational, professional, legislative, political and social. It is proposed that each section will hold two sessions daily, and at these sessions one or more short papers will be read, following which there will be free discussion. The headquarters of the council will be the Westminster town hall, where the sections will hold their daily sessions and where reception rooms will be provided for the international officers.

"The feast of reason and the flow of soul" at the quinquennial will be varied by social functions, where those in attendance will have an opportunity of becoming better acquainted with each other and of meeting many prominent people in London society. Among these social features will be a meeting on Monday afternoon, June 26, at the Westminister town hall, where the International council will receive and welcome its guests, and in the evening a reception at Stafford House, which the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland have put at the disposal of the council for the occasion. On the evening of Wednesday, June 28, Lady Battersea, who, with Lady Aberdeen and Lady Somerset, is prominently identified with the work of the British National Council of Women, will invite the delegates and speakers to Surrey House. On Saturday afternoon, July 1, the bishop of London and Mrs. Creighton will give a garden party at Fulham palace, and a similar entertainment is offered by Lady Rothschild and Mrs. Leopold de Rothschild at Gunnersbury Park, near London, on July 4.

Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch, who is the avant courier of the large delegation of Americans who will attend the meeting of the council, is already in London, arranging details for their reception and entertainment. Mrs. Blatch is a daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton. Her husband is a wealthy Englishman, who has a large estate in Huntingdonshire. Though her home is in England, she spends a portion of each year with her venerable mother in this country. She is a prominent member of the principal women's clubs of London and an intimate friend of Mrs. Sidney Webb, Mrs. Creighton and Mrs. Millicent Garrett Fawcett, with whom she is associated in many forms of philanthropic work.

Before her recent return to London, in referring to the coming International Council, Mrs. Blatch expressed her gratification that progress in American women are to have an opportunity to meet and become acquainted with the brilliant women of other countries. The American delegates and guests will be tendered a reception by Mrs. Blatch at her country seat, The Mount, at Basingstoke in Huntingdonshire.

FLOWERS OF PAPER.

HOW TO MAKE ARTIFICIAL BLOOMS WITH SIMPLE TOOLS.

Olive Harper Tells the Beginner Just What to Get and How to Set About the Work of Imitating Nature's Smiles.

We cannot all be painters, nor yet sculptors, but no one among us need despair of doing really artistic work in making paper flowers. It is a very fashionable form of art work, too, just now. Some might call it a mechanical art, but it is only mechanical as far as the cutting out of the petals of the flowers is concerned.

There is just as much room for real artistic talent in the making, choice of color and grouping of paper flowers as in painting them on canvas. Old people can achieve real delight in the work, and young folks employ their spare hours and nimble fingers with pleasure and profit.

The outfit for making paper flowers is simple and easily obtained generally at local stores. If, however, they are not supplied, they will obtain them on order. The tools or utensils are a pot of good mucilage, a hatpin, an ivory or bone paper cutter, a pair of strong scissors for cutting wires and fine one for snipping notches, etc., in tissue paper; also a bodkin instrument marked 1 in the diagram and a flat, hard cushion, like the shape marked 2. Another one like that marked 3 is useful in rounding rose petals, but it can be dispensed with. A small pair of pliers is very handy for twisting wires.

These are the tools. The supplies for the work consist of cotton batting, wire, both plain and covered with green thread, beeswax and a full line of colors and quantities of tissue paper.

After the artist—we insist that the worker in paper flowers be called that—has learned how to manage she can make her own centers for daisies, roses, poppies, etc., but at the first it is better to purchase flowers all prepared.

These supplies comprise, as I said, wire in three qualities—viz, hair wire, very fine for trailing branches, small steel wire for small blossoms, which the artist is to cover with green paper, and like wire already covered. The stamens are for roses, violets, pond lilies, poppies, buttercups, daisies of all sizes and color like nature. There are moss stems, calyxes for roses—of cloth these are—calixs for pinks, moss, rubber tubes for stems, muslin tubes also for stems, grasses, yellow cotton for pond lilies and rose centers and poppy buds.

The beginner would do well to buy sprays of the leaves of such flowers as she wishes to make, as they are more difficult to make than the flowers. There are sprays of rose leaves, three leaves each on wire in bunches of a dozen sprays, aster, daisy, pink, ivy, pond lily, fern, and, in fact, every kind of leaf, most natural and beautiful. Later the artist may take the natural flower leaf and cut out a paper one just like it and crease and vein it. The nearer the artist keeps to nature the better results will be.

Now come the tissue papers from which all these flowers are evolved. I may as well make a complete list of what is considered necessary for an outfit, together with the retail price, first saying that one sheet is about 18 inches wide by 36 long, and such a piece ought to make two dozen nice roses.

Deep, heavy jacqueminot (for roses), 15 cents; pansy, velvet, 20 cents; variegated tissue for pinks, 6 cents; light blue, 1 cent; white G. B., 1 cent; nile green, 1 cent; dark olive green, 2 cents; T. 4, for tea roses, 1 cent; purple, all shades, 1 cent; cream, 1 cent; dark and light yellows, 2 cents; poppy red, 5 cents; rose red, 3 cents; pink, all shades, 2 cents. Craped paper may be purchased ready or made by squeezing it between the hands downward and rubbing it always down. The greens in tissues are mostly of the light varieties, such as are seen on the stems of flowers, but naturally there are thicker qualities, out of which leaves are cut

There has been a demand lately for soft and tender greens to use for lamp shades, tied with shell pink ribbons.

The little hard cushion is used to mold rose petals on and to crease all sorts of leaves with their veinings and to crease chrysanthemum petals by means of pressing them with the paper knife or the regular creaser. It is hard, but soft enough to allow the proper degree of depression.

A rose is the easiest flower to make—if you have the true artistic taste which leads you to copy nature. To choose your color, have a natural rose and put pieces of crumpled tissue paper beside it until you find the exact tint, changing its position in the light until you do. One strip of paper is doubled into six folds 3 inches wide, double it so that you can cut all six together into the shape shown as No. 1 in second diagram. Then cut six more half an inch smaller and four more only 2 inches across. This makes 96 petals, enough for an ordinary rose. American Beauties, being larger, require more petals. Then take a wire and bend a loop in it where you have not made stamen and work soft a lump of yellow beeswax into the loop, flattening it on the top. Give a little yellow cotton to this and then clip fine the edges of a piece of the papers you are using and leave it fringed. Crumple this between your fingers and then wind it around the bunch of wax and cotton and press it close. Then the four smallest rounds of petals should be pushed up the stem to the wax. One petal is laid up over the top of wax, cotton and fringed paper, the next lapped over that and pressed down by the thumb, and so on until all the ten are lapped over each other. They must be squeezed until they remain there.

The next size of six rounds is put on in the same way and held closely. Before this has been done four of the center or largest petals should be laid on the cushion and rounded by pressing the round ball into each until it is hollow. Then with the paper knife take the largest part on each side and curl it a little, just as the natural leaf is. The other two large petals may be put on like the others and bent over.

The outer ones now go on and are carefully squeezed into shape. The calyx is now slipped on the wire and brought up over the wax and bent into shape, a moment's manipulation being enough, with an occasional glance at the model. A little green wax is now worked around the bottom of the calyx, as it is seen in stores. This holds all in place. Sometimes a drop of glue is needed.

The rose is finished by the hatpin. With this the crushed petals are delicately lifted and unfolded like real roses from the bud. It will be a revelation to the amateur.

Then a bud may be made, using but one-third as many petals. Two or three sprays of leaves are to be fastened to the wire stem and the bud. Then all the stems are to be wound with strips of green tissue one-eighth of an inch wide with serrated edges. These little notches represent thorns. In the next article will be further instructions.

ample means with which to gratify her tastes and ambitions in this direction, she has done much to raise the artistic standards of the city of her home, Cincinnati, and has helped many an aspiring young artist up the ladder of fame. Her patronage of art takes a practical form. The Dayton Art institute, connected with the art school in Cincinnati, founded by her father, owes its establishment mainly to the efforts of Mrs. Storer, as also does the fund for the European scholarship, offered as an incentive to students in this school.

Mrs. Storer is an amateur artist as well as a patron of art, and has produced studies on canvas and through other mediums which show decided talent. The famous Rookwood jars are decorated from her designs.

Mrs. Storer has traveled widely and has gathered in many countries rare and beautiful art treasures, among them being an extensive collection of ceramics. She is the daughter of the late Joseph Longworth, one of Cincinnati's most prominent and wealthy citizens, from whom she inherited a fortune of several millions. She is identified with many philanthropic enterprises, and there is scarcely a worthy charity within the scope of her acquaintance which does not receive her liberal support.

At the time of her marriage to Mr. Storer she was the widow of Colonel George Ward Nichols. She was a daughter who married the Marquis de Chambrun

COOKING FOR SPORT.

HOW TO MAKE A CHAFING DISH PARTY A SUCCESS.

Lucy Cleveland Suggests a Novel Way of Entertaining Your Friends For an Evening—Each Guest Should Have a Finger In the Pie.

A celebrated definition of the genus homo classifies man as a "cooking animal;" a proud title, believe me, for it differentiates mankind from Mr. Darwin's theory, as not even the climax of monkeys has been known to make fire with the topmost stick.

And it is a proud title for woman—"a cooking animal." Some of us women, we know, are all fire and tongs, 'tis true! But that's not what I mean. I am a true oriental thus far. I am a fire worshipper—of the kind on the home hearth which woman's loving little hands should tend for him who is her head.

I love a woman who smells of the lamp—the chafing dish lamp—and I believe that is the true version of "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp."

Yes; there are many opportunities for delightful home entertainments. But I have just made the acquaintance of a "new womanly party." It is going to tighten the links that bind you to your neighbor. It is going to send you far ahead on the wave of popularity. It is going to set you far ahead in the heart of your husband, your lover, your brother, for man is, too, "an eating animal."

The "new womanly party" is a chafing dish party. Now, of all methods of fun and genuine frolic give me a chafing dish party. It beats progressive euchre all to pieces, for it will include a dance, too, if you will read on to the close.

A friend of mine who recently attended a giant chafing dish party in South Africa among the Maori tribes, who were simply enjoying stewed potatoes in a tent a quarter of a mile square, erected over the funeral obsequies of their chief, tells me that at the end of their savage chafing dish party, where each knot of tribesmen made their own fire and stewed their own potatoes, at the end of it all a grand dance ensued.

And, after all, we are only veneered savages, said the New England Thoreau. How eager we are to divest ourselves of the trappings of city restraint and plunge into camp life, bathing dress existence.

Now, obey my rules for your chafing dish party and the fun at your house will be talked of all through the year. Send out your invitations two weeks ahead, so that man can look to his firearms too, for man is to take part. A man loves to help cook, if it's only the fringes and the gravies.

If you are artistic, you can "get up" your invitations in any novel, fascinating little way. I would suggest painting a chafing dish on the cards, or a lobster with its scarlet claws clasping the chafing dish legs. Underneath write "The cardinal at the feast."

Each invited guest, gentleman or lady, is taking his or her own chafing dish. The hostess supplies all the materials. On the evening of the "new woman party" spread down on the floor a linen drugget, as for dancing. Have as many little tables as you have invited guests, or a table for a lady and a gentleman. The table of "materials" is to stand handy to all. On each table the recipe to be made by that table's chafing dishes is laid. A little bell is rung at a certain moment, and the cooking is to begin.

And here comes in part of the fun, with the explosions of laughter. So much time given only for the cooking; when the little bell rings again every table must stop. A "judge" has been appointed, who must taste of each dish's contents, and who awards the first, second and third prizes—and the booby prize for the worst! Each guest must eat his own cooking, and I have laughed till the tears stood in my eyes at the results.

Of course you may have other refreshments after this, if it so pleases you. I have known pretty little aptitudes for sweet and strong things develop from this "new womanly" party, served on hot plates of the heart—and tasted at the wedding! At the dance the winner of the first prize in chafing dish excellence will lead the cotillon.

LUCY CLEVELAND.

THE TAILOR MADE GIRL.

She Is Correct If She Wears English Made Goods.

If one wishes to be right up to date in the latest styles for the street, the English tailor model gowns are undoubtedly the best and most correct. There is a certain stiffness in all English garments, and just that quality which makes all others undesirable makes the tailor suits perfection, each after its kind.

The ugly box coat is one of the coats of this season, though very few even of the smart set care to adopt it, for nothing can make its unlovely lines graceful. A few pompous society girls wear it because it is so ugly that it attracts attention, and we must admit that there are few of the Lydia Languish style of girls in these days.

I don't know when I have seen a girl blush, except with anger, and that was not exactly the tender pink, verging on to crimson, that is the proper and acknowledged tint of a genuine blush. And girls do not hang their heads any more—not they. Their chins are held out straight, and their eyes look out ahead of them in a fearless glance.

Stay! Perhaps that aggressive manner is due to the stiff collar. It comes so high under the chin and is so stiff and unbending that I shouldn't wonder if there the secret lies. It matters little, after all, for girls are as sweet as winter strained honey whatever they wear.

Still tailor made gowns and garments are more suitable than anything for the street. And so let us see what there are in that line of gowns. English tweed is a favorite material, it is just rough and coarse enough to have a decided style of its own. There is a new color in this useful stuff, a sort of brown between Havana and tan, with black threads woven diagonally through it in broken lines. The skirt has a couple of straps, ending in front with buttons of the same color. Otherwise it is untrimmed.

The jacket has the bottom strapped and stitched. It is open in front to show a fancy white or colored vest or shirt waist, according to the season. There is a wide, rounded, flat collar and revers of pure white linen duck, and this is also edged with a strap. The gloves to be worn with such a suit should be white with black stitching, and the hat should match as closely as possible. This is an easy matter since there are straws in brown and English walking shape in every color under the sun.

Another very stylish runabout is a black and white plaid cut in two pieces, so as to suit the wearer's own lines. There is a short jacket with the front closed by frogs and loops. There are pointed revers and a flat collar faced with the plaid set on in bias lines. It should be a pure linen silk suit particularly adapted to smallish sized girls. The hat may be of the mixed Japan straw in black and white, and it should be rather plainly trimmed, as the plaid is so "voyante."

An English sailor suit with an indefinable French twist to it was of pearl gray broadcloth. The skirt fitted around the hips like the proverbial glove and was untrimmed save for one row of half inch castle braid with alternate picot loops along the edges. The back closed with buttons and loops. The waist was in form of a blouse with a guimpe, and this was of white silk all over paint de venise in close design. It was arranged to close invisibly. The blouse had a revers collar in form of a scalloped berthe, edged by the braid. Three trefoil braces ornamented the front.

This peculiar shade of gray is very much liked by all Frenchwomen, so much so that it is usually spoken of as French gray. It is elegant, always in refined taste and also dressy. The less trimming put upon it the more elegant it is. White as an accessory is always beautiful and artistic. A white satin or cloth vest wrought with gold or silver soutache is beautiful with a gray gown.

Red is one of the fashionable colors and may be worn in the street as well as at home, the suitability being determined by the style of making. One shade is deep poppy red, and the other is called ox blood, though it really has more of a red brick shade to my eyes.

The aggressive red gowns are of poplin, cashmere and silk; also in a stuff not unlike loose cheviot with black figures and broken lines. Some are of veiling, and others are of the delicate soft wool barege which is so much liked just now.

There is a new fancy, perhaps it will be a short lived one and perhaps not, but it is very pretty. The dressmaker takes a bright piece of taffeta, if liked cut, so much better, and cuts a dress of it. She cuts another on exactly the same lines of fine, smooth meshed iron frame grenadine, and this is laid smoothly above the other and sewed up with it. The bottom of the skirt is trimmed with lace or perhaps very narrow ribbon quillings.

The effect of these two materials thus joined is that of a rich moire with ever shifting lights and shades, a thing to dream of, for you go to sleep in the peaceful possession of one, and to have the nightmare about, if you can't get one.

HENRIETTE ROUSSEAU.

THE HATS OF SPRING.

They Are Bowers of Blooms of Every Shape and Shade.

Suddenly the feminine world has blossomed out into beauty of flowers and all the colors that go to make up the season's millinery. While a few sample hats were shown a week ago to whet the taste for more, whole streets now are like one gorgeous bed of many colored flowers.

The hats vie with themselves are of all the brightest colors, and added to them are the flowers and the ribbons, the feathers and laces, until it seems as if a hat was the very culmination of all the loveliness of the world.

The flowers are more perfect than ever. Some of the sweet peas look as if just plucked. There are wild violets where the bunch on the hat represents the whole plant, roots, leaves, buds and blossoms, as though some rude, unholy hand had snatched it from its mold in a shady place.

There are pink May blossoms and trailing arbutus and the beautiful white swamp azalea, and these are so perfect that they seem deceptive to sense, and one imagines one smells the faint, evanescent odor of those flowers precious to all who love the woods and all that is found therein. Then there are tiny blue forgetmenots in great masses, looking as fresh and cool as if just wet with the spray of the river by whose banks they grew. Roses there are, tulips half inclosed, great velvety pansies and all the dear old field flowers gathered into "posies," such as children love.

"You can't put white and yellow and red and green and blue and pink and purple all together," one person said once. "They would look simply awful."

Now we see poppies, bluets, buttercups, daisies, violets and "pinkeyes," all gathered together with their green leaves among them, and no one shies his horses to look at them, unless it is to think of the days when he trotted over the meadow for a bouquet for mother.

The shapes of the hats are as varied as the faces they are intended to adorn. One of the cutest and perfect of all the new things was a hat with a sugar loaf crown and the back of the brim bent up and the wider front brim bent up still higher. The hat was of shirred brown tulle with beads sewed along the shirred places. The trimming consisted of very rich cream colored satin ribbon loops and two very delicate yellow capeys. There were strings of this ribbon tied in under the chin, and on the left side above the temple, to rest on the hair, was a small bunch of yellow satin buttercups. A more sedate hat was of deep prune satin braid straw. Around the crown of the hat and under the back were masses of small wood violets with scarcely any foliage. In front was a crushed rosette of ivory white velvet. Four sharp wings gave distinction—three were of the violets and one white.

While one looks well in a demure shepherdess form and another in a walking hat, still others look best in a saucy tilted affair which no one could adequately describe. The brim will be tilted at every angle and from one way other than the first intention had been. Flowers, ribbon and lace make the rest.

For a middle aged lady there was a lovely bonnet. It was of net on a lace foundation. In front was a butterfly of fine chantilly, and at the left side a dainty close bunch of forgetmenots.

This season the violets belong to the young. A couple of rich black tips stood up out of another bunch of flowers at the back. There were black velvet strings.

There was one bonnet of black lace, the brim being formed by a very full ruffle of fine chantilly. The lace ruffle was three inches around and was untrimmed. It formed a spiral some four inches high. There was no touch of color, but the effect was elegant. The pretty half moon shaped chantilly veils, with their delicate borderings and dots, are worn over all, and are very used to shade or trim small evening bonnets. Nothing could be prettier.

There are many hats which are arranged to carry out a scheme of color. For instance, here will be all gray in a dozen different shades, or browns ranging from maize to seal, or pale lilac to deep prune. Black and white continue to be very fashionable in millinery and in garments.

The tailor suit has now departed from its severe plainness, so that one may say there are three distinct styles of tailor costumes. One has the sheath skirt, flaring widely at the bottom, with a blouse jacket, worn with stitching or braid. Another has a three piece skirt, worn with or without a tunic, and the third has the regulation severity of line and finish, and with that goes the short jacket. The jacket is scarcely more than three inches longer than the waist line and usually has fly fronts. Just a plain, flat collar belongs with this and sleeves as devoid of ornament.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor

Mr. Barrows' Views.

In the Real Estate News of this week Councilman Barrows, of the Third ward, addresses a letter to Silas D. Drake over the event of the latter identifying himself with Plainfield interests. Inasmuch as Mr. Barrows is the recognized head of the Republican majority in the Common Council, and wields not a little influence in city affairs, we take pleasure in presenting his communication in full as follows:

I have noticed with pleasure your advent in our fair city, and some newspaper gossip on same. I trust that you may realize how much the true citizens of Plainfield yearns for just such hustlers as yourself, to let the outside world know that, as a city of homes, Plainfield cannot be equalled anywhere within the suburbs of New York.

No place has finer water, police, or fire protection, and this year will see the sewer and street system brought up to the highest point. Schools, both public and private, stand at the head, and crime and disorder are unknown.

If the "Board of Trade" would stop buying gold bricks concealed in silk mill plants, encourage instead of complaining about the commuter in city affairs, and realize those improvements which bear heavily now, will reap future benefits, they would see results.

If the local papers would fill New York papers with items of importance relative to the improvements and advancement of the city, instead of magnifying petty quarrels and gossip, they would attract new residents, which are the one thing necessary for the growth of any suburb.

Trusting that your efforts will meet with success, I am

Very truly yours,
Elliot T. Barrows,
Councilman 3d Ward.

New York, April 28, 1899.

What Mr. Barrows says of the natural advantages of the city is strictly true. His observations upon the silk mill venture are those induced by the sequence of events, and his solicitation for the commuter is very natural inasmuch as he is of that class himself. His optomistic view of "improvements that bear heavily now" depends entirely upon the size of respective tax bills as tending to induce others to share the same opinion.

The final comment in Mr. Barrows' letter about the local papers is entirely untrue in the inference it carries. It has been one of the ills of local newspaperdom for sometime that Mr. Barrows has been in a critical frame of mind over the ways of newspapers, his ideals being in strange contrast to what practical, everyday experience has taught is the successful and satisfactory way of conducting a newspaper. The local papers in Plainfield have no more to do with the items that appear in New York papers concerning this city that the Councilman himself does. Whatever the local newspaper workers do for the New York journals is dictated solely by what those papers want in the line of items, and this latter policy is shaped entirely by the tastes of the people who buy those papers. Inasmuch as the papers that Mr. Barrows would put the ban on have the most extensive circulation in Plainfield of any of the New York papers, we suggest that the Third ward councilman commence his good work by reforming the literary inclinations of a large number of his townsmen.

It is a matter of fact, recognized throughout New Jersey newspaper circles, that there are no papers in the State that devote the time and space to boiling their home city like the papers of Plainfield do, notwithstanding the expert opinion that the Third ward salon has advanced.

While speaking of the need of getting the good name of Plainfield before the world, Mr. Barrows' letter shows a marked inconsistency in its finish. He dates it New York. We have noticed that this is a frequent practice of Mr. Barrows when signing himself "Councilman of Third Ward." It scarcely befits the sentiments expressed by him in his letter to Mr. Drake.

State Superintendent of Public Intion Baxter is endeavoring to secure the adoption of "Bird Day" in the schools. He says, however, that it may be celebrated contemporaneously with Arbor Day. "The youth of our State," he says, "should be taught to appreciate our fathered friends and cultivate such birds." This leads the Orange Journal to say: "We agree with Superintendent Baxter that the youth of our land should be taught to appreciate the birds and should receive instruction in regard to the various species, their ways and habits. If they know more about birds and bird life they would be more anxious to protect them and prevent their destruction."

called Grain-O. It is a delicious, appetizing, nourishing food drink to take the place of coffee. Sold by grocers and liked by all who have used it because when properly prepared it tastes like the finest coffee but is free from all its injurious properties. Grain-O aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. It is not a stimulant but a health builder, and children, as well as adults, can drink it with great benefit. Costs about ¼ as much as coffee 15 and 25c.

Freight on the Trolley Roads.

Though nearly every city in which electric street railways operate have clauses in ordinances providing against the use of the trolley lines for carrying freight or express matter, the time will undoubtedly come when the roads will be put to such uses. It can be depended upon that at the opportune time local authorities will be asked to authorize changes in ordinances needed to make such traffic possible, and if there is any reluctancy on the part of the former the corporations will probably exert their usual influences with fair chances of success.

In sparsely settled districts the use of the trolley roads for the carriage of express and freight matter would undoubtedly be a great convenience to the people living along the various routes, inasmuch as the facilities afforded by steam railroads for such transportation are now accompanied with considerable delay, inconvenience and expense to the rural resident in transferring his consignments from depots to their homes. On the other hand the trolley would be able to deliver consignments almost to the very doors of the people it would serve.

It would not only be a good thing for the country resident, but an advantageous system for merchants in towns out of which trolley roads run. The opportunity to use the trolley lines for the carrying of small parcels would be a stimulate trade in the sense of making purchases more frequent and in the long run would increase the bulk of goods purchased.

Already in some cities the trolley roads are being put to such uses. For several years there has been freight and express cars run on the trolley road between Albany and Troy, and they do a very large business, and the same service has been instituted in Pittsburg recently. Whether or not the trolley companies are compelled to pay those cities anything in the way of benefits for the privilege of such a service we do not know, but it is certain that they ought to, because it means a great increase in their profits.

In a prospective editorial the Summit Record takes this view of the Republican party in Union county the coming fall: "Westfield, Plainfield and Rahway are already clamoring for a fair share of the spoils and threatening vengeance deep and terrible if Elizabeth insists on grabbing all of the offices. Sheriff Kirk's term expires this fall and several weeks ago he began the work of seeking delegates for the nomination as County Clerk. The law prohibits a Sheriff from serving two successive terms and Kirk believes that the office of County Clerk is admirably suited to him."

A law just passed in Minnesota authorizes park boards in cities to plant trees when petitioned by property owners concerned and to assess the cost, not exceeding 12 1-2 cents a front foot, on the property improved, this to include the expense of maintaining the trees for three years and replacing any that may die. The system has been tested in Minneapolis for fifteen years, and 15,000 vigorous, well protected trees along the streets prove its success. The outlay has been remarkably small.

The prompt and inspired denials that Vice-President Hobart had determined not to be a candidate for a second term has practically caused all gossip to cease in Washington respecting a running mate for President McKinley. It is now taken for granted by all that unless the Vice-President's health will not permit him to undergo the strain of an active campaign, and four more years of public life, he will be renominated. Since his serious illness the Vice-President has not given a single thought to public matters, and by advice of his physicians he will not until his health is fully restored and his vigor returned. It may be that this result will not be reached before autumn.

Where was Roger Franklin Murray when the bill slipped through the Assembly which seems likely to make the city of Plainfield liable for thousands of dollars damages because of the alleged nuisance caused by the sewer beds?—Newark News.

He was right on the spot. But a large part of Mr. Murray's energy was engaged in looking after the sins of omission instead of commission of the Legislature. Considering the fact that it would take a man with forty heads to attempt to follow all of the Legislature matter, and in view of his limitations in this respect, we think Mr. Murray did very well in Trenton the past winter.

The Elizabeth Democrats are planning for their annual clambake on the shores of the Atlantic Ocean some time during the next summer. As this year will be a lively one in the political way at the fall election the clambake ought to arouse more than ordinary interest among Union county Democrats. It is said that all the great and shining lights of Democracy of this section of the State will be present at this gathering, and that also an effort will be made to secure the attendance of William Jennings Bryan.

Collection of Martin Act Taxes.

Conservative citizens about the city are asking if it is good judgment or business policy on the part of the Common Council, in view of the universal depression in real estate values and general commercial trade, to press to a conclusion the operation of the Martin Act in collecting the delinquent taxes adjusted under that measure. The city is amply secured by the action taken thus far and can well afford to wait for a time until values improve and owners may realize from their holdings. It is a fact that the owners of real estate in this city have been compelled to bear many burdens of late, and the presence of scores of "To Let" and "For Sale" signs on residential and other property would seem to give force to this statement. It is a matter that the City Fathers should consider.

The State of Missouri has succeeded in constructing an Anti-Trust law which is apparently copper-bottomed. The Appellate Judges of the St. Louis Court of Appeals have reached a unanimous decision that under the terms of the law Trusts cannot collect money for goods sold in Missouri. This decision, if sustained, says the Philadelphia Record, will put creditor Trusts very much at the mercy of Missouri debtors is so far as relates to business already done. The Trusts will in future be compelled to either abandon their credit transactions in Missouri or do business upon a basis of honor.

Colonel Gilmore, of the Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, is spoken of as a probable choice for Colonel of the new Second Regiment in the reorganized National Guard. Colonel Lee, of the old Third Regiment, is also understood to be a candidate for the Colonelcy, but it is doubtful whether he would have much success in a contest against Colonel Gilmore, who, because of his Regular Army experience, would be looked upon as a valuable acquisition to the National Guard of the State.

While Elizabeth is maintaining the antequated volunteer esbtem of fire companies her insurance rates have dropped twenty per cent. recently. On the other hand Plainfield has taken the steps necessary for a first-class department in every respect—which, when in operation, will be the superior of any city of its size in the State—and yet Plainfielders are still obliged to pay excessively high rates for fire insurance. Why is this?

Editor Runyon offers to enlighten us as to why the Hon. Mr. Codding, of Westfield, was named for the Deputy Supreme Court Clerkship instead of some of the other numerous positions which the News man avers the Westfielder was after. If there is one thing that we like to know more than another it is the inside business of the politicians. Go ahead, Brother Runyon, and tell us your story.

A Missouri preacher has hit upon an ingenious scheme to induce the feminine members to remove their hats in church. After making the usual announcements the other Sunday he added: "My request does not apply to those whose hair might come with the hat, nor to those who might be embarrassed by a display of physical infirmities." The hats were promptly removed.

James F. Connelly has been appointed City Clerk of Newark. Besides being among the "also rans" in the late Assembly contest in Essex county, Mr. Connelly has served a term as consul in Japan, by appointment of Mr. Cleveland, and is a good Democrat all around. Mr. Connelly's appointment is in the political fitness of things.

The total output of the Klondike region for the season of 1898-99 is estimated at about $20,000,000—not more than the average capitalization of a small trust in New Jersey, observes the New York World.

It has taken a Missouri contemporary, the Jefferson City Tribune, to give us this tart definition of a trust: "The trust is the invention of the modern devil."

PASSING COMMENT.

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

While strolling along Plainfield's beautiful avenues and well-kept lawns the thought occurred to the writer that Plainfield should provide a park for those who are not blessed with the boon of sufficient area around their homes to grow a blade of grass. The plot along Prospect avenue, through which sparkling Cedar brook meanders, would, with little labor, make a most attractive feature to our city, and prove a blessing to our toiling citizens. Let the City Fathers look into this matter.

DeWolf Hopper is in New York again. "The Charlatan" has some new aspects and a brisker movement at the Fifth Avenue. The long comedian is playing his part in the manner of an individual entertainer, which is the way that his audience likes to have him do it, with a plenty of his own peculiar and familiar nonsense. His new companions in several of the roles are acceptable, and the entertainment is altogether blithesome.

* * * * * *

Every energy is bent in these early summer days to make the entertainments at the Proctor continuous houses more and more enjoyable. With this determination in mind, the programmes are compiled with much care and the vaudeville features are selected first, for their pre-eminence refinement and after that, for their effervescent amusement qualifications. So it is that the Proctor continuous entertainments have come to be accepted as quite the most attractive of the lighter amusements of Greater New York. The two Proctor houses are plentifully provided with laughing features this week. A special announcement is made at the Pleasure Palace, 58th street and Third avenue, that for the summer the best seats for the ladies in the afternoon will be twenty-five cents and the family circle seats fifteen cents. The stars at the Palace this week are Gilmore and Leonard, of "Hogan's Alley" fame; Risco's Porine circus, a wonderful animal act; Webb and Hassan, Chas. G. Kilpatrick and twenty others. At Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre for this week are Marshall P. Wilder, the remarkable little humorist and Lyceum entertainer, whom Mr. Proctor launched in vaudeville. He will present a brand new budget of humorous jokes and songs.

HOBART MUCH BETTER.

ALL DOUBT OF HIS RECOVERY SAID TO BE REMOVED.

He Proposes to Spend the Heated Season at Long Branch and Has Leased a Beautiful Cottage There Near the Ocean.

Washington, May 10.—Vice-President Hobart's recovery from the illness which has afflicted him ever since the adjournment of Congress, March 4th, has been very slow, much slower than his physicians anticipated, but they say that his health will be excellent as soon as the recovery is complete.

Mr. Hobart is now in a convalescent condition. He is sufficiently strong to be with his family at dinner, to sit up in his sleeping-room the greater part of each day. He felt so much improved last week that he sent for Mr. McHenry, his business secretary, and with his aid disposed of some pressing personal business and urgent correspondence.

Mr. Hobart some time ago contemplated passing the heated term on the banks of the St. Lawrence River, but his physicians advised him to take a cottage at Long Branch and breath the ozone from old ocean, and he has complied with their wishes.

The Vice-President has leased Normanhurst, the beautiful seaside home of Mrs. Norman L. Munro, at Norwood Park, Long Branch, and he and his family will occupy it as soon as possible. The Vice-President will not wait for fashionable Long Branch people to arrive before he goes there, but he will take possession of his summer home as soon as he is sufficiently strong to bear the fatigue and inconvenience of travel. He may get to Long Branch between June 1st and 15th.

WORK OF THE COLLIERS.

Important Duties They Performed During the Spanish-American War.

GAVE SPLENDID SERVICE

The Difficult Problem of Keeping Warships Supplied With Coal Speedily Solved.

Coaling at Sea and Its Attendant Dangers and Discomforts—Precaution Necessary to Guard Against Accidents, Which Few People Appreciate—Light Armament They Carried and Risks They Ran.

[BY LIEUT. ARTHUR H. DUTTON, U. S. N.]

There was one vital feature of the Spanish-American war which, in view of its vast importance, has received but a beggarly appreciation outside of the technical world. This was the collier service so promptly instituted and successfully maintained by the Navy Department from the moment hostilities became imminent.

Coal has been long recognized as an essential factor in modern marine warfare, its importance increasing with the steady and now almost complete disappearance of sail-power. How to keep belligerents fleets supplied with it in time of war has been a problem to perplex experts of all nationalities, and it is both curious and gratifying that the United States, which has never, in its peace-time manœuvres, undertaken practically to solve the problem, should be the first one to do so—and satisfactorily at that—under the supreme test of war.

A COLLIER AT WORK.

When the war broke out this country did not possess a single coaling station beyond its own immediate coast line. It is true that we had grants of land for the purpose at Pago-Pago, Samoa, and at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, but those were all, and not to be considered in a war with Spain. Coal being contraband of war, neutrals could not furnish it, except in such small quantities and under such restrictions as to frequently fail to make their possible supplies inappreciable. The Government was, therefore, compelled to rely upon Colliers, and a fleet of twenty was soon secured, fitted out and loaded with remarkable celerity at a total cost of $3,646,579.

The relative smallness of this sum may be recognized when it is known that these twenty colliers kept both the Philippine and the North Atlantic fleets well supplied with the life of *naval efficiency until the close of hos*tilities and for some time after. The expedition with which they were fitted out, and the admirable system with which they performed their functions, will ever form a monument to the Equipment Bureau of the Navy Department.

They were all lightly armed with two or four 6-pounder or 3-pounder rapid-fire guns, and all carried a moderate supply of small arms; both provisions, as subsequent events proved, being entire ones.

Considerable difficulty was often experienced in coaling at sea from a collier, unless the water was very smooth. Of course, in a snug harbor, such as Guantanamo, in which we have expressly for this purpose, it is child's play to run alongside, make fast and hoist in the coal as though at a dock, but off Santiago, where there is always a swell, sometimes very heavy, the process was a ticklish one. The greatest care had to be exercised to avoid injury. Huge bales were lowered over the sides as fenders, the guns on the coaled ships had to be trained well fore and aft, and a hundred other precautions taken. Yet nearly every time bolts were started, plates indented and seams opened more or less, the colliers, naturally, being the greater sufferers.

Few people appreciate the discomforts, the labor and the dangers of the collier service. There is no flithier job than coaling ship, with the black dust floating everywhere, even penetrating the officers' quarters and often rendering life almost unbearable in the hot weather of a tropical summer. With the men-of-war coaling took place only at long intervals. With the colliers it was take in the cargo first and then discharge it nearly all the time. They were often in quarantine, rarely a day passing without this disagreeable work to be gone through.

The colliers took great risks from the enemy. Their lights were never out of sight that they would have been easy prey for any hostile vessel larger than a torpedo boat or armed launch. Yet they paid little heed to indifference, often hundreds of miles from possible succor in case of attack. Off Santiago and in Guantanamo Bay, which became their principal scene of operation early in June, they were often under fire, without the treasured privilege of retaliating, although they sometimes came to the rescue by popping away with their little 6 pounders, whose puny bark was amusing after the roar of the big guns of the warships.

The war has taught conclusively that a modern fleet must hereafter have its impediments as well as the army. It must have its colliers; its repair ships, like the Vulcan; its refrigator ships, like the Glacier; its distillery ships, like the Iris. Without its colliers it is helpless. Without the others its efficiency is seriously impaired.

PURSUIT DIDN'T SUIT.

HARRY WERNER WAS NOT SATISFIED WITH CHIEF'S METHODS.

So He Made a Complaint to the Police Board Last Monday—No Action Taken by Board—Nothing Done With Totten.

There was a meeting of the Plainfield Police Board Monday. Patrolman Totten was before the board again on the old charge, but no action was taken in the matter. It is not yet a settled fact that the case will come before the Council for trial. The board received a formal complaint from Harry Werner about the escape of his burglar.

Werner was not satisfied with the manner in which the pursuit had been conducted by Chief Grant. He said that the Chief had allowed William Richards, Werner's clerk, to continue the chase alone while the Chief came back to Plainfield to get some dinner. He claimed that the burglar might have been captured had the Chief continued the pursuit. No action was taken on the complaint by the board.

JURY DISAGREED AGAIN.

Action of Ephraim Vail Against Frank Miles Will be Tried for Third Time.

The jury in the Ephraim Vail against Frank Miles' case disagreed again Monday afternoon, and could not reach a verdict. This is the second time the case has been tried, and there is nothing to do but try it over again.

The dispute over a claim of F. A. Dunham against Miles for surveying, and the claim was sold to Vail, making him the plaintiff. The jury cannot tell whether the defendant can be held for the bill or not, as there is a letter in evidence showing that Mr. Dunham wrote him and told him that he would not look to him (Miles) for the money, but to the lawyers and others who had the survey made.

William Newcorn represented the plaintiff and Codington & Swackhamer the defendant.

HIGH SCHOOL BOYS TO DRILL.

Will Be Reviewed by Lieutenant-Colonel John I. Holly Thursday Night.

The Plainfield High School cadets will meet in the Crescent Rink Thursday evening for drill and review by Lieutenant Colonel John I. Holly, quartermaster of the New York 10th Regiment. It was first intended to hold a battalion drill with the Local School cadets, but the latter were not ready and the joint affair fell through. So the High School boys will turn out by themselves to show their friends just how fine an appearance they can make. It will be an invitation affair, to which all the families and friends of the cadets will be welcome.

The Electrical Show in New York.

The Madison Square Garden will be until June 3d an attractive place to visit even amid all there is to be seen in the big city of New York and the Electrical Show, which opens at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and closes at 11 o'clock at night, is a revelation in electrical accomplishment and magnificent effects. It is given under the auspices of the National Electric Light Association and their convention will be held during the show. It is not alone a display of electrical effects, but there are curiosities to be wondered at everywhere and there is something to be seen by everybody, young and old. The decorations and marvels in electric light make it a splendid scene at night, but everything is in motion during the entire afternoon and evening.

GRAIN-O BRINGS RELIEF

to the coffee drinker. Coffee drinking is a habit that is universally indulged in and almost as universally injurious. Leave off coffee and use Grain-O? It is almost like coffee but the effects are just the opposite. Coffee upsets the stomach, ruins the digestion, effects the heart and disturbs the whole nervous system. Grain-O tones up the stomach, aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. There is nothing but nourishment in Grain-O. It can't be otherwise. 15 and 25c. per package.

PATRICK REVILLE ELECTED PRESIDENT FOR A YEAR.

Association Reported to be in a Prosperous Condition in All Respects—An Address by Rev. Father Westman.

The twenty-seventh annual meeting of the T. A. B. Association was held last Monday in the hall of the association on West Fourth street. There was a large attendance of members, and during the business part of the meeting a number of new members were elected. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: President, Patrick Reville; vice-president, John Hickey; recording secretary, Robert Birmingham; financial secretary, C. Waldron; treasurer, J. C. Carney; sergeant at-arms, J. J. Kane.

The association was reported to be in a healthy condition financially and socially, while the membership is fast increasing. After the transaction of the business of the evening Rev. Father Westman, assistant at St. Mary's church, delivered a powerful address. His principal points were on temperance and the objects of the association. He urged every member to do his best to advance the interests of temperance and thus increase the membership of the association. He spoke at some length upon the excellent objects of the association and what they stand for.

Father Westman's talk was listened to with the greatest interest and was cordially received. After the lecture he entertained the members with his phonograph, giving some of the best selections. This concluded the programme for the evening, and the members adjourned congratulating themselves on the success of the association.

See the Chateau de Speer in another column where Alfred Speer the most honest and persevering wine grower in this country, forty-eight years persistent in overcoming obstacles and prejudice against native wines, has succeeded in New Jersey and now produces the finest wines of the world and has his extensive wine cellars with hundreds of thousand gallons stored. Hanging They Say.

The question of whether capital punishment ought to be abolished or not was the subject under consideration at the meeting of the Y. M. C. A. Literary Society Monday. The debate was fairly launched by S. H. Craig, chief on the affirmative side, and was followed by arguments by Frank McDonald. The negative was taken by Orrin Dolliver and C. E. Drange. After hearing both sides the question was put to the society to decide, and the decision was that it should not be abolished.

JOLLY TIMES FOR HIGH SCHOOL BOYS.

Easily Defeated the Newark Academy at Baseball.

VISITORS MADE BAD ERRORS

EDWARDS HELD THEM DOWN TO FOUR SINGLE HITS.

At Batting the Plainfield Pitcher Distinguished Himself by Making Two Doubles and a Single—Clever Batting by High School Boys and Expensive Errors by Newark Decided the Game.

The Newark Academy nine fell a victim to the Plainfield High School team in the return game played at the Crescent Oval Saturday afternoon Plainfield won by a score of 12 to 2.

McCoy, the crack young Newark pitcher, proved an easy mark. His curves were batted at will, and when the High School boys couldn't hit him safely the Newark infield usually managed to foozle the ball and present them with the base. Edwards was a puzzle that the Newarkites were never quite able to understand. Only four scattering hits were made off his delivery, while he was given good support from the infield.

It looked like a hot game at the start. Newark batted first and Bidgwar opened the battle with a clean hit. He stole second immediately, reached third on a passed ball and scored on a wild pitch. The next three men went out in one, two, three order. Morgan scored for Plainfield on a single, a stolen base, a passed ball and a fumble by McCoy.

In the second inning, the Newark boys tried hard to score but without success. Craig made the circuit of the bases on a single a stolen base, a sacrifice by Mason and one of Bramhall's fumbles. Newark's many errors in this inning netted three more runs for Plainfield which were rounded up by singles from Mullar and Droll.

Newark's only other run was made in the fourth, when a dropped fly by Droll and fumbles by Craig and Mason sent Bramhall round. Edwards opened the inning for Plainfield with a beautiful two-bagger. A single by Morgan and more foolishness by the Newark infield gave the High School team three more runs.

But the really joyful time was in the fifth. Mason and Squires made single. Edwards poised the ball for a jolly double, bringing in two runs and came home on safe hits by Radford and Fisher. Droll struck out with two men on bases and ended the inning. Craig scored the last run in the sixth on a dropped fly, sundry other errors and a well-placed hit by Billy Morgan. Newark made brave attempts to score, but it wouldn't do against the solid infield of the High School.

The individual scores were as follows:

WILL FIGHT SIN IN NEW QUARTERS.

Big Day Marked of Salvation Army Hall.

COLONEL HIGGINS PRESENT.

CHIEF OF STAFF TO GEN. BOOTH-TUCKER LED SUNDAY MEETINGS.

The Local Soldiers of the Army Have Moved Into the Old Y. M. C. A. Hall on East Front Street — Large Crowds at Services Yesterday — Prominent Officers Present—Active Campaign.

The battle is still on. There's no sign of its ending either. The indomitable soldiers of the Salvation Army are steadily going forward in their campaign against the forces of sin. After valiantly fighting under great difficulties, the local soldiers of the Army are still pressing forward. Some of the obstacles have been overcome. Saturday night the new local barracks of the Army were opened with special exercises which were continued Sunday.

The career of the soldiers of the Salvation Army in Plainfield has been a hard one. They have now moved into new and better quarters. The new Salvation Army Hall is located on the second floor at 118 East Front street, in the hall once occupied by the Y. M. C. A.

To assist in the opening of the new hall and give Plainfield an awakening, a delegation was sent out from the headquarters of the Salvation Army in New York to assist Captain and Mrs. Traub who are in command here. Colonel Higgins, Chief of Staff for General Booth-Tucker, the head of the Army, came, accompanied by his wife, who is in charge of the rescue work. Dr. Nice, the violinist of the staff, accompanied them. Then there was Brigadier Scott, who is in command of his division of the Army, and the Staten Island Singing Brigade, six in all, who can sing, pray, preach and do everything else that a good Salvation Army soldier is expected to do.

After an enthusiastic open air meeting at the corner of West Front street and Madison avenue, in which the visitors took part, the meeting in the hall was opened. There was a crowd present, filling all the seats. Brigadier Scott led the singing with his concertina and conducted the meeting.

Sunday the campaign was continued with unabated vigor. There was a consecration service in the morning, largely attended and preceded by the usual open-air meeting. In the afternoon there was another out-door meeting and a praise service at the hall. A salvation meeting, with an open-air meeting before it, was held in the hall. While all the services were well attended the crowd in the evening overflowed the hall.

Colonel Higgins proved to be an energetic leader. He conducted the meetings yesterday and soon secured the attention of his hearers. He was an interesting speaker and told his illustrations and stories of the army life in a dramatic manner. His enthusiasm was contagious and the audiences sang in a way that rejoiced the local officers.

There was plenty of music and singing with hops and there a chorus or exhortation. There wasn't any pretence at fine discourse. The earnest Salvationists presented their plea so all could understand and begged their hearers to come to God before it was too late.

Captain Traub, the local commander, was everywhere. He assisted in the meeting and received visitors at the door, ushering them to seats and doing what else he could to aid in the success of the meeting. He was seemingly an earnest, straightforward soldier, working hard to advance his cause and setting his fellow-soldiers a fine example.

It was a big day for the Salvation Army in Plainfield. The campaign, so auspiciously started, will be energetically continued. Meetings will be held every evening and some special events are promised for the future.

A Fall to Beer.

A delivery wagon belong to the City Brewing Company of Elizabeth, broke down on West Front street Monday afternoon. The two wheels on the right side of the wagon gave way and let the body fall to the ground. There were several cases of beer in the wagon and these were unloaded and placed on the sidewalk until another wagon could be secured in which to deliver them.

ATTEMPT TO POISON A BOROUGH FAMILY.

Evidence of Carbolic Acid Found in Milk.

DISCOVERED JUST IN TIME.

ENMITY OF A BOROUGH FAMILY IS THOUGHT TO BE THE CAUSE.

Affected Milk Was Served by B. B. Waldron, But the Portion Left in Mr. Moran's Pail Was the Only Part That Caused Trouble Among His Patrons—Carbolic Acid Had Been Put in the Pail.

What appears to have been an attempt to poison the family of T. D. Moran, of Regent street, occurred one day last week. The family has been a patron of B. B. Waldron, of Coddington avenue, a milkman, who has been in the habit of putting the day's supply of milk in a pail left on the back stoop each morning.

The milk was supplied as usual the morning in question, but when Mr. Moran's sister arose and took a drink of the milk before it had been served to any of the other members of the family, she became deathly sick. Remedies were given and after a time she recovered, but not until she had shown every evidence of carbolic acid poison. As none of Mr. Waldron's customers were affected in any way by the milk, it is believed that the poison was put in the pail sometime during the night.

The Moran family have had trouble, it is said, with a family in the borough lately, and suspicion is directed against some members of the latter as the ones who committed the act. As the affected milk was thrown away as soon as Mr. Moran's sister was taken ill it was impossible to determine exactly what was put in the milk.

The matter is being investivated and arrests are likely to take place in a few days.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

MRS. RAMSEY SPOKE.

Plainfield Woman Addressed a County W. C. T. U. Meeting.

Elizabeth, May 16—The Spring meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Union County opened yesterday morning in St. James's Methodist Episcopal church here. There was three sessions, morning, afternoon and evening. About seventy-five delegates were in attendance.

Mrs Dr. S. H. Tomlinson, of Plainfield, president of the county union, presided. There was a well written paper read by Mrs. Scott, of Elizabeth, on the subject "Christian Citizenship," and a paper by Miss Harmer, of Rahway, on "The Work of Young Women in the Cause of Temperance."

Last night the convention closed with a public meeting, at which the principal speaker was Miss Anna M. Ramsey, of Plainfield, whose subject was "Temperance Sunshine."

MUST FIND THE OWNER.

Roundsman Flynn Has a Disagreeable Job on His Hands

Among the official duties to perform is that of serving notices on property owners to lay sidewalks, and this duty has been placed in the hands of Roundsman Flynn, who started on his rounds yesterday. His instructions are to serve the notices on the real owners and no other person. When he finds the owner he is obliged to ask a few questions, and then affix his signature and date to each notice.

Some of the people who received notices were very indignant and said that they would not lay walks until their neighbors complied with the law. One woman who received a notice expended $300 last year in laying walks and her neighbors opposite did not lay any walk at all. Others claim that certain city officials have not complied with the law and they are not inclined to lay walks until they do.

To Lay Borough Walks.

Patrick Kiely, of the borough, has secured the contract to lay sidewalk and crosswalks in the borough for the coming year, his bid being the lowest. He received official notification of the fact on Saturday.

A man who buys goods on tick ought to pay on time.

BOROUGH CELLARS ARE TO BE DRAINED.

A. I. Smalley's Project Sanctioned by the Council.

TERMS ARE SETTLED UPON.

MR. SMALLEY WILL START THE WORK IMMEDIATELY.

The Council, on the Suggestion of Mayor Smalley, Decides to Hold Semi-monthly Meetings so That the Street Employes May be Paid Oftener—Money Appropriated for Memorial Day Observance.

Two important matters were considered and decided at the May meeting of the Borough Council held last Friday, at which time the Mayor and all members of the council were present. The first was that granting A.I. Smalley a license to lay and construct a private drain through certain streets in the upper part of the borough for the purpose to carry off surface water and draining cellars. This matter was laid aside at the special meeting last evening owing to certain conditions which Mr. Smalley could not agree to. Last evening the agreement came up in an amended form and was adopted.

The agreement provides among other things that Mr. Smalley shall construct this drain within sixty days, that it is to be used solely for the purpose of carrying surface water, that the applicant for the license shall file a map showing the exact location of the drain, that he is liable for all damages resulting from its construction and to defend all suits, that the Mayor and council shall maintain the right to order its removal or to stop the use of the same, if it is deemed wise, that all persons using the drain shall pay to Mr. Smalley $40 for fifty feet frontage and in proportion to that rate for a greater or less number of feet frontage. These are the principal points in the agreement and as Mr. Smalley accepted the agreements and the council granted the license the drain will now be constructed.

The second matter of importance was introduced by Mayor Smalley, which was presented in the form of a suggestion that the Mayor and council hold a semi-monthly meeting so that the laborers can be paid oftener than once a month. Mr. Smalley stated that the importance and convenience of such action had been impressed upon him and he would like to see a change in the present method of paying the laboring men at work on the streets. He also said that business men were obliged to give these men credit until they could get their money, and this was one reason why he desired a change.

Mr. Clark spoke in favor of the method and said that he would like to see the men paid weekly.

Mr. Valiant said that he would vote to bring about a change, but he could not quite understand why there was a demand for a change at this time. He had not heard of complaints before. He said that he would favor the plan, and if it was adopted it would expect to attend the semi-monthly meeting if it was possible.

Mr. Swackhamer, Mr. Burtis and Mr. Rogers spoke briefly on the subject showing their approval of the plan and it was unanimously decided to hold a semi-monthly meeting at the call of the Mayor. It will probably be held on the second Monday after the first Friday in each month.

Mr. Clark, chairman of the street committee, presented his monthly report for April and it was a very complete one, showing in detail the expenditure of money on street work. It showed that it cost for labor, grading and scraping streets, $200.00; for regrading, $31.75; repairing street, $68.90; for crushed stone, 258 tons and 435 pounds, $232.20; supplies, $30.02; sidewalks, old bill, $49.55; repairs to tools, $3.65; culverts, $2.95; total expenditure, $681.58.

The report of Collector George F. Brown showed the total collections to date to be $3,899.35 for 1897-1898 taxes. The disbursements during April were $1,364.39, leaving a balance on hand May 1st, of $4,561.74, divided as follows: Borough fund, $1,750.69; Watchung avenue account, $2,801.05. Clerk Bowley reported that he had received during April from fines, licenses, etc., the sum of $93.35.

Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R. petitioned the Council for the usual Memorial Day appropriation of $25 and the same was granted. Borough Recorder Long reported that $5 had been received from fines during April. The members of West End Hose Company and Warren Engine Company submitted the names of the newly-elected officers, and the Council confirmed the same.

Mayor Smalley appointed as special marshals J. W. VanHorn, Wm. N. Pangborn, John Coley and P. Cullen. The Council confirmed the appointments.

Among the usual batch of claims was one for $2 for the drawing of a deed for Henry Ruppert. It seems that Lawyer J. H. VanWinkle drew the deed, and Mr. Ruppert secured the same. Mr. Brown submitted the bill. In the latter's opinion the borough should pay the $2 fee for a deed in the transfer of property, but Counsel Reed said that the man owning the property should pay. Inasmuch as Mr. Ruppert has his deed it will probably fall on Mr. Brown to pay the $2 fee, unless he can get Mr. Ruppert to do so.

This concluded the business of the evening and the Council adjourned.

UNABLE TO HIT SQUIRES.

FONCS BASEBALL CLUB DEFEATED THE CLINTON AVENUES.

The Score Was 14 to 7, But It Was a Hard Fought Game and Was Witnessed by a Big Crowd of Rooters.

The second of the series of three games between the Fonds Baseball Club and the Clinton avenue team was played on the latter grounds Saturday afternoon, and resulted in a victory for the Pond boys by a score of 14 to 7. It was a hard fought game and was witnessed by a large crowd of rooters.

The Clinton avenue boys had their strongest team in the field, but, except in the seventh inning, they failed to make any impression on Squires' delivery. In two innings he succeeded in striking out all three men. Bulmer held the Pond boys down fairly well until the eighth inning, when they batted him all over the field and he was withdrawn, Morgan taking his place.

Stevens batted and fielded in great shape. Two home runs were credited to him while Scott made a three-base hit.

The score by innings was as follows:

Clinton avenues	1	0	0	0	0	5	0	0	7
Fonds	0	4	0	0	0	1	7	X	14

Base hits—Fonds, 20; Clinton avenue, 4.

The teams lined up as follows:

ON THE HILLSIDE LINKS.

PRELIMINARY ROUND FOR THE FISK CUP WAS PLAYED.

There Were Six Contestants—Honors Divided Between George Richards and Morris Dumont—Semi-Finals to Come.

The superb weather of Saturday attracted a large number of golf enthusiasts to the links of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club. The course was well occupied throughout the day with devotees of the popular sport, and the improvement of the greens made it a pleasure to play. The event of the day was the preliminary round, eighteen holes, match play, junior handicap, for the Fisk Cup. According to the schedule the finals were to have been played, but the golf committee could not arrange matters that way. There were six contestants, Messrs. George Richards, Augustus Fisk, Morris Dumont, Owen Fleming, Parker W. Mason and N. Pedleton Rogers, Jr., who qualified last year for the play. The result of the first round is as follows: George Richards beat Augustus Fisk by 5 up and 4 to go; Morris Dumont beat Owen Fleming by 1 up and 2 to go; Parker W. Mason beat N. Pendleton Rogers, Jr., by 4 up and 3 to go. The honors being divided between George Richards and Morris Dumont, they will play the semi-final round next Saturday, and the winner will play the final round with Parker W. Mason, who is exempt for play in the semi-final for the reason that he drew the bye.

The result of the final play will determine the permanent owner of the cup and the interest is now growing very keen. The semi-finals and finals will be played next Saturday afternoon.

The Steward had quite a number of people for lunch Saturday and during the entire day there was a goodly number of people at the clubhouse. An idea of how many persons were playing on the links in the afternoon can be imagined from the fact that there were nearly fifty caddies out.

The deceased had consumption, and has been a great sufferer. He leaves a wife and two children, a boy and girl. He was about 40 years of age. He was a member of Star of Plainfield Lodge, Shepherds of Bethlehem, and has been past commander. The members of this lodge attended the funeral.

NEW RESIDENCES ARE BEING BUILT.

Building Operations Active in Plainfield Now.

A HOUSE TO COST $6,500.

TWENTY-ONE PERMITS GRANTED DURING APRIL.

J. L. Hallock Has Plans Out for the Erection of a Handsome and Costly House on Madison Avenue, South of Stelle Avenue—Smaller Improvement Being Made in Various Sections of the City.

The month of April has shown an increase in the business for the building fraternity of this city. The records of Building Inspector T. O. Doane show that twenty-one permits were granted during the month. Of that number, nine were for new houses, which will cost their owners from $1,200 to $6,500, in course of erection. The remainder of the permits were for barns, small buildings and various alterations and additions.

Of the new residences started during the month, the one building for J. H. Hallock on Madison avenue, south of Stelle avenue, is the most pretentious. It will cost in the neighborhood of $6,500, and will be one of the handsomest residences in that part of the Third ward. It was designed by A. L. C. Marsh.

David N. Force has started a frame cottage on Richmond street near Lagrande avenue, that will cost $1,400. Philip Cottrell has begun work on begun work on another frame dwelling at 566 East Second street, which will cost about $1,900.

A handsome twelve-room residence is now under way on Belvidere avenue, back of the Hotel Hunterston. Manning & Runyon are building it. It is of pretty design and will reach $6,000 in cost of erection.

Most of the new buildings are in the Third ward. Mrs. J. R. Truell is having one built on West Fourth street, in the rear of her present home. Then there is the Hallock residence. Miss Catherine Kelly is putting up a $1,400 frame cottage on West Fourth street, near Hope Chapel.

There are two new additions for the rapidly growing colony in the vicinity of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church. Alonzo Aldrich has begun operations on a pretty little cottage on Monroe avenue, between Third and Fourth streets, which will cost about $1,500. J. S. Higham has a more elaborate residence under way on Monroe avenue, near Sixth street. It is a two story and attic residence and will cost in the neighborhood of $4,000.

Of the alterations going forward, the most important are those to O. T. Waring's handsome residence on Park avenue and Blair's livery stable, on West Sixth street, owned by F. A. Pope.

Rev. Mr. Taylor Resigns His Charge.

Rev. Dr. John P. Taylor, of Park avenue, has resigned the pastorate of the Episcopal church at Middletown, where he has been preaching for five years, the resignation to take effect July 1st. Dr. Taylor has commuted all this time, taking charge of two services every Sunday, and he now feels that the work is too much for him.

Mashed His Finger.

William Addis, of East Second street, smashed the second finger on his right hand Friday. He was assisting in putting a heavy grate in a house on Clinton avenue. He was pointing with his finger where the grate wanted to go when it slipped and mashed the end of his finger beneath it.

Prompt Settlement of Death Claim.

A draft for $2,000 mortuary benefit held by the late Gustav Grotmann in Court Plainfield, No. 1144, Independent Order of Foresters, was paid over to Mrs. Grotmann last Saturday by the lodge officers. From the day proof of claim was filed till settlement was made, only five days elapsed.

Lacerated His Hand.

Joseph Schonerger, aged 21 years, an employe in a machine shop at Lincoln, sustained a lacerated wound of the hand while at work Saturday morning. He came to the hospital to have the wound dressed, after which he returned home.

TROLLEY TO 'PLAINS BY FIRST OF JUNE.

Large Force of Men Put at Work Friday Morning.

GRADING THE ROADBED.

THAT WORK WILL BE FINISHED IN A WEEK OR TEN DAYS.

Elizabeth and Westfield Company Unable to Get Their Ordinance Progressed in Roselle—Aldermen Want Them to Widen Second and Third Avenues in Return for the Franchise.

Contractor L. W. Serrell started a gang of fifty Italians, under the charge of George Conover, of North Plainfield, as foreman, Friday, in constructing the roadbed for the Scotch Plains extension of the Plainfield Street Railway Company. The men commenced work at the corner of Westfield and Martine avenues, Scotch Plains, and will work towards this city.

Unless there are unforeseen obstacles it is expected that the roadbed will be graded to the city line on East Second street within a week or ten days. As soon as this work is finished the rails will be laid, unless there is further delay in securing the material, which, is feared, may be the case. An official of the road told a reporter last night that the line to Scotch Plains would probably be in operation by June 1st.

At a meeting of the Board of Aldermen of Roselle last Friday the application of the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Co., which is owned by the same stockholders as control the Plainfield road, was considered again, but it was impossible to put the ordinance on second reading because the Aldermen and the company have not come to an agreement in respect to the improvements which the former want the company to make in widening Second and Third avenues. A hearing on his matter will be given by the Aldermen Friday, May 19th.

THE CENTRAL TO MEET TROLLEY COMPETITION.

Changes to be Made in Route From Elizabeth to Newark.

GREAT SAVING OF TIME.

TRAINS TO RUN THROUGH BROADWAY IN ELIZABETH.

It is Currently Rumored That a Larger Number of Trains Will be Run and That the Rate of Fare Will be Reduced, but No Definite Information—Better Facilities in View for Plainfield.

The Central Railroad Company began Friday what is alleged to be the first step toward increasing the number of local trains between Newark, Elizabeth and Plainfield, in order to compete with the trolley railroads in contemplation. The rumor current is that trains will be run at frequent intervals and the rate of fare will be materially reduced. No definite information as to the company's plans in this respect could be obtained, but what the company has done is to stake out the land on Broadway, in Elizabeth, for a connection of its tracks on that street with the Long Branch Railroad tracks for the the purpose of running the trains between Roselle and Newark over that route instead of on the main line from the Spring Street station.

By turning off Broadway, in Elizabeth, the company will be able to avoid the switching that is now necessary to get the Newark trains to the Elizabethport station from the meadow route, which connects with the main line at Schiller street. At present trains going to Newark leave the main line a short distance east of Schiller street and run out on the meadows a considerable distance, and back down to the station on a spur that connects with the Long Branch tracks. The trains from Newark run into the Elizabethport station in this way, and back over again to the meadow tracks to resume the route to the main line. This method causes a waste of time and is a matter of great inconvenience.

By abandoning the Schiller street connection, and making the connection by way of the Broadway and Long Branch tracks, all these inconveniences and loss of time is avoided, and the trains will approach the station in their regular course.

The change will be made as soon as the connection can be made. The Broadway route is the original main line of the railroad company in use before the Newark bay bridge was built. All trains ran over the Broadway tracks to the steamboat wharves, and passengers were conveyed to and from New York on the steamboats Waterwitch, Kill von Kull, Red Jacket, Chancellor and other steamers.

Miss Agnes Blair, of East Second street, has gone to Belmar, where she will remain for sometime.

EARLY FIGHT FOR SOMERSET'S SENATOR.

Interesting Gossip About Next Fall's Possibilities.

E. FRENCH MAY BE NAMED.

BOROUGH'S YOUNG ASSESSOR CONSIDERED GOOD TIMBER.

The War Between the Reed and Thompson Factions is a Bitter One and Makes the Chances of Democratic Success a Great Deal Better—J. F. Frelinghuysen Thought to be a Strong Candidate.

The Trenton correspondent of the Philadelphia Record furnishes the following very interesting political gossip concerning Somerset county affairs:

Although election is six months off, yet Somerset county seems to be in a turmoil over the nomination for State Senator. There are so many candidates on the Republican side that it is impossible now to predict who will be named. The most prominent among them are the present incumbent, Charles A. Reed, who was president this year; Joseph F. Frelinghuysen and Matthew Suydam. Should the contest become too hot, which is probable, former Senator Thompson is mentioned as a good compromise candidate. The Democrats are not idle by any means. They, too, have quite a list of candidates from which they expect to select a winner. Those in the foreground are former Speaker James J. Bergen, Nelson Dungan, the present prosecutor of the pleas, and Elston M. French.

Somerset is a very close county politically. Sometimes it goes Republican and at other times Democratic. At elections for the Legislature, however, the Republicans seem to have better luck than the Democrats, particularly in recent years. The reason for this is that national issues prevailed at those elections, and many Democrats have been voting the Republican ticket in order to uphold the gold standard. It takes a very very popular man, no matter what his politics may be, to carry Somerset. Mr. Thompson has three times been chosen Senator, and that fact is a marked evidence of his personal popularity. Mr. Reed demonstrated his popularity three years ago by defeating one of the best Democrats in the country. For some reason or other he and Mr. Thompson had a falling out, and unfriendliness between them has existed to the present day. Each leads a faction of his party, and there is war to the knife. Unless these leaders agree upon a candidate for Senator this time there will be a poor chance for the election of a Republican.

Many people believe that Mr. Frelinghuysen is the strongest man mentioned on the Republican side. The name alone suggests strength in New Jersey. His father, the late Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, was a great lawyer and a brilliant orator. He was a United States Senator, a member of President Arthur's Cabinet and served as Attorney-General of New Jersey. Mr. Frelinghuysen's friends assert that he does not belong to any faction of his party, and that he is popular with both. The friends of Senator Reed, however, insist that he should be given a second term, if only as a recognition of the able and satisfactory manner in which he discharged his duties during his first term. He filled the presidential chair with more than ordinary ability. He is a young and an ambitious man, and his rejection for a renomination would be considerd rather humiliating to him, and besides, it might be avenged at the polls. It is very evident that the Republicans of Somerset must be on their good behavior or else they may meet with a crushing defeat next November.

The Democrats seem much elated over their prospects for victory. They incline to the belief that the people of Somerset are tired of Republican ascendency and that it is full time a change was made. Their intention is to put their best foot foremost for the purpose of electing a Senator that they may gain a vote for United States Senator and, besides, pave the way for carrying the county for their next candidate for Governor. This they say they can do by nominating either of the candidates mentioned.

Former Speaker Bergen is considered a very strong man, indeed. The only danger that would confront him in the event of his nomination is his record on the money question. He is a warm supporter of the gold standard, whilst most members of his party in Somerset are on the other side of the question. But it is said that the silver men are willing to support Mr. Bergen, despite this difference of opinion. They are willing to forgive and forget in order that their party may become united and strong so as to give the enemy an old fashioned fight.

Prosecutor Dungan is also considered a strong man, despite the unpopularity of his office among a certain class of voters. He is said to be an able lawyer and a good debater. There is no question at all as to his respectability, and he is a thoroughgoing Democrat. Elston M. French is a resident of Plainfield, a hotbed of Republicanism, and it is said that he would poll quite a number of Republican votes if the Thompson-Reed faction fight continues. Mr. French being a new man in politics, he has no public record, and perhaps that is all the better for him.

The early skirmishing for the Senatorial nomination in Somerset makes it certain that there will be a very lively campaign all around. No doubt General Sewell, who is much interested in the result, is keeping himself in close touch with the situation. He will probably see that the Republican factions are so harmonized that a vote for United States Senator may not be lost to his party. Good generalship is very essential in Somerset just now. Had the Democrats as skillful a leader on their side as General Sewell their prospects for victory would be very bright, indeed.

FOR ARMY AND NAVY MEN

UNCLE SAM'S PROTECTORS EXPECTED TO FREQUENT THE HUNTERSTON.

Major Coleman's Proprietorship is Expected to be the Drawing Card—A Big Ball Room Built on the Third Floor.

The Hotel Hunterston, under the management of Major F. W. Coleman, the well-known hotel man, will open its doors to receive guests May 20th. The hotel has been thoroughly overhauled and repaired throughout, and thousands of dollars have been spent on it. When it opens for the season, Major Coleman will no doubt book some of the most prominent people in the country as his guests.

Major Coleman, known so well to army and navy men in Washington through his connection with the Richmond House of that city, will cater especially to army and navy men. As New York is full of them, and likely to be so all summer, the gallant proprietors of our country will be in evidence at the house.

One important change that Major Coleman has made is in the south side of the hotel. The immense parlor has been made into a ball room, with a fine hard wood floor. The small parlors, of which there are several, will be used instead of the large one.

Major Coleman has already booked many guests, and if the patrons of the hotel stand by him, the Hunterston will be open all the year. B. A. Moulton is Major Coleman's assistant.

WITH NAVAL RESERVES.

DR. SIMPSON SHOWS PICTURES OF JERSEY TARS IN THE WAR.

Given for the Benefit of the Soldiers' Monument Fund—The Views Included Many That Were of Local Interest.

It was a small but appreciative audience that gathered at the Camera Club rooms last Saturday evening to witness Dr. Simpson's illustrated lecture on the "New Jersey Naval Reserve," which was given under the auspices of the soldiers' monument committee for the fund that is being secured to erect a monument in this city.

Rev. W. O. O'Donnell, chairman of the committee, made a few appropriate remarks in which he asked those present to give their hearty co-operation in the work of securing a monument. Dr. Simpson was then introduced and, as John Naegle exhibited the slides, the doctor explained them and told many interesting things about the war with Spain.

The pictures had mostly to do with the part taken in the war by the New Jersey Reserves, including many Plainfield boys, and the pictures as well as the explanatory remarks were enjoyed by all.

The lecture included the trip of the Reserves during the war, and it was shown how capable the boys were to handle a ship like the Badger and do so with credit to themselves and to the Government. The doctor showed that while the boys had plenty of work there was also time for enjoyment and pleasure. Altogether the lecture was an interesting and instructive one, and everyone present was glad they had attended.

Papers in the Waiting Room

An innovation in the news selling business has been adopted at the North Avenue station. A branch stand of the Union News Company has been established in the women's waiting room, where a full line of magazines, periodicals, daily papers, candies, etc., are to be found. This stand is in charge of Miss Della De-Vere, under the direct supervision of Theo. A. Roeder, agent.

Rented Instead of Purchased.

In connection with the revival services to be held at Asbury Park this summer under the auspices of the colored people, it should be stated that the land where these meetings will be held has been rented and not purchased.

CHASE FOR BURGLARS WAS A FRUITLESS ONE

Man Who Robbed Werner's Store Was Not Caught.

ON THE WAY TO LINCOLN SOLD THE MAN A SUIT FOR $5.

Will Richards, Clerk at the Clothing Store, Spotted the Suspected Man Acting Suspiciously at West Front Street and Central Avenue—Chief Grant and Richards Gave Chase, But Did Not Get Him.

The burglar made his appearance again Friday. This time he departed from the city with his ill-gotten gains, taken from Harry Werner's clothing store, amid sundry dramatic happenings in which Chief Grant figured prominently. The burglar is still at liberty but it's safe to say that he's miles away from Plainfield at present.

Thursday evening, the night of the burglary at Werner's, a stranger came into the store. He was a man of middle height, fairly broad shoulders, and apparently about 38 years of age. He had a stubby untrimmed beard and wore a black slouch hat. He wanted to purchase some packing boxes and went into the basement with Will Richards, the clerk, to look at them. They wouldn't answer his purpose, he said.

Friday morning Boundsman Flynn discovered the footprints of the burglar in the earth in the passageway leading to the basement window. The man had worn rather small pointed shoes.

Friday noon as Richards was returning to work from lunch he noticed the stranger of the night before standing at the corner of West Front street and Central avenue. The stranger wore the same suit that Richards had seen on him the night before, but he wore a new brown derby hat, one of which was found missing at Werner's. A huckster's wagon came along and Richards heard the driver say, in response to the stranger's question, that he was going to Dunellen. Then the stranger climbed in the front seat with the driver. He had two bundles.

Richards hurried back to tell his employer. When Werner was found there was a hunt to find a policeman. Chief Grant was finally dragged away from his dinner table.

Putting Richards on a bicycle the Chief and Richards set out in pursuit of the huckster's wagon. The Chief says they rode at a 2:40 clip. On arriving at Dunellen they could find no trace of such a wagon. Nobody remembered having seen one. Then they went to New Market and followed up several hucksters, who proved to be the wrong men.

Chief Grant then returned home to get something to eat, while Richards rode on toward Lincoln. Half a mile beyond there he found the huckster, but he was alone. The huckster said that he was W. G. Nolman, of 207 College place, New Brunswick. He said he purchased a suit of clothes from the stranger for $5, but refused to give up the suit, however. The stranger had left him at Lincoln and taken the trolley.

Richards went back for the Chief and then the two went to Bound Brook. They found that the burglar had reached there by trolley and then disappeared, probably by a passing train.

The New Brunswick authorities know of no Nolman and say there is no College place in New Brunswick. Chief Grant is confident of finding the huckster, but mourns the burglar as gone forever.

KEEP OFF THE SIDEWALK.

Policeman to be Stationed in Evens to Arrest Offending Cyclers.

Ever since the weather has been fit for wheeling, bicycle riders have been taking the sidewalk on West Front street from Clinton avenue to the Dunellen line. The road bed was in a bad state, and is yet for that matter and that was some excuse, but the police have determined to put a stop to it. Many complaints have come to the police from the residents in that vicinity, who have had some narrow escapes from being run down by careless wheelmen who shoot past their gates at high speed, whether anyone is in sight or not. Hereafter an officer will make it his duty to keep a lookout for violators of the ordinance, and some arrests will doubtless be made. It is said that the most persistent violators of the ordinance are out-of-town riders.

New Department in Sunday School.

The Sunday-school of the First Baptist church, under the superintendence of George H. Bachelor, has formed an inter-mediate department from the classes between the primary department and the senior classes, whereafter the opening exercises they can receive appropriate instruction. This department is under the charge of Miss Edith Cairns, of West Fifth street, who has had some experience in this line of work.

BURGLAR FITTED OUT AT HARRY WERNER'S.

Helped Himself to Several Suits and Departed.

GOT IN THROUGH BASEMENT.

CRACKSMAN WAS EVIDENTLY ACQUAINTED THERE.

Forced Grating to Cellar Window and Then Opened Bolt to Door at the Head of the Basement Stairs With Loop of Wire—Exact Loss Impossible to Tell—The Clues are Very Faint.

Burglars seem to consider Harry Werner a good thing. They visited his clothing store at 206 West Front street again Thursday and departed with sundry suits and extra trousers. The manner in which the theft was committed showed that the intruder or intruders, which ever it was, were acquinted with the place.

Nothing eventful happened at Werner's store Thursday while Mr. Werner and his clerks were there. There were customers, of course, some strangers and some well-known to the proprietor. The store was closed up as usual shortly after 9 o'clock. A light was left burning in the front of the store and another in the rear.

The policeman who was on that beat tried the door during the evening and looked in occasionally but there was no sign of trouble within. The burglary was not discovered until this morning when Will Richards, one of the clerks, came to open up the store. He found the door to the basement stairs open and some of the piles of clothing disarranged. Then he began to investigate.

The burglar, for the police are inclined to believe that there was only one of them that entered the store, first gained entrance to the rear of the basement under the store. There is an areaway to the one basement window which is covered by a wooden grating. This grating was pried off, for the fastenings were not strong, and laid at one side. Then the burglar crawled through a small passageway that leads to the basement proper.

There is a flight of stairs running from the basement right into the store. The door at the head of the stairs is usually fastened with a hook and a bolt. The burglar here removed the facing to the door frame so that he could get at the crack between the edge of the door and the side of the frame. With a loop of wire, that was found lying on the floor this morning, he slipped back the bolt and lifted the hook. The door then easily opened.

Mr. Burglar was evidently rather a fastidious sort of an individual. He went immediately to the most valuable stock and carefully picked out what he wanted. When the piles of suits were on in the same order in which they were left, he took care not to throw those around that he did not want. He also visited the trousers counter and helped himself.

He then retired to the recesses of one of the dressing rooms and tried on the results of his raid. Those that didn't fit he left behind on the sofa in the dressing room, where they were found this morning.

It is impossible to say as yet just how much was taken. It is probable, however, that there are three or four suits and as many pairs of trousers. The loss will be in the neighborhood of $100.

The burglar wasn't kind enough to leave his card behind, so the police have little to work on. The only clues are the missing clothes, and Mr. Werner is not yet certain what kinds were taken. No attempt was made to force the cash drawer or open the show cases.

THEIR SECOND MARRIAGE.

Colored Couple Venture Out Into the Matrimonial Sea Once Again.

A quiet wedding took place last Thursday at 9 o'clock at the home of Madison Williams, 906 West Second street, when L. L. Croom, formerly of 810 East Sixth street, and Mrs. Loretta Jones, of 651 West Third street, were married. This is the groom's second wife and the bride's second husband. They were married by Rev. W. D. Johnson, pastor of the Fillmore Baptist church, in the presence of only the immediate relatives and a very few friends.

The bride and groom were attended by Madison Williams as best man and Miss Mary Williams as bridesmaid, and after the marriage an informal reception was held when a wedding supper was served.

The bride and groom have taken up their residence at 612 East Third street, which property they contemplate purchasing.

MISS PRAY'S NEW WORK

SHE IS NOW GENERAL COLLECTOR FOR THE RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

The Difference Between the Relief Association and the Organized Aid Association—They Work Together Successful.

Miss Pray, for years the valued superintendent of the employment bureau of the Relief Association, has recently received the appointment of general collector.

The officers and managers cordially commend Miss Pray to the interest of the residents of Plainfield and bespeak for her a kindly reception when she solicits contributions for the work she so thoroughly understands from her long connection with the Association.

A word of explanation seems needed in regard to the work of the Relief Association and of the work of the Organized Aid. Some people think that when contributing to one they are giving to both organizations. Such is not the case.

The work of the Organized Aid, done by the agent, Mrs. Woodruff, is the work of visitation, investigation and registration of all cases brought to the notice of the agent. It expends between seven and eight hundred dollars a year for office expenses, operating expenses, printing of reports, etc.

The Relief Association, through its executive committee and corps of visitors, consulting constantly with Mrs. Woodruff, using her knowledge of individual cases, decides as to the help to be given which is always by giving work, (payment for which is never given in money) unless illness or old age renders work impossible. Work may be done by men in the wood yard or by women in the rooms of the employment bureau in sewing, ripping and making over garments from the second hand clothing bureau, cutting rags for carpets, and cleaning the rooms, etc.

The two associations are mutually helpful and both deserve the hearty support of the citizens of Plainfield.

EARLY AMERICAN EVENTS

HISTORICAL LECTURE DELIVERED BY REV. W. C. O'DONNELL

The Men and the Battles of the Revolutionary War Talked About Friday Night—Last Lecture Next Friday Night.

The members of the America Club, that popular organization at the Monroe Avenue M. E church, listened to another of the series of talks on early American history by Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, the pastor, Friday evening. It was the eighth and last for the season with the exception of a review lecure that will be illustrated with the stereopticon.

The early history of the country has been touched upon in previous lectures. The last before the one last evening dwelt especially on the causes of the Revolution. Last night Rev. Mr. O'Donnell spoke on "The Men and Battles of the Revolutionary War." It was an interesting sketch of the principal battles, with a thread of narrative connecting them together. The principal generals and statesmen who played the most important parts in that conflict were shortly described and some of their characteristic acts mentioned.

Next Friday evening Rev. Mr. O'Donnell expects to conclude his series of talks to the club with an illustrated lecture, in which he will briefly review the substance of all the series that have proved so successful this winter.

Newsboy Bitten by a Dog.

Henry Bender, a newsboy, of East Third street, was severely bitten in the hand by a small dog Thursday night while delivering papers on East Front street. The lad put up his hand to ring the door bell at the house where he was to leave a paper, when the dog sprang at him and sank his teeth in the soft flesh. Dr. Marc Clawson cauterized the wound yesterday.

First Payment Under Martin Act.

Collector James A. Martin sent out notices Friday to those affected by the Martin Act, and the first to respond was the owner of a piece of property on West Front street. He was unaware that there was anything standing against the property, but he promptly paid the tax upon receiving the bill for the same.

The Last Sociable.

The last sociable of All Soul's church for the present season was held last Friday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Philip V. R. VanWyck, Stelle avenue. The parish was well represented and all had a thoroughly good time. Music, games and general sociability enlivened the hours.

Dr. Carroll to Lecture.

Hon. H. K. Carroll, the President's special commissioner to Porto Rico, will give an illustrated lecture in Grace M. E. church Tuesday evening, May 16th, on "Porto Rico." The proceeds will be for the benefit of the church.

A NEW METHOD OF TEACHING ARITHMETIC.

To be Adopted in the Plainfield Public Schools.

HAS BEEN A GREAT SUCCESS

DESIGNED ESPECIALLY FOR USE IN THE PRIMARY GRADES.

Miss Sumner, Principal of One of the Chicago Schools, Has Been Instructing the Local Teachers in the New Speer Method of Instruction—It Appeals to the Young Pupils' Senses.

The success of the Speer method of teaching arithmetic in Chicago has caused other cities to adopt that method as well. Superintendent H. M. Maxon, of the Plainfield Public school, has looked into the method and is so pleased with it that he will probably put the new methods into use next year. The Speer method of teaching affects only the work in the primary grades but enables the children there to grasp the principles more surely and do work really difficult for older pupils taught by the old method.

Mr. Maxson saw the workings of the Speer method under the direction of Miss Sumner, principal of one of the Chicago public schools, and was so pleased with the results that he made arrangements to have Miss Sumner come to Plainfield and instruct the teachers here in her methods.

Miss Sumner came to Plainfield and spent Tuesday and Wednesday of last week, visiting the schools and meeting the teachers twice each day, giving them talks on arithmetic and the general methods for brightening primary work. Miss Ida F. Rocap was present from the local private schools at these talks.

The distinctive feature of the Speer method of work is in its appeal to the child's senses. He is trained from the start to recognize the difference in sizes of objects, to estimate the proportion between them as the basis for the exercise of his judgment and gaining knowledge of the combinations of numbers. The whole work seems to train the child in sharpness and quickness of observation, both in seeing and in touch and also in hearing.

The teachers were very much pleased with the methods presented by Miss Sumner. Mr. Maxson has already been experimenting with some of the workings of the methods and will probably put them in use in the coming year.

ROPE CAUGHT HIM IN THE NECK.

John French Met With a Thrilling Experience Riding a Bicycle.

Superintendent John French, of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, met with a peculiar accident at Broad Brook Friday while riding through the town on his wheel. There was stretched across one of the main streets a piece of rope rather small in size and Mr. French did not notice it. He was riding at a pretty good gait and the rope caught him in the neck, throwing him with much force from his wheel.

Workmen in the vicinity, who were using the rope to assist in getting a line for curbing, rushed to Mr. French's assistance, thinking that he was seriously injured. It was some minutes before he recovered, and after he was able to walk he sought a physician who applied proper treatment. There is one thing that saved Mr. French from serious injury and that was a standing collar which he wore.

YOUNG MUSICIANS SHOW MUCH TALENT.

Annual Orchestral Concert Arranged by Prof. Conde.

APPRECIATIVE AUDIENCE.

PLAYERS SEEMED FILLED WITH CONDUCTOR'S ENTHUSIASM.

An Orchestra of Twenty-five Pieces Did Excellent Work—Spirited and Sympathetic Playing by the Young Pupils—A Septette Was Especially Fine—Prof. Conde's Solo Had a Charming Effect.

The annual orchestral concert of P. Ludwig Conde, one of Plainfield's leading musicians, and his pupils, was held at the Y. M. C. A. Hall Thursday. An appreciative audience filled all available seats in the hall.

There were four numbers by the entire orchestra of twenty-five pieces, all given in an excellent manner, far surpassing the orchestra work of previous years. An especial success was the gavotte from "Mignon," in which the intricate time was followed without a fault, and the delicate harmony was rendered as if by one performer. The orchestra was very well balanced, and the players kept excellent time, showing by their perfect accord and instant response to the conductor that they had been thoroughly trained. Mr. Conde controlled his players easily, and appeared to have communicated to them some of his own enthusiasm, as their playing was spirited and sympathetic.

Four of Mr. Conde's younger pupils, Lewis Minford, Richard Minford, Louis Eggerding and Andrew Weber, played a quartette for violins, consisting of three numbers, of which the last, in which the young players were accompanied by the entire orchestra, was the most successful.

The finest number of the evening was a septette, "Intermezzo, Happiness," by Gillet, rendered by Messrs. Gloeckner, Conde, Wilmarth and Gloeckner, violins; Mr. Lang, viola; Mr. DeNike, 'cello; Mr. Weber, bass. The parts were perfectly balanced, and the exquisite execution and delicate harmony, suggestive of all manner of happy things, charmed the audience and called out enthusiastic applause.

Miss Blossom Fitz Randolph and Miss Charlotte Cave played a difficult duet for violins, accompanied by piano, with grace and spirit. Another of Mr. Conde's young woman students, Miss Florence Katherine Wohlfert, played a violin solo, a Hungarian composition, with orchestral accompaniment. Miss Wohlfert played with ease, correctness and feeling, winding her way smoothly through the rapid alternations of grave and gay musical effects that mark the compositions of the emotional Hungarians.

W. Paulding DeNike, 'cellist, played two short solos, which showed off to advantage the possibilities of the 'cello, especially in delicacy of tone. Mr. DeNike showed that he had complete control of his instrument, and played with feeling and brilliancy. His accompaniment was played by Miss Clyde B. Burnett, the pianist for the orchestra, whose careful and sympathetic work all through the concert added much to to the success of the affair.

Mr. Conde played one violin solo, accompanied by the orchestra. This was a very brilliant fantasie, "Scene de Ballet," by DeBeriot, full of fire and spirit, and containing many very rapid passages. Mr. Conde played entirely from memory, and with his usual ease and warmth of feeling. As an encore he played Schubert's "Serenade," the quiet harmonies and delicate musical effects contrasting strongly with the foregoing composition.

The ushering was under the direction of Edward Maxwell Honeyman, assisted by Lindley M. Hillman, Edward J. Kline and Abbott Brainard.

The Glass Gave Way.

Harold Chandor, of East Fifth street, put his hand and arm through one of the doors to a passenger car on the Jersey Central Railroad Thursday morning. A clean cut in his wrist was the result. He caught the 7.35 New York express at the Washington street bridge and started to enter the door. The door stuck and he tried to push it open with his hand against the glass. The glass gave way.

Wagon Toppled Over.

While the driver to one of the big suburban delivery wagons was turning around on East Sixth street near the Bryant School Friday noon the wheel caught and the heavy wagon toppled over on one of the horses. The wagon was unloaded and the horse released. The animal was not injured beyond a few cuts from the new macadam.

Mr. Heath at a Post

Arthur Heath, of Central avenue, is a contributor this month to the "Inland Printer," a trade journal published in Chicago. Mr. Heath has a poem entitled, "The Filler Question Dissolved" in the columns, which occupies a prominent place.

BY THE SAD SEA WAVES.

THE COLORED PEOPLE WILL BE ABLE TO SPEND THE SUMMER DAYS.

A Piece of Property Purchased Near Asbury Park Which Will be Used as a Resort for the Jersey Colored Folks.

The colored Baptists of New Jersey have just completed the purchase of a piece of property in Asbury Park which will be used this summer and during succeeding summers, if the scheme turns out to be successful, as a gigantic camp meeting ground. The project is of particular interest to the colored Baptists in this city because Rev E. E. Jackson, pastor of Mt. Olive Baptist church, has been retained as superintendent and manager.

The piece of ground lies just north of the city towards Long Branch, and is fitted up with a mansion house, a hotel, pavilions and bath houses. Beginning July 18th and continuing until September 15th a series of camp meeting or "Spiritual Harvests" will be held there daily. Preachers from all over the country are expected to be in attendance during the summer.

The place will be a sort of headquarters for colored picnicers in the summer, who can go to this particular part of the beach, for the land fronts on the ocean, and enjoy all the privileges of the white folks without being with them.

The property is said to have cost $40,000, and it is for the use of colored people of the Baptist denomination. There are five acres, and the accomodations are sufficient for over two thousand. The pavilion alone will accomodate that many.

Mr. Jackson will divide his time between this place and wherever his church happens to be then.

HOME FOR OLD FOLKS.

A WORTHY INSTITUTION FOR AGED COLORED FOLKS.

The Enterprise Fathered by Rev. E. E. Jackson, Who Has Secured a Site for the Institution in Hunterdon County.

A week ago the colored citizens of Plainfield and the State were presented with two acres of land through the influence of Rev. E. E. Jackson. The land is intended for the erection of an old folks' home and a State reformatory. J. D. Drake, of Flemington, presented the land to the colored people.

Mr. Jackson states that his plan for building and maintaining this is, that in every church of the State shall be formed an organization which will pledge itself to lift so much of the required amount per year. There will be a Board of Directors who will take entire charge of the property, and a financial agent to travel in the interest of this home. This plan seems to be appreciated by the better thinking white and colored people to a greater extent than the multiplicity of colored churches.

The object seems to be a worthy one and if Mr. Jackson carries it out it will be a worthy one for his race. When the Board of Directors shall have organized there is an offer of $640 for the erection of the home. The building will cost about $2,000. The ground is situated in Hunterdon county one mile and a half from Pittstown, and is one of the choice sections of the State.

WIFE WANTS A DIVORCE.

Mrs. Mary C Hargraves Alleges That Her Husband Has Been Cruel.

Mrs. Mary Cornelia Hargraves, wife of Frederick W. Hargraves, of East Front street, has applied to Chancellor McGill for a partial divorce from her husband, Irving L. Brady is her counsel, and the grounds on which a divorce are asked for are alleged cruelty. Mr. and Mrs. Hargraves are young people and have lived in this city for several years. Mr. Hargraves is a New York business man. The wife is at present at her mother's home in Newark. William G. De-Meza is his counsel.

DIDN'T SECURE A PERMIT

Street Commissioner Did Not Authorize Yoehl to Dig a Trench.

Jacob Yoehl, Jr., the plumber, dug a trench in Westerveit avenue without getting permission from the city. The arm of the law threatened to fall heavily upon him and a warrant was issued for his arrest at the complaint of Street Commissioner Gavett.

Yoehl sent a Peace Commission to confer with the Street Commissioner. He surrendered unconditionally and the Street Commissioner agreed to withdraw the charge if the street was put back in its original condition without delay.

Ill Health Handicapped Her.

Many of the friends of Miss Dwight, of Washington Park, are sorry to learn that there is a possibility that she may not be graduated next month from the Borough High School. Illness has detained her at home a great deal with a consequent loss in her studies. If she applied herself studiously for the balance of the term she could complete the course, but her health is such that her parents do not deem it wise.

BOROUGH EDUCATORS ARE STILL PERPLEXED.

New School Building Does Not Afford Enough Room.

CLASS ROOMS CROWDED.

DESIGNED TO HOLD 45 PUPILS, BUT 50 WILL BE PUT IN THEM.

High School Department is Now Taxed to Its Limit With the Scholars and the Transfer of Six Classes From Old Building to the New One Has Not Given the Relief That Was Anticipated.

Notwithstanding the fact that the borough now has a new public school, which was intended to relieve the overcrowded condition of the High School, the present condition of affairs is not as encouraging as was anticipated. Last Monday six classes were removed from the High School to the Watchung School. Miss Tantum is the principal of the new school and also teaches the fifth grade. Miss Acock teaches the fourth grade, Miss Claypoole the third grade, Miss Filkins the second grade, Miss Terry the first grade and Miss Horton teaches the kindergarten.

The new school will accommodate about 45 scholars in each class room, while there were 50 accommodated in the High School. Thus there are five scholars left over from each of the six classes removed, and these, together with the new scholars who want to attend school, runs the number up to the limit, leaving no spare room, as was expected.

Five classes have been coming on half-day time and this course will have to be adopted next year, which leaves some of the grades worse off than ever. The principal has been obliged to stop enrollment in the kindergarten department. The seating capacity of the High School is about 750 and it is now taxed to the utmost. When a child reaches the age of six years he or she is then placed in the grammar department. This also is now up to the limit.

The Board of Education realizing the condition that confronts them are now making arrangements to put extra rooms in the new school, but this has disadvantages for the reason that 45 scholars is all that one teacher should be expected to take care of, and additional scholars is sure to handicap her.

In the High School there are 110 scholars enrolled, the highest average attendance reported in the State. In comparison with the Plainfield High School, which has about 134, it is exceedingly large. The fact that borough scholars do not now attend the Plainfield High School is a measure for the increase, for the establishment of the Borough High School keeps borough scholars home.

It is the desire of these in charge that the citizens of the borough shall fully realize the condition of the schools and be wide awake as to the needs apparent.

CANCED IN MR. HAYNES' HOUSE.

A Pleasant Social Affair Enjoyed by Forty Guests.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Haynes, on North avenue, was the scene, Thursday, of a very enjoyable sociable and dance. The affair was arranged by Miss Susie Boss, of Central avenue. There were about forty guests present including relatives and friends from Bound Brook, Somerville, Elizabeth, Newark and this city. The feature of the evening was dancing. Music was furnished by O'Reilly. About midnight a bountiful supper was served by the host and hostess after which dancing continued until 2 o'clock, when the guests departed, thanking Mr. and Mrs. Haynes for the very pleasant evening furnished.

FAULTS OF CITY'S SEWAGE DISPOSAL.

One of Mrs. Milliken's Lawyers Gives His Views.

LIABILITY OF PLAINFIELD.

HE SAYS THAT THE CITY POSSESSES A PRIMITIVE METHOD.

Notwithstanding the Depreciation in the Value of Property, the Lawyer Says That the City Felt Perfectly at Ease, But Now the Day of Reckoning is Coming—What Will the Court Do?

A great deal of interest is now centered in the suit of Mrs. Milliken against the City of Plainfield for damages alleged on account of the sewer beds inasmuch as the case has been referred to the Supreme Court for a decision.

Recently a Daily Press representative was in conversation with Senator Reed, one of the lawyers interested in the suit, and a few interesting points were obtained regarding the amendment to the law. The Senator talked thusly:

"Plainfield has adopted one of the most primitive methods of sewage known to history, and she has felt perfectly at ease over the matter, notwithstanding the fact that she is causing a depreciation in the value of property and endangering the health of people thereby.

"This system of intermitten filtration, as I have said, is one of the most primitive. Take for instance the case of a man who locates in some out of the way place, forest or woods. He builds himself a house and clears away a sufficient amount of ground for his use. His slops and waste he disposes of by throwing it on this ground back of his house. This is handy and no one is injured for the time being. In a little while other people build around him, and they are not so willing to have this one man empty his refuse adjacent to their property, and they complain. The result is the man digs a trench and runs this refuse off from the settlement, only to collect at some distant point where there is another settlement. This is the state of affairs in Plainfield. The city is throwing her refuse into her backyard, which happens to be the front yard of another community, and when this community seeks redress she is told that the law gives the city the right to locate the beds there.

"The fact is Plainfield has placed an entirely wrong construction on the law and in order that she may do so no longer, Senator VanCleef had the law amended making her equally liable with an individual, who might want to practice a similar nuisance. There is not one member of the Legislature who would willingly or knowingly give any municipality the right to locate a nuisance to the detriment of another community, and that there may be no chance for this the law was amended accordingly.

"Under the old law land could be condemned if it could not be secured any other way, but under the new law people have a source of redress. When the complainants against the Plainfield sewage system stated their case to Plainfield, they were informed that they did not doubt but what it was a little disagreeable, but then the law gave them certain rights, and not once has there been any disposition on the part of Plainfield to make amends for the evident damage to property and health.

"In my opinion the Supreme Court, when presented with the true facts, will make an equitable decision and give the people who are suffering just amends for alleged damages which seem to be apparent to those who fully understand the case."

Rev. B. W. Hand Paid All But $10

The Christian church on Grove street has settled up with Rev. B. W. Hand to the extent that they now owe him $10, and this amount will be paid at an early date. A report was submitted last Sunday evening at the church regarding the recent fair and it showed that there was about $140 cleared. Part of this amount was applied to the church debt and to paying Pastor McKane's salary.

MAN OF WEALTH AND INFLUENCE IS DEAD.

Plainfield Loses a Substantial Citizen in J. S. Schoonmaker.

PROMINENT IN BUSINESS.

SERVED LOYALLY IN THE ARMY OF THE CIVIL WAR.

Born in Pittsburg Fifty-four Years Ago—Resided in Plainfield for Ten Years—A Faithful Member of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church—He Was Prominent in New York Grand Army Post.

In the death of Joseph Stockton Schoonmaker, of Central avenue, which occurred Monday noon suddenly of apoplexy, Plainfield loses one of her best citizens and a man of wealth and influence. Less than a year ago Mr. Schoonmaker was taken ill with a form of the grip and since that time he has not been at all well. However, his family did not expect his death, and at the time of his demise Mrs. Schoonmaker was at Atlantic City.

Mr. Schoonmaker was born in Pittsburg, Pa., fifty-four years ago and for many years was identified with iron coke interests. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the 14th Pennsylvania Regiment, and held a position on the staff with his brother, Col. J. M. Schoonmaker, who now resides in Pittsburg, and is vice-president of the Pittsburg and Erie Railroad Company.

About ten years ago Mr. Schoonmaker came to this city and has resided here ever since, living a life of retirement. He was a prominent and faithful member of the Crescent Avenue church, having been brought up in that denomination. His uncle, Rev. Joseph Stockton, of New York, being one of the prominent clergymen of the Presbyterian church.

Mr. Schoonmaker was also a prominent member of Lafayette Post, G. A. R., of New York, in which he took a great deal of interest. Since Mr. Schoonmaker came to Plainfield he did not engage in my business. He leaves a wife and four sons, also another brother, S. L. Schoonmaker, of this city, who is associated with the iron and steel interests of which Andrew Carnegie is the head.

CHANGE IN A SCHOOL

MISSES SCRIBNER AND NEWTON ARE TO RETIRE.

The Building Occupied by Them Has Been Rented to Misses Grace Cooley and Caroline Randolph for a School.

Miss Scribner and Miss Green, principals of the Young Ladies' Seminary on LaGrande avenue, have announced that they will not continue their school after the close of the present term in June.

This well-known school has been in existence for fifteen years under the management of Miss Scribner and Miss Newton, and been largely patronized by many of the best families in Plainfield.

It is also announced that Major Miller, the owner of the building, has leased the same to Miss Caroline Randolph and Miss Grace Cooley, who will continue the school next fall, assisted by Abby Mellick in the primary department and Miss Mechardo in the Kindergarten.

HOUSEKEEPER MUST BE PAID.

Herbert Randolph Has a Verdict Rendered Against Him.

Herbert Randolph, of West Front street, was sued in Justice Nash's court Monday afternoon by Miss Henrietta Stoll, who used to keep house for him when he lived on a large farm near Mt. Pleasant.

The services were rendered from September 25, 1897, to February 24, 1898, at $10 a month, and the jury brought in a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount of the claim, with interest, amounting to $170.

Randolph's defense was that he did not hire the woman, but acted as an agent for his father. This was contradicted by the plaintiff, who swore that Randolph himself had charge of the farm, and that the father lived with him.

Randolph also borrowed money from her, she says, which has never been returned. These small amounts were included in the claim. W. S. Angleman was Miss Stoll's lawyer, while Robert M. Clark looked after the defendant.

The jury were out only a short time before returning with their verdict. The jurymen were: J. Pierce, George Rockefellow, M. Brokaw, William Stewart, J. T. Montanyes, R. C. Rand, William Greenwood, George Wyckoff, S. Hoffman, William Foresel, William Miller and James Babbitt, the latter a colored man.

SPURNED $400 000 BRIBE

FRANK S. Monnett, Attorney General of Ohio, Says He Did It.

ATTACKS THE OIL TRUST.

Predecessor Began Fight—Succeeded in Having Standard Oil Co. Declared an Illegal Corporation.

Monnett Started Proceedings to Have the Trust Declared In Contempt of Court, and States that a Representative Offered Him Immunity to Cease Activity—Is a Very Persistent Man.

There is no reason why special credit should be given to a public official who spurns a bribe, yet the fact remains that the public is strongly inclined to give such credit, and particularly to one who spurns a $400,000 bribe which he could easily have taken under the circumstances and never have been accused of anything worse than quitting in a fight against a monster monopoly that means nothing but hard work to him.

That is why there is so much interest in Frank S. Monnett, the young Attorney-General of Ohio, who was won the plaudits of the people of his own and other States by his persistent and well directed attack on the Standard Oil Company. He has shown the sort of courage that men like, and, if the people of his State ever nominate him for a higher office than he now holds, as is not unlikely, he will make a mighty strong candidate, even though the Oil Trust magnates exert their tremendous money power against him, as they surely will do.

Mr. Monnett is not more than thirty-eight years old. He was elected Attorney-General of Ohio in 1895. His predecessors had begun suit against the Standard Oil Company which had resulted in the declaration of the Ohio Supreme Court that the trust was an illegal corporation and must cease its operations in the State. That order had been given by the court in 1893, and Mr. Monnett, like everybody else familiar with the situation, knew that the trust had made merely a pretense of obeying it.

Immediately he started proceedings to have the trust magnates declared in contempt of court and further proceedings to have the charters of its constituent companies in Ohio taken away because of the illegal alliance into which they had entered. Through these proceedings he has made life a burden to the Standard Oil Company's officers, and so wisely has he waged his war that they are fearful of the results.

It surprised nobody, therefore, when a few weeks ago Mr. Monnett told of an attempt which has been made to get him to cease fighting by a bribe of $400,000. In the presence of his brother-in-law a representative of the trust told him where he could find $400,000 that nobody need ever know he received if he would only cease his activity. He was asked even to withdraw any of the suits he had begun but merely to let them drag along until his term of office expired.

With the sort of a man is this young lawyer who puts aside an immense fortune, a fortune as great or greater than he can hope to make by a life of hard work?

Mr. Monnett is a quiet serious man, of student-like appearance, one who carefully plans his actions and weighs the results before he moves. He is tall, about five feet ten, not at all inclined to stoutness, is inclined to stoop a little, particularly when he shoves his hands in his pockets and walks up and down a room thinking over a case or conversing with a friend.

His forehead is high and broad. His dark brown hair is parted in the middle and brushed to either side, but not at all in a "chappie" style. His eyes are dark, large and expressive. His jaw is square, the lines of his mouth are firm, and altogether he looks as he is, a man with much reserve force and confidence that when he needs it it will be available.

Mr. Monnett speaks slowly and does not allow himself to get excited. In getting at the truth regarding the methods and doings of the Standard Oil Trust, Mr. Monnett has had to reason many things out and form his own conclusions, as the trust has more secrets than a political boss and pays hundreds of thousands of dollars a year to lawyers to guard them. Many of his conclusions he finds are not justified as the evidence develops, and it is there that the persistent character of the man best shows.

Starting out to establish a point with a witness, who will tell practically nothing and is constantly looking for an opportunity to ridicule him, Mr. Monnett frames his questions according to the conclusions he has reached, and as he puts them he is soon able to ascertain from the manner of the witness and the trust lawyers whether he is on the right track or not. If he is wrong they ridicule. If he is right they object and protest.

Mr. Monnett is an exceedingly affable man, in a quiet, unostentatious way. He does not pose himself as a giant-killer, or a monster-hunter. He simply knows that the laws of Ohio prohibit operations of monopolies within the State, that the Courts of Ohio have declared the Standard Oil Company to be such an illegal monopoly, and that as Attorney-General it is his business to see that the laws are enforced and the mandate of the court obeyed.

Held the Calico.

Maurice Corson, a Palermo (N. J.) store-keeper, who died recently, bought a quantity of calico during the civil war, paying 50 cents a yard for it. When the price fell to eight cents a yard after the war, Corson declared he would not sell a yard of his goods unless he realized a sum equivalent to the price he had paid for it. The goods remained on the shelves in Corson's store for thirty-eight years, and were finally sold for two and three cents a yard.

Engagement Rings.

An old saying in regard to the wearing of rings is that if a man or woman not engaged is willing to marry, a ring should be worn on the index finger of the left hand; if engaged, on the second finger; if married, on the third finger; but if there is no desire to marry, it should be worn on the little finger.

A ring worn on the forefinger indicates a haughty, bold and unbecoming spirit; on the long finger prudence, dignity and discretion; on the marriage finger, love and affection, on the little finger, a mischievous spirit.

The thumb and first two fingers represent the trinity. The next finger is the husband's to whom the woman owes allegiance next to God. The left hand is chosen to show that the woman is to be subject to the man.

The thumb is too busy to be set apart; the forefinger and the little finger are only half protected; the middle finger is called medicus, and is too precious for the purpose of honor; so the only finger left is the pronubus, or wedding finger.

The engagement ring is an emblem of eternity, being round and without end, showing that mutual love should roundly flow from one to the other, and that continually and forever.

Some pretty and appropriate mottos to be engraved in engagement rings are: "In Love Abide," "Endless My Love," "Forever and for Aye," "Let Love Increase," and "While Life Lasts."

A Cabinet for Dresses.

Those who try to keep their dresses under the best conditions when not in use, know well the trials of the ordinary closets or "clothes press." To hang up a dress, especially a heavy one, is quite sure to pull the skirt out of shape and to injure the "fit" of the waist. The weight of even a light dress is quite sure to stretch the cloth in a way more unpleasant results. Then, too, a dress that is hung up gathers more or less dust, even when protected as carefully as may be, either by covering or by turning it wrong side out—the latter practice doing as much to wear out a dress in many cases as does it occasional use by its owner.

The illustration shown herewith gives a suggestion that is invaluable. In the rear portion of the upper hall, in the "store room," or in some other obtrusive place, is built a cabinet having drawers below and an open chest at the top. The length should be about five feet. In this top dresses can be laid away without folding, and every assurance that they will come out of their resting place "quick and spanas when put in, though they be left there indefinitely. No dust can enter, while moths can easily be kept out by the simple way of looking for any kind of clothing, or for bedding, such a receptacle satisfying what in most homes is surely "a long-felt want."—The Ladies' World.

Embroidery Silk Rack.

A very pretty little hanging rack, made of silver wire in ornamental filigree shape, with little hooks of the bent wire, closely resembling a hat rack in miniature. But this is not a doll arrangement for hats, only a dainty adjunct to the embroidery table. On each little hook hangs still another silver wire arrangement, best into a four-leaved rosette, and intended to hold embroidery silks.

The silks to be used in any one special design may be wound upon these silk holders and hung on the rack conveniently near the embroidery frame.

This smooth silver wire may not be as elaborate as the heavily chased or all filigree silk holders, but they are better for the silks, do not fray them, and the pretty little rack keeps them together and free from the dirt the silk holders might pick up if left lying about the table.

Princess a Bookbinder.

According to the London Young Woman, Princess Victoria of Wales is one of the few royal women who prides herself on the fact that she has learned a regular profession. At a recent industrial exhibition in London there was a specially interesting bookbinders' exhibit, there being contributions from the best-known binderies of Great Britain. Among them there were several artistically executed book covers which gained universal admiration, and whose maker was a certain Miss Matthews, to whom several prizes were awarded.

Some time afterward the identity of Miss Matthews became known, and great was the surprise when it was found she was Princess Victoria of Wales, who sent her work under an assumed name in order that it might get impartial criticism without consideration for her rank.

Paper Teeth.

German dentists are now making those teeth out of paper in place of porcelain or mineral composition. They are said to be very satisfactory, as they do not chip or break and are not sensitive to heat or cold. Best of all, they are very cheap.

The idea of paper teeth, however, does not sound very alluring and is rather suggestive of a menu composed of soups.

MAYOR WILL NAME THE NEW CALL MEN.

A List of Eligible Candidates Has Been Prepared.

GOES TO THE MAYOR TODAY.

HE WILL SUBMIT HIS SELECTION TO COUNCIL MONDAY.

Some Forty Good Men Want to be Call Men and Their Names Will be Sent to Mayor Rockfellow This Afternoon—He Will Choose Twenty-four and Present Them to the Council.

After many months of waiting the "call" system for the Plainfield Fire Department will be a reality next week. The ordinance providing for the change from the volunteer service to the form of professional department, commonly designated as the 'call" system, was passed at the last meeting of the Common Council. Now the selection of the men who are to form the companies is being made and will be presented at the meeting of the Council Monday night for adoption, as that evening the new ordinance goes into effect.

It was predicted by many that the city would have considerable difficulty in finding twenty-four men who were willing to enter into the service as "call men" for the sum of $25 a year. These predictions were far from right. When it was assured that the new system was going through the fire committee and the board of engineers were overrun with applications from those who were anxious to secure the appointments.

When the selection of the twenty-four men for the four companies came there were nearly 100 candidates for the places. A list of some 40 of the best candidates for the call men have been chosen and their names will be presented to Mayor Rockfellow this afternoon. The Mayor will then select the twenty-four men which he will recommend to the Council.

The call men are to be selected by the Mayor and presented by him to the Council, who will approve or disapprove of them as the members may decide. The Mayor will select from the list furnished by the fire committee and board of engineers.

As the Mayor will not consider the names until this afternoon, it is impossible to tell who the call men are going to be. At the next meeting of the Council there is also to be selected two extra paid firemen recommended by the fire committee. Louis M. Dunavan, foreman of Gazelle Engine Company, will be one of the two men appointed. The other will probably be George Mehl.

The new engine house in the West End is nearly ready for occupancy. The curb has been put down and all now lacking is the brick roadway from the doors to the curb. The telephone was put in yesterday.

COUPE ROLLED OVER HORSE.

An Exciting Experience for One of John Keely's Horses.

One of John Keely's rubber tire coupes was wrecked Monday morning on Watchung avenue, near the Crescent Axenue church. Keely stepped out of the carriage at Newman Brothers' grocery store and walked up towards the church a few feet when something frightened the horse and away he went down the avenue at full speed.

At the corner of LaGrande and Watchung avenues the horse and carriage collided with the curb and both went in a heap, the carriage rolling over the horse. Luckily the animal was not hurt at all by the experience, but the coupe had to be sent to the repair shop.

A Baked Shad Dinner.

There was a baked shad dinner at the home of William B. Stansbery, assessor of Fanwood borough, Sunday, as the result of an expedition that went a fishing last Saturday afternoon. In the party were Hon. and Mrs. W. E. Codington, of this city, and Mr. and Mrs. Stansbery, of Fanwood. They went out on the Raritan river below the dam, near Bound Brook, and Mr. Stansbery caught five roe shads that weighed 5½ pounds on a small hook. These same shads were baked and eaten by the party Sunday.

Building a Railroad in Mexico.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Ledger, concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $2 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if I were up to $5 a dollar." At the time of this interview there were several days' boarders who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the daily papers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I feel a great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case in the papers enabled some other person to be hurt by it, I believe, as I thought then as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

The Tabules may be had of druggists in the United States, Canada and Great Britain. Ripans Tabules are the best known remedy for indigestion, biliousness, headache, constipation and all disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels. One dose gives relief.

Chateau de Speer Wines

of Passaic, N. J. Vineyards.

These Wines Rival the World in Excellence.

Old, rich and mellow by age and years of care and frequent racking in fumigated cellars as is done with the Chateau Wines in France.

Photograph of Chateau de Speer.

The Chateau co tains a limited supply of Private Stock Port nineteen years old, besides Burgundy and Claret of nearly the same age. The Speer Port, however, nine years old, as well as the Burgundy, Claret and Sherry, are high class wines. The ★★★ Climax Brandy is 18 years old. All are preferred where known by the Medical profession as superior to any that can be had, for their excellent effect upon the system when used by invalids, the weakly and aged persons and in general family use. Northern New Jersey climate, and soil abounding in iron is just adapted for this grape for Port wine. It is the same kind of soil as in Portugal. Speer's winery and vineyards are the only Port grape vineyards in the United States; only vineyards that cultivate the real Port wine grape of Portugal; while other wines or mixtures called port are made without a single Oporto grape in them. Mr. Speer is the first and only one who imported the vines and acclimated the real Port wine grape vines of Portugal. He spent thousands of dollars as a hobby to see what he could do toward acclimating these Portugal vines here. It took eight years for them to become acclimated before Mr. Speer got a single grape; during those years all died except about eight hundred vines, when those began to grow vigorous and bear fruit; from these, layers were made for new vines. The vineyards now cover fifty six acres. It has proven a success. The grapes are allowed to hang on the vines until they begin to raisin, when they have parted with some of the water and are rich in sugar; and the wine made from Port wine grapes is the only real genuine Port wine made in America. It is by far THE wine for weakly persons, the aged and for evening entertainments.

MUSIC ACCOMPANIED BY ROLL OF THUNDER.

FIFTH ANNUAL MUSICALE.

GIVEN BY THE SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS ENDEAVORERS.

A Large and Appreciative Audience Attracted to Hear the Programme—Vocal and Instrumental Numbers Rendered by Talented Performers—Brilliant Violin Solo by Prof. Conde.

The fifth annual musicale of the Seventh-Day Baptist Christian Endeavor society was given Tuesday night in the presence of an appreciative audience, which crowded the auditorium and overflowed into the lecture room. A varied and entertaining programme was presented with marked success and greatly enjoyed, despite the fact that most of the selections were rendered to the accompaniment of a heavy downpour of rain and an occasional dull roll of thunder.

The first number was Meyerbeer's "Coronation March," as an instrumental trio, played by Mrs. W. C. Hubbard and Miss Jessie M. Utter. Two dainty songs for women's voices, "Shepherdess" and "Rockabye," were rendered by a women's chorus composed of Mrs. D. E. Titsworth, Mrs. F. T. Clawson, Miss H. E. Allis, Mrs. C. H. Dunham, Mrs. W. C. Hubbard, Mrs. J. E. Kimball, Miss Nan Randolph and Miss Lena Tomlinson. The second selection was sung unaccompanied, and was especially effective.

P. Ludwig Conde next played a violin solo, the first movement from Mendelssohn's Concerto in E Minor, with his usual brilliancy of execution and depth of feeling receiving such enthusiastic applause that he was obliged to give an encore. A soprano solo by Miss Laura Bellini, of New York, followed, a difficult and brilliant aria by Verdi. As an encore Miss Bellini sang a dainty love song.

One of the most successful numbers of the evening was a vocal quartette, unaccompanied, by E. D. Cutting, L. H. Biglow, Jr., A. L. Titsworth and D. E. Titsworth; "Doan ye cry, ma honey." The plaintive plantation air, exquisitely harmonized and effectively rendered, was very warmly received.

The second part of the programme began with a duet for organ and piano, "Fantasie—Martha," by Mrs. W. C. Hubbard and A. L. Titsworth, which was much enjoyed. The male quartette then rendered another selection, "Good Night, Beloved," with excellent effect. As an encore they gave a little comic song.

"The Serenade," by Widor, arranged for an instrumental quintette, and played by P. Ludwig Conde, Clarence Mills, Walter Serrell, Miss Utter, William McKillop and A. L. Titsworth, was the next number, given with taste and feeling. Two charming little songs, "A Dream" and "A May Morning," by Miss Bellini, a harmonized arrangement of "The Lost Chord" by the women's chorus, and a spirited rendering of Weber's "Der Freischutz," by an instrumental quartette composed of P. Ludwig Conde, Walter Serrell, A. L. Titsworth and Miss Utter, closed an unusually successful music evening.

A PROWLER IN THE CARK.

People in West End Frightened by a Rough Man's Actions.

For several nights past the residents living in the vicinity of Clinton avenue and West Front street have been annoyed by a man who has been seen prowling about after dark. He would be seen first around one house then another, but when any one appeared he would walk off.

No one was able to get a good sight of him. The police were notified, and the officer on that beat was told to keep a sharp lookout for him. But he was not seen until Tuesday night, when Mrs. Hand, who lives near the brook, heard some one trying her front window. She got up and went into the parlor, where she caught a sight of the would be intruder but before she could raise an alarm he had disappeared.

MONEY FOR MISSIONS.

BUT MISS TALMAGE'S WILL IS TO BE CONTESTED BY HER BROTHER.

She Bequeathed Her Estate to Educate Chinese Children After Her Brother Ezekiel Had Used it For His Life.

New Brunswick, May 17—Ezekiel Talmage, of Piscataway Township, has filed a caveat against the will of his sister, Miss Elizabeth Talmage. Miss Talmage owned a farm in Piscataway, and had personal property to the amount of $1,600. Her will was made a short time before her death and left with her brother in a sealed envelope. He had no idea of its contents, but his sister, he says, gave him to understand that he had been made her sole heir. He appeared at the Surrogate's with the will, but when Deputy Surrogate Daley read it, it was found that it simply gave Ezekiel Talmage a life interest in her estate and provided that at her death the property was to revert to Catherine and Anna Talmage, nieces of Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, to be used according to their judgment and desire for the purpose of Educating children in China.

The legatees are the daughters of John Talmage, a brother of T. DeWitt Talmage. John Talmage's two sons, Rev. William Talmage, of Westfield, N. J., and Rev. J. Talmage, of Schenectady, N. Y., are named as the executors. Accompanying the will was a clipping from The Christian Herald of 1890, containing an illustrated article upon educational work being done by the Talmage sisters among children in China. It went on to say that new lustre would be added to the name of Talmage as a result of their work.

The testator was, so far as known, not related to the family of T. DeWitt Talmage. The connection, if any, is very remote. Each side has retained counsel. The hearing of the case will be delayed for some time, owing to the necessity of communicating with the Talmage sisters, who are in China at present.

RECTOR FISKE SATISFIED.

He Does Not Intend to Leave Westfield for Metuchen.

Westfield, May 17—A recent issue of the New Brunswick Times said: "The vestry of St. Luke's church, Metuchen, met last week to discuss the election of a new rector. They wish to call Rev. Charles Fiske, of Westfield, but it is not known that he cares to make a change. Father Fiske is a former New Brunswicker, he and Father Dunham having been classmates at the seminary. It is thought that he would be acceptable to all the congregation."

When seen by a Press representative Father Fiske said: "I am too happy and contented where I am to think of leaving." Father Fiske said he had been approached informally in regard to the Metuchen charge, but that he would decline to consider such a move.

POSTMASTER FIGHT IS A BITTER ONE.

Thompson's Friends Appeal to Governor Voorhees.

HE REFUSES TO INTERFERE.

SENATOR REED'S MOVE INCREASES FACTIONAL BICKERINGS.

Delegation of Somerville Republicans Went to Trenton Yesterday and Importuned the Governor to Take a Hand and Prevent Cooper, Senator Reed's Friend, From Being Appointed.

Trenton, May 17—Gov. Voorhees was waited upon yesterday afternoon by a large delegation of Somerset county Republicans, headed by Clerk in Chancery Lewis A. Thompson, the object of the visit being to interest the Governor in the fight for postmaster at Somerville. Clerk Thompson and his supporters have succeeded in having the nomination of Geo. C. Cooper for the office held in abeyance, and they are eager to have the matter go over until after the fall election.

It is a part of the old factional fight between Senator Charles A. Reed and Clerk Thompson. The claim is made by the anti-Reed wing that Alvah A. Clark, with Senator Reed's father-in-law, and who is the Democratic incumbent of the postmastership, tendered his resignation for the purpose of strengthening Reed's chances for a re-nomination for the State Senate next fall. The resignation, it is asserted, was placed in the hands of Senator Reed in order that he might present it when he saw fit. The charge is made that before presenting the resignation Senator Reed secured Congressman Howell's indorsement for Cooper and that the resignation and indorsement were practically given in at the same time.

The Thompsonites immediately got to work and had the appointment held up, and are now making a strong effort to prevent its being made. They claim that the Postmaster should not be named until after the election, at which it is expected that the relative strength of the rival leaders will be made apparent. They confidently expect to down Senator Reed. The appeal to the Governor was a sort of final attempt to reach Senators Sewell and Kean, both of whom are said to favor Cooper's appointment.

Clerk Thompson has always been a strong opponent of Governor Voorhees, while Senator Reed has been a supporter of the Governor. Mr. Thompson based his argument on the broad ground that it was for the good of the party, but the Governor, after hearing all the talk, announced that the Somerset Republicans ought to decide themselves, and he refused to take any part in the squabble.

State Banking Commissioner William Bettle was present at the hearing which took place behind closed doors in the Governor's inner sanctum.

BOARDING MISTRESS DUPED.

Fair Young Solicitor Left While Owing for Two Weeks Board.

She was pretty and won the heart of the boarding house keeper at once when she appeared at Mrs. Henry Labaugh's house on West Fourth street the latter part of last month, and asked for board and lodgings for two weeks. She gave her name as Laura Whitman, and claimed to come from Newark. She represented a New York publishing house and was soliciting subscriptions.

Mrs. Labaugh's good heart overflowed with love and compassion for the fair stranger, and when the latter asked her to write to her former employers in Newark for recommendations, Mrs. Labaugh scorned the idea of the pretty solicitor being anything but all right, and gave her a room and the best board the house afforded.

That was the tale the boarding house keeper told to Justice Mosher yesterday afternoon, when she came to have a warrant sworn out for Laura's arrest. It seems the soliciting business did not turn out as well for the girl as she thought it would. At the end of the first week she did not have money enough to pay her board bill and buy her a new spring hat, so Mrs Labaugh told her to buy the hat and let the board bill go another week.

At the end of the second week the money was still not forth coming, so the fair boarder departed the Sunday after and has not been seen since. The justice issued the warrant, but told Mrs. Labaugh that she had better let the matter drop, as Laura's whereabouts were unknown.

Adolphus Giles, of East Second street, who, sometime ago, enlisted in the U. S. Navy and was assigned to Vesuvius, has returned home.

KEAN GETS FRANCHISE.

ELIZABETH COUNCIL GRANTS THE MUCH-TALKED OF RIGHTS.

Survey of the Road Has Already Begun and it is Expected That it Will be Finished by the End of This Summer.

Elizabeth, May 17.—There will be no longer any hitch or delay on the part of the city officials in regard to the trolley franchise, which was passed by the City Council in slightly amended form. Mayor Mack and President Ryan of the City Council signed the ordinance yesterday.

Senator Kean can go ahead now with his trolley road from here to Cranford, and will probably have it completed by November, and the Elizabeth portion finished and in operation by the end of summer. The survey for the line has already been begun, and Engineer Louis Queen, it is said, will build the road. He built the Staten Island Electric Railway and part of the Consolidated Traction Company's line through Elizabeth.

BERNARDSVILLE TAXES.

Tax Collector DeMun Will Soon Know What the Expert Accountant Finds.

Bernardsville, May 17.—Investigation of the accounts of former Tax Collector DeMun, of Bernardsville, by an accountant, is now in the hands of the township counsel, Lindabury, Depue & Faulks, of Newark, who will make a report to the committee of Bernard Township in a few days. A statement will then be given to the public, which will show in detail the tax levy of 1898-99, with receipts and disbursements and a list of delinquents.

In round numbers the total levy during the two years of Mr. DeMun was collector amounts to nearly $85,000. The result of the work of the expert seems to indicate that the trouble in Mr. DeMunn's accounts is due principally to a bad system of bookkeeping.

Walks With Crutches.

In working about one of the houses he was moving his foot slipped and he fell against a beam in such a way as to bruise the bone of his leg. Although he was not aware of the serious extent of his injuries at first, the bruise now has laid him up.

CALL MEN ASSIGNED TO THEIR POSITIONS.

Fire Department is Now Thoroughly Reorganized.

CALLS TO BE RE-ARRANGED.

ALERT'S CARRIAGE IS TO BE STATIONED IN WEST END.

L. M. Dunavan, the New Full Paid Man, is Assigned to the Chemical Engine—Six Men Appointed to Each of the Four Companies—The Fire Horses Also Will be Changed Around.

Regarding the change in the fire department system from a volunteer one to a paid one, there are a few things which the public in general do not seem to understand clearly. In the first place the regular officers of the department will stand as appointed early in the year. In the second place, two additional full paid men have been appointed under the new system. They are L. M. Dunavan and George Mehl, Jr. These men can be deputized to do duty anywhere in the city on any apparatus. In the third place there are twenty-four call men who are to receive $25 per annum, and they are to do at least seventy-five per cent duty during a year, and they will respond to alarms of fire in the several districts to which they are assigned, and they are under the direct supervision of the officers in charge of the fire. They are to wear the regulation hat, badge and uniform.

George Mehl, Jr., one of the new full paid men, will not go on duty until June 1st, which is according to an agreement when he was appointed. L. M. Dunavan, the other full paid man, is now on duty and has been assigned to the chemical engine. Mr Mehl will also be assigned to the chemical.

There is to be a re-arrangement of the fire-alarm calls, and certain companies will respond to certain calls. There will be an announcement made in a few days of the new schedule.

Chief Doane and his assistants met yesterday afternoon and apportioned the various call men to the different companies. No. 1 Hose will be stationed in the house on West Second street, formerly occupied by Gazelle. David S. Dunavan will be acting foreman. The other men assigned to that company are Frazee C. Putnam, Wm. T. Newman, L. J. Spicer, Daniel V. Force and Frank Hart. No. 2 Hose Company will be stationed at fire headquarters, and E. B. Rogers will be acting foreman, with the following assistants: C. W. Smith, W. C. Chamberlain, A. Kahrman, W. P. Henderson and J. P. Clark. Zephyr Hook and Ladder Company will also be stationed at headquarters and W. H. Addis will be acting foreman, with E. J. McCann, H. Kesselring, Walter Harrison, J. Cline and G. H. Freeman as assistants.

The Alert hose wagon will be located in the new house in the West End and will be known as No. 3 Hose Company. C. C. Graves will be acting foreman. The other call men assigned to the company are H. Manning, J. Cose, E. E. Vail, Alex Muir and F. T. Marsh.

As stated Alert hose wagon will be placed in the West End house and the grey team now used to the chemical engine will be placed at that house with George Feiring as driver. This change cannot be made, however, until the pavement is completed in front of the house, which will be in a short time.

Driver Townley and his team will be transferred to fire headquarters, where they will be stationed on duty on the chemical. It is a fact that for some time past the officials have not thought the grey team heavy enough for the chemical, hence the change and the use of the other team, which is much heavier.

Now that the new system has been adopted there is scarcely a dissenting voice against it. It is recognized that if the volunteer system had been continued it would have been necessary to recruit at least one hundred and fifty men, and figuring on this basis it is claimed that the abolishment of the volunteer system means a saving of at least $1,200 to the city, as under the new system there will be no exemption among the paid men in the department, as would be in the case under the volunteer rules. The increased efficiency of the fire department under the new method will be seen from the start, and Plainfield will be more fully protected than ever.

To Hold a Third Trial.

Next Monday the contract case of Vail against Miles, which has already been tried twice, will come up for trial before Justice Smalley. Both times the jury disagreed.

NARROW ESCAPE OF TWO BARBERS FROM DEATH.

Only of Them Turned Out the Gas Light, But Left the Jet on so That They Were Nearly Suffocated During the Night.

That there were not two dead barbers in Plainfield yesterday a. m. is due to fortunate circumstances. They are Harry Batton, who is employed by Mr. Neumann, the barber on Park avenue, and Charles Ragan, who is employed by William Feiring, who also conducts a barber shop on Park avenue.

Both Ragan and Batton room together at the City Hotel, and are the best of friends. Ragan got into bed first, and just before Batton retired he turned out the gas, and unconsciously turned it on again without lighting it.

By this time Mr. Ragan was sound asleep, and it was got long afterward before his room-mate was off to "shuteye town." Both are sound sleepers. Somewhere near midnight or the early morning, Mr. Ragan was suddenly awakened by an intense feeling of suffocation. He could scarcely breath. He could feel his lungs filling up, and he says that he had the most horrible dreams.

In a few minutes he recognized the fact that the room was filled with gas and that he was fast losing consciousness. A hasty examination soon informed him that the gas jet was was turned on full force. He ran to the window and opened it to allow the gas to escape. After doing this he stepped to the bed and aroused his partner, who was also in a dazed condition.

Sometime elapsed before the two barbers were fully themselves again, and the more they thought of what they had passed through the more thankful they were that they had escaped. They then both agreed that in the future they would be more careful. Today they are receiving the congratulations of their friends that they are both in the land of the living.

MUSIC AND TABLEAUX.

Pleasing Affair Arranged by Women of Church of Heavenly Rest.

The Ladies' Friendly Society of the Church of the Heavenly Rest at Evona gave a musicale Tuesday which was one of the most successful affairs of the kind ever held in the church. The programme consisted of selections, both vocal and instrumental, by some of the best artists of this city, as well as by one or two from outside.

There were piano solos by Miss Dewey and Professor W. E. MacClyment; vocal solos by Vernon Hughes, a New York tenor of rare ability, and baritone solos by William H. Holmes. Miss Fisher, of Flemington, rendered solos in a rich soprano voice, and Fred VanEps, the banjo player, gave his services and helped to make the musicale a success.

As a change in the programme four tableaux were presented. The first was entitled, "Young America," that character being taken by Ericson VanOrden. The second was "The Flower Girl," who was Miss Viola Levers. "Faith at the Cross" was depicted by Miss Jennie Wenzel, and the last one, "Goodnight," showed ten little folks, in night-gowns and carrying candles, trotting across the stage to bed.

"A Trip to the White Mountains," a highly humorous story, was told by Viola Levers.

The committee who had charge of the entertainment, deserve great credit. They were Mrs. E. E. Brown, chairman, Mrs. Burke, Mrs. W. Ham Morgan and Miss Wenzel.

He will settle up the business. The stock in the store in this city will be removed to Newark. Mr. White will execute the outstanding contracts of the firm made in this city.

Mr. Brown also takes Mr. Schoonmaker's place on the board of directors.

Mrs. Boylan, of Bank place, has about recovered from a severe illness.

DR CARROLL TALKS ABOUT PORTO RICO.

"Our New Possessions" Makes a Very Interesting Subject.

CLIMATE IS NOT TRYING.

PROPERTY IS TAXED IN A PECULIAR WAY THERE.

Spanish Have Been Drawing Every Cent That They Could Get From the Poor People of the Island—A Desire to Have Americans Come and Give Them Benefit of Their Knowledge.

Dr. H. K. Carroll, the United States Commissioner to Porto Rico, delivered a lecture Tuesday in Grace M. E. church upon "Our New Possessions." The lecture was given under the auspices of the ladies of the church. It was a recital of the Doctor's personal experiences while in the Island and the results of his own observations. The discourse was divided into several heads and treated separately. The Island is a beautiful and wonderful one, according to Dr. Carroll's opinion.

After the speaker had given an idea of the trip there, he began to describe the Island. It is a parallelogram in shape, like a table. Around the edges are plains, while the interior is mountainous. The mountains are so curious that they defy classification. There are seventy rivers emptying into the sea, but few good harbors.

The climate is far less trying than it is here. During the Doctor's visit there, from the middle of October until the middle of January, the highest point the thermometer registered was 85 degrees and the lowest point touched was 72. In summer it sometimes goes as high as 100, but this is rare, and there is always a cool breeze blowing which prevents one from feeling the heat.

The healthfulness of the climate, one would gather from Dr. Carroll's remarks, is great. There is little attention paid to sanitary arrangements, yet the health of foreigners is good. Three rules for Americans to observe when visiting the Island are to keep dry, refrain from mixing different kinds of fruit, and do no work in the hot sun.

The population of Porto Rico, Dr. Carrol said, is about 900,000. About two-thirds of these are whites, the rest being colored and natives. They are divided into two classes, the very poor and the very rich.

Property is taxed in a peculiar way there, not according to its value, but according to the income derived from it. Dr. Carroll said the system of taxation was dreadful, and the Spanish have been drawing every cent they could get out of the poor people.

In closing the lecturer mentioned briefly many things of interest concerning the wonderful military road built across the Island by the Spanish, the products of the Island, the conditions of the people, and their desire to have the Americans come soon and give them the benefit of their training and knowledge.

After the lecture a number of views of the Island, and the scenes visited by Dr. Carroll during his stay there, were thrown upon the screen and shown by the aid of the stereopticon. The views were not distinct, and therefore were a disappointment to the audience, although a faint outline of what the picture was could be seen.

SURPRISE FOR D. C. SMALLEY.

A Party of His Friends Came to His Home Unexpected by Him.

Charles Eisenberg Has Gone Into Voluntary Insolvency.

When David C. Smalley arrived at his home on East Front st., Tuesday evening, he was greatly surprised to learn that a number of his friends had called and taken him unawares. It was a complete surprise to him as he has not the slightest intimation of any intended visit. However, Dave has a genial, happy nature and he welcomed his friends in the most hospitable manner.

The evening was passed in dancing, and listening to instrumental and vocal music furnished by some of the guests. A late lunch or supper was served by the host and hostess. Mrs. Smalley planned and arranged the affair, which was complete in every detail.

To Camp in the Mountains.

Mrs. B. A. Hageman, Jr., and family, of Washington Park, will leave this city about June 1st for Washington, where they will remain for a time. A little later they will go to their summer camp in New Hampshire, and in the fall they will spend a time at the seashore. Mr. Hageman will remain in Plainfield, going back and forth to business daily. He will probably join his family for a time at the summer camp in the mountains.

JACKETS AND CAPES.

Prevailing Fashions In Out of Door Apparel.

Jackets and capes are both worn and will continue to be worn for some time. The jacket does not replace the cape, because each has its different uses. The jacket is for general wear; the cape accompanies more elaborate toilets. Short capes of silk, satin, embroidery, lace, chiffon and guipure are seen in all varieties and colors and are lavishly trimmed. The more extravagant ones have often a hat and parasol to match.

The ornamentation of cloth capes consists principally of applications and incrustations of cloth and straps, pipings and folds of cloth or satin. White predominates among these trimmings, with attractive results. Two or more shades of the same color are also employed and are always pleasing—for example, dark brown, light brown and beige or dark gray and light gray. As for embroidery upon cloth, is is quieter and less elaborate than it was last year and is used alone or in combination with lines of stitching or bands of satin.

YOUNG GIRL'S COSTUME.

The picture shows a charming costume for a girl of from 14 to 15 years old. It is of silver gray satin cloth, the skirt having two slant circular ruffles around the foot, bordered with stitching. The open coat, which has a short basque, is made with large horizontal stitched plaits and has a row of large pearl buttons on each side of the front. The circular pelerine is bordered with stitching, and there are stitched cuffs at the wrists of the tight sleeves. The chemisette is of white surah, the canvas of white lace, and a plain linen collar is worn. The hat of gray straw is trimmed with a drapery of white tulle and a fan of lace.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

PARASOLS.

They Are Gayly Colored and Richly Embroidered.

Parasols are this year less fluffy than they have been for previous years, but are no less costly and elaborate, for frills are no more expensive than the rich applications and embroideries now employed. The covering is usually of silk or satin, plainly stretched, but covered with incrustations of lace or guipure or lace. Embroidered muslin covers are also seen. Parasols of plain or embroidered mousseline de soie are not by any means entirely abandoned, however. They are trimmed with ruches, shirring and lace and are carried with elaborate costumes. There are also one or two bizarre novelties, noticeable because of their oddity, but hardly to be reckoned as a fashionable influence. Among them may be be mentioned a parasol covered with [illegible] a large plaid silk, having blue and white bars on a straw ground. In the middle of each square is a chou of white mousseline de soie with a gold button in the center. Another novelty is the circular covering, which is all in one piece instead of being cut in breadths with a seam down each rib. Among plain parasols are solid colors in rose, cherry, blue, lilac and green, very attractive stripes in black or color and white and small plaids. The last are also employed for sun umbrellas, which are seen in the usual rods, blues and browns besides, with cases to match. Natural wood handles, stained green or black, are favorites.

A picture is given of an attractive vest or plastron to be worn with an open coat or belero. The middle plait of white satin is studded with gold buttons, and on each side of it is a revers of white satin with an embroidered border falling in coquilles. Outside the revers is a ruffle of white mousseline de soie, and the collar is also of mousseline de soie. The cravat of black or colored velvet is fastened by an ornamental buckle.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

SUMMER GOODS.

Light Materials and Their Preferred Trimmings.

Batiste is much in favor for summer gowns and is shown in many varieties, the most attractive having printed flower designs in chine style, or bars, lines and other designs formed by openwork spaces like hemstitching or by heavy threads of silk.

GIRL'S COSTUME.

Tolle de soie and the new foulard merveilleux, which is a material between ordinary foulard and satin merveilleux, compose charming costumes, the preferred decoration being lace or guipure of an old ivory tint.

Baby ribbon forms tiny ruffles for the decoration of revers, yokes and collars, the little ruches made by shirring the ribbon being arranged to form designs in which silk cord or very fine, narrow passementerie also appears.

Jackets are short and are little trimmed. In bright colors, which are still fashionable for them, they finish a neutral tinted costume very prettily. Bright blue is, of course, the first choice, but green, purple, mauve and yellow are also worn besides the delicate tones of mastic and gray. It frequently occurs that stitching of silk of a contrasting color is the sole ornamentation. For example, a little jacket of blue cloth, with a straight front, is bordered with lines of white stitching, which also designs a sort of yoke and stole effect, meeting the upper part of the sleeves.

The cut shows a costume for a girl of 13 years. The plain skirt is of green and white wool plaid, with threads of light blue. The redingote, of plain green wool, opens over a plaid plastron and has large revers of white satin bordered with little plaitings. The sleeves are plain, the collar and belt of light blue silk. The hat, of white straw, is trimmed with fawn feathers and blue and white fancy ribbons.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

CLINGING GOWNS.

Their Arrangement Is Modified to Suit the Figure.

The clinging costumes now in vogue are worn by every woman, whether she is robust or slender, but the arrangement of the gown is entirely left by the skilful dressmaker according to the figure of the wearer. If she be slender but well rounded, the dress is kept quite smooth, without a plait or gather anywhere, but if there is a tendency to plumpness and too great rotundity of contour folds are introduced here and there to obscure the actual lines of the form.

One difficulty about these tight costumes is the fastening. Certain of the skirts fold over at the side, and these, of course, are closed under the fold. In the case of a skirt, the fastening may be under the trimming where it runs up to the waist. The under and princess gowns often close in the middle of the back with buttons, lacings or even snap clasps.

The costume shown in today's illustration is of black silk. The trained skirt is cut with a redingote effect and trimmed with five seant circular ruffles which diminish to nothing in front. The ruffles are edged with yellow silk. The redingote opens over a tablier of yellow silk covered with black tulle embroidered with jet. The bodice has a triple collar and revers edged with yellow silk and loose inner parts also of yellow silk. The sleeves have three seant circular ruffles at the wrist, bordered with yellow silk, and the crossed chemisette is of embroidered tulle over yellow silk. The cravat is of white tulle, the hat of black straw trimmed with yellow tulle and golden brown feathers.

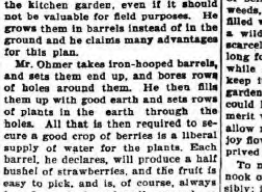
BARREL STRAWBERRIES.

A Novel Method of Cultivation Devised by J. F. Ohmer of Dayton, Ohio.

J. F. Ohmer of Dayton, O., has a novel method of cultivating strawberries, which may prove well adapted to the kitchen garden, even if it should not be valuable for field purposes. He grows them in barrels instead of in the ground and he claims many advantages for this plan.

Mr. Ohmer takes iron-hooped barrels, and sets them end up, and bores rows of holes around them. He then fills them up with good earth and sets rows of plants in the earth through the holes. All that is then required to secure a good crop of berries is a liberal supply of water for the plants. Each barrel, he declares, will produce a half bushel of strawberries, and the fruit is easy to pick, and is, of course, always free from sand, and well exposed, so that it can grow and ripen properly.



THE BARRELS IN POSITION.

The barrels are set four feet apart from centre to centre, and an acre of land will hold 2,500 of them. This would give a yield of 1,250 bushels of strawberries to the acre, and if the boxes in which they were shipped held full pints, would equal 80,000 boxes. At this rate of yield three or four barrels filled with plants in this way ought to give an ample supply of strawberries for an ordinary family.

Arrangement for a Hog House.

A hog house 15 by 28 feet for a boar, four sows and their offspring may be arranged as follows: The house must be adjacent to lots on either side so as to give the animals exercise and sunshine. It should be floored with hard wood and must be kept clean. Provide plenty of bedding. The passageway between the pen for the pigs and those for the older animals is two feet wide. The house should be high enough to furnish room above the hogs for storing corn and other grain feeds. This can be spouted down into the passageway convenient for feeding.

A Cherry Orchard.

Professor Budd of the Iowa Experiment Station, says that a cherry orchard does best when planted thickly in rows running north and south, and giving a wider space between the rows to admit the sun and allow free circulation of air. Orchards where the rows were twenty-four feet apart, and the trees ten feet apart in the rows, have done better than those planted in the usual way. He also thinks root grafting of the cherry is better than budding, setting them in the ground on top bud of the scion, which enables the roots to be thrown out directly from the scion.

Currant Bushes.

Currant bushes often seem to have a much weaker growth than should be natural to them. When such weakened branches are cut across they will often be found hollow from the work of the currant stem-borer. Before Winter comes the larva crawls out and goes into the earth to undergo its transformation. If the infested canes branches be cut away and burned early in Autumn, the larvae are destroyed. The puncture on the stem where the egg was deposited, can easily be detected.

Sheep Food.

If you are starting in the sheep business now, drop the old idea that they will live on what the cattle leave. They would do this under the old system, when cattle were given twice as much hay as they could eat; but cattle should eat all that is fit to eat that comes into their cribs, and sheep need as good food and as regular care as any stock.

Treatment for a Cow.

If your cow sucks herself, put on a halter and a strap around the body behind the shoulder, then fix a pole from the halter to the strap on the body. If this is done she will find it impossible for the cow to get her head to her udder and it will not prevent her from feeding in the pasture.

Bronchitis.

If your lamb has a rattling in his throat, like croup, keep him in a warm comfortable place and give him a teaspoonful of compound syrup of squills in a dessertspoonful of cod liver oil 3 times a day.

Knows the Value of Money.

A Troy store rejoices in the presence of a cat that will pounce upon a coin whenever opportunity is afforded her. She makes herself useful when the coin falls from the counter to the floor and rolls away, for then she hunts it up and drags it to light.

Deborment.

In cases of deborment when they do not heal, mix 2 oz. peroxide of hydrogen with 4 oz. water and inject a little twice a day.

Try a few plants of some new berry, and then give them the best possible cultivation. This is a good way to select.

THE WOMAN who thinks of nothing but dress is pleasanter to look at than the woman who never thinks of dress.

There is no remedy for string halt in horses.

NOOKS AND CORNERS.

Method by Which They May Be Converted Into Flower Gardens.

There are nooks and corners near almost every farm house, which instead of being left to grow up to noxious weeds, could, with a little labor, be made with pleasing flowers, to grow in a wild but natural way. There is scarcely a farmer's wife who does not long for a flower garden of some kind, while few can command the time to keep it in proper order. A neglected garden is a source of pain, but if one could have a wild garden whose chief merit was freedom from care, it would allow many a busy housekeeper to enjoy flowers who might otherwise be deprived of this pleasure.

To make a wild garden, select some nook or corner near the house, if possible; if it is sunny, so much the better; do not attempt to remove the stones, but fill in the interstices with soil from the woods, or with rich garden soil. Now, armed with a trowel, make a visit to the woods. You will find many plants still in blossom and easily recognized. Dig carefully about them, leaving as much of the soil clinging to the root as possible, and set them without order in your bed, where they will almost surely strike root and grow, and by another spring greet you with their smiling faces before the snows of Winter have fairly disappeared. If *there should be a place in the bed un*filled, set out columbines, larkspurs, moss, pink, primrose, perennial phlox, and other hardy, suitable plants. The daffodil, jonquil, and star-flower would also find here a soil adapted to their needs.

All the cultivation this garden requires is to pull the weeds and occasionally water the plants. Other unsightly places near the farmhouse, if not transformed into spots of beauty, can at least be greatly improved by the use of running vines. Old outhouses and old fences can easily be covered with vines, of which the five-leaf ivy is the best, as it is hardy as well as a rapid grower; it needs no training, as it will fasten itself even to a brick wall by means of little suckers, which are numerous in its branches. All that is necessary is to set it beside what is to be covered, and it will take care of itself and become one of the most beautiful plants on the place.

At the back door of nearly every farmhouse is a chip-yard, where summer wood has been prepared during the winter months, and when the season for cleaning up arrives, there is generally quite an area to rake off to make it presentable. After the chips are all removed, have a bed spaded up and sowed with the large double varieties of poppies in pens. No weeding will be required, and by midsummer your eye will fondly rest upon a magnificent bed of flowers that will cost you neither time nor labor.

Records of Crops.

It is often helpful in testing new vegetables, strawberries, or other farm and garden products, to keep a record during the growing season, noting results from time to time. Mark the rows and keep the weather from effacing the record by the device shown in the cut. The stopper or cork has a spindle of wood just reaching to the *bottom of the bottle. To this is fas*tened a sheet of paper. Make notes from time to time, roll up the paper and put all snugly into the bottle, which set down to mark the row. It is surprising how quickly the weather effaces all records made on wood or paper, either with a pencil or with pen and ink. It must be covered tightly away from the air, as in the present case, if one is to be reasonably sure to find his memorandum at the end of the season as he made it at the beginning. Old bottles are so common about all houses that one by a few moment's work can make all the record blanks he needs.—(D.

Strawberries.

We are now putting a coat of good fertilizer over the strawberries and hoeing it in well, so as to stir the soil round the plants. The lawn clippings are then wheeled in on the beds as fast as they are collected and serve two purposes, they keep down all weeds, and act as a mulch to keep the roots cool and the fruit clean. If lawn clippings are not available, some short straw or coarse meadow hay will do as a substitute, but it pays to mulch well, even if the cost of putting it on seems great at first. Young plantations made this spring of any of the newer berries for trial, ought to have the flower stems picked off as soon as they show, to give strength to the young plants and cause the plentiful production of runners in summer, all of which, if carefully set out in good ground will give a good crop next year, so that it pays to encourage their production by the sacrifice of the few weak flowers that would be produced now.

Wide Tires Popular.

Low-down farm wagons with wide tires are becoming so good, so cheap and withal so popular that every farmer needs one to save his back, his horses and his fields.

HEAVES.—Please give me a recipe for heaves. I have a pony that coughs and shows signs of heaves, and would like to stop it, or at least ease it up.—A. C.

—They cannot be cured. Keep the bowels active and give only a limited quantity of food and no more. Do not allow him to have hay at all. Give some grass and less heavy food. When stomach is full he will heave badly, but if kept comparatively empty he will stand work quite well.

CLOSED TEAT.—Some time since one of my cows' teats became very hard to milk, and after milking it a few times could not get any more. Seemed to grow up at the point; seems to be little hard in point; feels like the milk orifice had closed and turned hard like gristle. And now another one seems a little sore at point and very hard to milk; am afraid it is going same as the other.—Subscriber.

—This teat may have been frozen and caused the condition. You may be able to soften it a little by applying carbolized vaseline, with a little turpentine added, to the teat twice a day. A milk tube inserted through the duct of the teat may assist in keeping the hole open and the milk drawn off.

WEAK IN BACK—KIDNEY WORM. —My hogs are sick; they have sore worms, called kidney worm here, also some hard scales on their backs. The hogs are lame in back and hind parts. They eat well, but almost drag their hind parts around.—M. K.

—Give these hogs one to two tablespoonfuls of castor oil to relax the bowels. Following this give teaspoonful turpentine, 10 drops tincture gentian and 5 drops fluid extract nux vomica in half pint milk or gruel twice a day. To remove scales and sores from skin, apply equal parts of flour of sulphur and lard repeated for three days, and then wash off with soap and warm water; repeat if necessary. Feed on light, soft food. You will find good remedies for worms advertised, which will help the condition of your hogs also.

PROUD FLESH—I have a mare which a year and a half ago got scratched a little on hind leg midway between fetlock and pastern joint, front side; shortly after some hogs bit it open. Nothing was done for it the first winter. In the spring there was a bunch as large as fist of proud flesh; was cut off twice last summer by veterinary, but now it is larger. Mare is due to foal in May. What would you advise?

—This tumor should be thoroughly removed with the knife and then cauterized with a hot iron and closely watched during the whole healing process, to touch the unhealthy granulations with lunar caustic, and raw surface kept a little below the skin all the time. One ounce each of acetate of lead and sulphate of zinc in a pint of water, or use Argus healing lotion. Apply as a dressing twice a day.

NASAL GLEET.—I bought a horse about two months ago; did not notice anything wrong till about a month after I bought him; seemed to have a terribly bad smelling breath, with a thick discharge from nostril; seemed to come mostly from left side. Horse is thin in flesh, but seems to eat good. Horse runs with other horses. Noticed one of the other horses seems to have a thick gray discharge from nose. Some of the others have a cough. Is it a contagious disease?

—You horse has nasal gleet. It may be caused by an ulcerated tooth or as a result of acute catarrh, distemper or influenza. The sinus should be trephined by an expert surgeon and followed by proper antiseptic treatment, and the tooth removed if the cause. The other horses which have slight discharges and a cough could best be treated with "Feverine" to correct the condition.

FARCY.—Does farcy ever run into any other disease. My horse has had the farcy for over a year, but not bad only for about four months. It was just from his fore legs on abdomen, sheath and down hind legs, but now it is breaking out over his breast and legs also; is breaking out in scabs, some are festered a little and look as if it was going to turn gray when it hairs out. Horse is very stupid at times, but eats heartily.

—True farcy is but one form of glanders, and is not nearly so common as many would make it out to be. We are confident that you have no farcy at all, but if you will give the horse a physic of an ounce of aloes in water drench, and then put 2 ounces Fowler's solution in a pint of water and put a tablespoonful of this in feed three times a day and use a little iodoform salve on sores or ulcers as necessary you will soon get an improvement in general condition of skin, etc.

HINTS.—Strong lye put in water will make it soft as rain water.

TO REMOVE PAPER from a wall, set a boiler or kettle, two-thirds full of boiling water, on a board in the room, and drop in several hissing hot bricks, then close the room until the steam has penetrated the paper. Repeat if necessary.

RAISING DUCKS.

A Successful Woman Poultry Raiser Gives Some Valuable Advice.

A woman poultry raiser, Mrs. Lehmann, of Wisconsin, very successful with ducks, practices the following methods:

I have the Pekin ducks, and they are one of the best layers, but they seldom sit successfully, so you have to set the eggs under hens, or in incubators.

In feeding ducks do not feed raw corn meal; that is where so many people make a failure of ducks; it is sure death to them. Cut any time except the third day they will turn over and die, and someone will say it is one thing and some another; but it is nothing in the world but the raw corn meal. They will grow on skim milk like little pigs, and middlings in the skim milk, that does not get sticky, and they will eat it up all right. I feed a great deal of cheese curd; we have lots of skim milk, and I feed a great deal of it with cheese curds to both chickens and ducks, and I feed a great deal of it sweet, because we run it through the separator and we have it sweet and warm right from the separator.

PEKIN DUCK.

My henhouse is on a side hill, and my well is on top of the hill, and I have pipes carrying water to barrels. You must have something that the ducks can get into and not drown. I turn the faucet enough to let it drip, and let the ducks get water that way. For the old ducks I have a kerosene barrel, cut off about a foot and set into the ground. I think this year I shall try to have a hole dug and cemented for them, because we have plenty of water, and keep the water running into it; have it not over two feet deep, and slant it out so that the edges are easy to get out of on to the land. Ducks will drown as quickly as chickens. Let the water drip and keep it full all the time; let the ducks go in whenever they want to. Do not let little ducks have too much water, as they are apt to go in and play too long and get chilled.

When they begin to feather out they can have all the water they want, but before a duck or goose is feathered out it must not get wet. I keep the water dripping into this trough, and it stands there for the old hens. We sometimes have to sweep it out with an old broom, but if it is kept running fresh all the time it is not apt to get dirty. You must not forget that you must have grass for your chickens; for ducks, it doesn't make any difference.

Spraying of Trees.

It has been thoroughly demonstrated that the best time to spray fruit trees for the codling moth is directly after the flower petals fall. The reason for this being the best time is that the calyx, or green outer section to the blossom bud, is now open. After the petals of the flowers have fallen the poison may be thrown into the heart of the fruit to be, the sepals being opened wide.

The moth lays its egg in the blossom; it does not take many days for it to hatch. If spraying is not done until a couple of weeks after the flower petals fall the green sepals will have closed up, making a snug little house for the moth, from which it has no egress save through eating its way out. Whereas, if sprayed directly after the blossom falls, the young worm will get the full benefit of the poison, and be forever done away with.

One pound of paris green is used to one hundred and fifty or two hundred gallons of water. Men who have sprayed their fruit trees have testified to a large increase of fruit.

Cleaning Up Time.

Clean out all old litter, scrub floors of coops thoroughly, and spray well with kerosene; then bed with fresh straw.

Whitewash the entire inside of your houses, using an ounce of carbolic acid to a pail of wash.

Scrub or scald roosts, and when replacing them, soak them with kerosene.

Clean out dust boxes, and wait until later to replenish them with dry sand.

Keep nest boxes clean and well kerosened.

Set all the hens you can, and take the best care of your chicks; make them grow fast, so that they may be strong enough to stand the midsummer heat. Early-hatched chicks grow the best, but May-hatched do almost as well.

Give your chicks all the grass run you can; it will make them grow faster.

Lantern in the Barn.

One of the best devices for securing the lantern in the barn while the stock is being looked after, is an overhead wire, securely fastened and running the entire length of the stable, one end of which can be quickly unhooked, the lantern slipped on, and the wire again fastened. It doesn't pay to take any unnecessary risks with the lantern in the barn.

YOUNG FRUIT TREES.

Precaution They Should Receive to Prevent Insects Destroying Them.

*Many States have passed laws pro*viding for omnical inspection of nurseries and nursery stock, and the results of work along this line in 1897 by the New York Agricultural Experiment Station indicate that such inspection is more than desirable in New York. Only a few nurseries were examined, and none of them were seriously infested; yet ten species of injurious insects were found, whose chief means of gaining wide distribution is by shipment of nursery stock carrying either the insects or their eggs. Bulletin No. 136 of the station describes the methods of inspection used by the station entomologist, outlines the benefits to both nurserymen and orchardist of systematic inspection of nurseries, summarizes briefly the work of the station in 1897 and gives descriptions of the insects found, illustrations of them and their work, and methods for their destruction in both nursery and orchard.

The insects found may be classed in four general groups: Scale insects, including oystershell barklouse, scurfy barklouse, New York plum Lecanium, oak scale and San Jose scale; plant lice, including woolly louse of the apple; case-bearers, pistol-case bearer and cigar-case bearer and bud moth; borers, including peachtree borer.

The remedies to be used against the first two classes of insects consist of caustic washes such as whale-oil soap solution, kerosene emulsion or kerosene-water mixture in the orchard, applied in strong solutions in fall or winter after loosening the scales by brushing or gentle scraping, or weaker solutions in the spring when the young lice and scale are somewhat unprotected. In the nursery similar methods are to be used on young stock, but it is thought that fumigation in the packing-houses or storage cellars with hydrocyanic acid gas will be a practical means of getting rid of these and all hibernating insects.

The case-bearers and bud moth must be met in the orchards, by spraying in very early spring, when the buds are breaking and leaves unfolding, with Paris green, London purple or green arsenite. The borers should be kept out of the trees by mounding with earth, surrounding the base of the trunks with shields or smearing with some offensive mixture to prevent the mother moth from depositing her eggs in the favorite location. Once established, the only way to get rid of the borers themselves is to cut them out with a knife or pierce them in their tunnels with a sharp wire.

Further information on the San Jose scale has been found in only very limited numbers in Western New York, and the danger of its spreading from these known locations is now very slight.

Those interested may obtain the bulletin from the station by a postal card request for it.

Helps for the Housekeeper.

Those who have large houses to keep clean, and a family to care for, should learn the best and easiest ways of performing these duties. From cellar to attic they must go in one unending round and they must put a great deal of contentment and will into it if the spirit is not chafed by it.

Fruit stains and other discolorations may be removed from dishes by rubbing them with common baking soda moistened with water. An old tooth brush will be found useful in cleaning the crevices of cut glass.

If you use a dash churn, you have doubtless been troubled with cream spattering over the top. Melt the top and bottom off a tomato can—or any other can of that size. This will leave a tin cylinder, which may be slipped over the dasher handle to the lid, and prevent any further splashing.

If you use flour starch for the cuffs and clothes, wet the flour with cold water and stir or beat it until not a lump remains, then pour boiling water on it. When it is ready to take from the stove, stir into it a little borax that has been dissolved in water. A teaspoonful of borax to a gallon of boiled starch is about the right proportion. This prevents the starch from sticking when the clothes are ironed.

Many housekeepers have been annoyed by having the colors of their beautiful embroidered centerpiece and doilies grow faded and dingy after being laundered a few times. This is not necessary if they are washed properly. Prepare a suds of luke warm water and good white soap, and add a little borax to it. Rub them gently between the hands until clean, using two soapy waters if necessary. Rinse through two waters with a very little bluing in the second and hang in the shade to dry. After they have been dampened and rolled up an hour or two, iron them on the wrong side. Very little starch is needed for such articles, and many good housekeepers never use any. The borax boiled in starch added to the second rinse water is all that is ever necessary. Borax is better than eal soda or potash for softening hard water, for it does not rot the clothes or fade the colors.

A dish drainer is one of the handsomest of kitchen utensils. Wash the dishes in hot suds, pile them in the drainer which sets in a large shallow pan, and pour clear hot water over them. When they are cool, you will find them dry and shining, without the trouble of wiping them. E. C.

Keep Them From Rusting.

Saucepans and kettles may be prevented from rusting if when washed they are always placed on the stove a few minutes to thoroughly dry.

OUR CHURCH ABROAD

THE TYRANNY THAT SEEKS TO CHAIN IT IN ITALY AND FRANCE.

Even at the Very Altar Are the Priests Hampered, and Every Effort is Made to Cripple Them in the Discharge of Their Sacred Duties.

In an article entitled "The Chains of the Church" our Italian contemporary, Unita Cattolica, describes the condition of the church in a country where a lay element hostile to the holy see imposes on the clergy obligations inconsistent with their rights and full freedom as ecclesiastics. This question of the relative powers of church and state, despite the prudence and patience of Leo XIII. is cropping up frequently in most of the continental nations. The theory proclaimed by Cavour was that "a free church in a free state." Where the Catholic forces are not strong the freedom seems to be all on the side of the state, and for the church there is little better than oppression. The Italian government by such acts as the suppression of Catholic organizations and parochial committees has made manifest to the world its intention of holding the church in servitude.

This attitude has been illustrated by more than one incident of late. The Catholic liturgy prescribes that only flags which have been blessed should be admitted into the churches. The regulation is of long standing and has not been drawn up in view of present circumstances. The societies who have had their flags blessed can enter a church in a body. When flags have not been blessed, they must be folded before the bearers are allowed in, and there must be no Masonic symbols, as the Freemasons are under excommunication.

Recently, in connection with some ceremony or other, an association of sailors visited Rome and presented themselves at the door of the Church of St. Andrea delle Frate, which is served by the Franciscans Minor. They carried a flag which had not been blessed, and the sacristan tried to prevent them from taking the profane emblem into the church. The tailors threatened him with violence. He procured assistance, and a struggle ensued in which the defenders of the liturgical regulation were successful. The association carried their flag triumphantly into the church, but the clergy withdrew into the sacristy, and no religious ceremony took place.

The bearers of the flag laid a complaint against the clergy before the civil authorities. The case went from court to court until it came before the council of state, a mixed body, but administrative and judicial, which discharges the office of a final court of appeal. The council, having duly considered the matter, has decided that in refusing to allow the tailors to hoist their flag in the church the ecclesiastics outraged the national colors. The decision has been received with strong protests by the clergy and the Catholic press, for they feel that henceforward any society, however hostile, can enter a church for the purpose of disturbance if they only raise the Italian tricolor.

The clergy disclaim any want of respect for the national emblem. If a military detachment goes to church for a ceremony, no opposition will be offered to them in bringing the flag within the sacred edifice. An liturgy has been provided for such a case and authorized an act symbolizing the good relations which ought to exist between church and state. But the flag is sometimes carried by societies to whose principles the church is utterly opposed, and the clergy strongly object to this insidious way of seeking a religious sanction for such principles. The objection is sound and reasonable, but the council of state has spoken, and the clergy will be forced to submit.

The incident is deemed all the more ominous as it is one of many evidences that state officials are determined to curtail the liberty of the clergy as much as possible and to treat them as mere salaried servants. For instance, the Unita Cattolica informs us that at Padua a Lenten service was stopped because a military review was held on the same day. "The idea is," says the Florentine Journal, "that the priest must obey the orders of the secular authorities. The state pays him, and he must do as he is directed to do by those who feed him. They give him a stipend hardly equal to that of coachman, and they think that the pastor whom the Lord has commanded to feed his flock ought to adapt himself to their wishes just like the coachman."

The subject has a very practical bearing on Catholic life. Throughout the continental countries in former days the spirit of the government was Catholic, and if there were occasional aggressions upon the church the general interests of religion rarely suffered. Under such conditions the union of church and state was essentially for the welfare of both. But in recent times, when men who have no love for the church or the holy see have succeeded in obtaining the reins of power, they have worked with might and main to tyrannize over the clergy and convert them into mere state functionaries. In France the policy has been to create a desert in and around the churches. For the state the union with the church means not any favor to religious work, but the exercise of authority in the ecclesiastical domain by the prefect and the minister of public worship. If the priest is faint hearted or lukewarm in his zeal, he is left alone. The prefect does not interfere with him, for he knows that it will cause a good impression at headquarters if he can report that indifference to religion is growing in his district. If the priest is energetic, his energy is checked, and he is made to feel in a hundred ways that his freedom of action is narrow and that to undertake any initiative measures would be dangerous. The state officials keep away from his church, and, as far as they can, discountenance attendance.

Under such circumstances it is difficult to see how anything like religious progress can be expected. In Italy the enemies of the church declare that the priests must be driven back into the churches, but even there they do not leave them in peace. They hamper and cripple them at the very altar, and the general result is pretty much the same as in France. It becomes impossible for the clergy to exercise sufficient power to win the people as a whole to their sides and to direct the progress which Catholic principles demand.

If the fettering of the church proceeds as it has now gone on for a good many years, the problem must sooner or later arise whether it is not better that the clergy should be altogether emancipated from the domination of a hostile state in order that they may exercise apostolic freedom in the discharge of their sacred duties.—London Catholic Times and Opinion.

BAPTISM.

Some Things Which All Catholics Should but Do Not Know.

A child should be presented for baptism without delay in the parish church at the proper time. If some grave reason impels one to have his child baptized outside of the parish, the written permission of the pastor is necessary.

There should be two practical Catholics for sponsors, a godfather and a godmother. In case of necessity one sponsor, of the same sex as the child, will suffice.

At least one Christian name should be selected for the child.

The godmother holds the child with the head resting on her right arm. The clothing about the neck of the child should be loose, so that the priest may easily anoint the breast and back. The responses are to be made and the Apostles' Creed and Our Father recited clearly and with sincerity.

The sponsors place their right hands upon the child at the pouring of the water. They also hold the candlestick when the priest presents it.

It is becoming for the sponsor and the father to present an offering in keeping with their means to the officiating clergyman.

No charge is made for the administration of a sacrament. Custom demands an offering or honorarium in proportion to the means of the ones concerned. Those who are in poverty are not required to observe the custom.

Parents should not baptize their own children, except in danger of death, when no one else is near.

It is proper for the mother to receive the blessing of the church after her child is baptized. The ceremony is called churching.

VATICAN AND QUIRINAL.

Will the Words of the Holy Father Prove Prophetic?

Some years ago my friend was at the Vatican in the pope's private oratory. Leo XIII seemed tired and worried, but was speaking in French in a loud and distinct voice. Suddenly raising himself by the aid of his thin hands from his seat, he went to the window from which the Quirinal is visible. With his tall figure, then still upright, enveloped from head to foot in white, he looked erect, inspired and powerful. "You went there yesterday," he said. "Were you not received by the king?"

Then, pointing to the Quirinal with outstretched arm, he continued: "These two houses cannot remain indefinitely divided, and I tell you that the day will come when they will work in concert for the glory of this church and of this country. As for me"—and his voice descended to a tone of fervent prayer and affectionate gesture.—Paris Cor. London Times, March 16

What Have You Sown?

There is a flower called heartsease which flourisheth on the meanest soil when fed with good deeds and kindly thoughts, and 'tis worth a king's ransom to its possessor. That same flower hath its roots deep in the heart of God and its fruit unto eternity, where every good shall reap its unfailing harvest of weal and every ill deal find its just meed of woe. We need not think to cheat ourselves with the fancy that God's law can fail. Here and hereafter we shall reap as we have sown.

Representatives of the Catholic Young Men's National union from Baltimore, Philadelphia, Albany, Newark, Trenton, Boston, Providence and New York met at the office of the national president, the Rev. T. McGurl of Brooklyn, recently, to arrange for the annual meeting of the union, which is to take place this year in Newark, the city in which it was organized a quarter of a century ago. The dates have been fixed for July 11 and 12.

To Teach the Deaf and Dumb.

The Sisters of St. Joseph who are to have charge of the deaf and dumb school which Mgr. Magennis has erected at Jamaica Plain, Mass., are preparing themselves for the better discharge of these functions by visiting deaf and dumb schools and observing the methods therein used. They have already visited such institutions at Buffalo, Northampton, Hartford and Philadelphia.

THE AD. FEMININE.

TRICKS TO LURE THE CLUBWOMAN'S DOLLAR FROM HER PURSE.

How the Shrewd Advertiser Baits the Hook Which is Dropped Into the Troubled Waters of Clubdom—Annette Crawford Draws Conclusions.

[Copyright, 1896, by American Press Association.]

In looking over the current numbers of various publications devoted to the woman who clubs, I confess to have been much interested in the advertising pages than in the inner text. It is the attitude of the advertiser toward the clubwoman which interests and amuses.

As a rule it represents a man's idea of the most successful methods by which thinking women can be induced to part with her dollars and dimes. It likewise represents the man's strange and sometimes absurd notions of what he thinks the clubwoman most needs and desires, else why would he advertise in a publication devoted especially to her interests?

Here, for instance, is the flaming advertisement of a man in Sioux City who offers to teach her how to "stuff birds" and to supply a "compound of wonderful embalming power," all for the small sum of $1, with liberal discounts to agents. She is assured that she can do nice work from the start and can make money teaching her friends.

In a single publication I find three advertisements of books on parliamentary law which purport to tell women how they should conduct their club meetings, as if, forsooth, women did not have the same facilities and intelligence as men in consulting and construing the standard authorities on parliamentary practice.

A vaudeville theater in Boston presents its compliments in a display ad., assuring the readers of the woman's club paper that that is the "popular resort for women and children" and offering to send a beautifully illustrated booklet.

A shrewd New England lawyer publishes a card in which he gravely announces that "no more serious business can be undertaken than the selection of an executor or administrator" and straightway recommends himself to the clubwomen as the most desirable man to attend to their estates upon their decease.

An advertisement which smacks of the secondhand shop recites that "the highest price will be paid for old gold and silver, diamonds, watches and precious stones."

A young woman in Nebraska offers her services to clubwomen as a conductor of correspondence study courses. A Boston young woman announces her willingness to give them botany lessons, while a Massachusetts man would be pleased to instruct them from the lecture platform in sociology and literature, and a Jersey man would for consideration tell them all about "the English race and its future."

In a late clubwoman's journal before me a Boston woman of enterprise offers her patronage to European parties, announcing that she will have a special ship reserved. She advertises a special trip for the Daughters of the American Revolution, though doubtless any of us would be permitted to go if the requisite cash is forthcoming.

In a leading journal for clubwomen I find the prospectus of a women's magazine which, for the sake of a local habitation and a name, I will call the Chicago Pink Tea, and that is quite as appropriate a name as the true one. It graciously proposes to give to "every new subscriber to the magazine and to every one renewing subscription a copperplate half tone engraving from her portrait free of charge." This plate is of the regular newspaper column width, and the prospectus points out that "every woman or girl who entertains, goes into society or has musical or other accomplishments absolutely needs a copperplate engraving of herself" and modestly suggests that there are "frequent occasions when your local newspaper wants your picture and has no means of reproducing it. You are identified with local happenings every day in social life which interest your friends, neighbors and acquaintances, which, with your picture, make very readable news."

How delightful! How convenient! If you are the hostess of an afternoon tea or the central figure of an evening soiree, all you have to do is to hand the half tone plate to the reporter who writes up the affair, and, if there is no reporter present, you can write it yourself and send the plate to the editor, and in the morning you have the satisfaction of seeing your picture in print.

SUMMER COLORS.

Gay Tints and White the Prevailing Fashion.

White, which is to prevail during the warm weather, has brought into favor those relative shades which are near itself—pale ecru, blush, blue white, lavender, buff and light fawn. These colors are seen in crash fabrics, wools and silks and are very fashionable, being perishable and therefore only to be indulged in by the wealthy. Who will wear a gown of blush cloth save a woman who can afford to throw it aside at the first sign of soil?

After white and kindred tones blue is to be considered the leading effect. Navy blue is always worn, but fashion now demands a bright, vivid blue—hortensia, periwinkle, bluet. Then come green and violet, on nearly equal terms with each other. Yellow also is well represented, but there is a sudden jump from vivid to subdued shades, and gray and fawn are as well liked as green and violet, although they are usually combined with vivid colors. Nevertheless, charming and fashionable models are shown in which gray is combined with silver and fawn with gold, no distinct contrast being established.

The sketch shows an odd design for a young girl's gown. There is a princess tunic of bottle green cloth, which buttons at the back and opens at each side of the tablier over a panel of pinkish gray corduroy, across which is a sort of lacing composed of a narrow insert of green silk. The V shaped plastron of plaited silk matching the corduroy is edged by a bias band of green silk, with little bows at the shoulders, and a similar band encircles the armhole. There are epaulets of plaited gray silk. The green straw hat is trimmed with pink satin and gray plumes.

Pretty Clothes For Warm Weather Use.

An effort is being made to introduce boleros of bright colors, to be worn with all sorts of white cheviot or pique. The idea is picturesque, and there is no reason why scarlet, blue and green boleros should not be as well worn as jackets of the same gay tints. The red golf jackets, short and of the same heavy webbing as sweaters, but with silk sleeves, are no doubt in part the cause of the lamenting of brilliant boleros.

Changeable effects in both silk and wool goods are still much in favor, especially in material woven with a broche design. There are a number of attractive taffetas in this class of goods, having a broken surface on which appear dots, stripes, broken lines, small geometrical figures or floral designs. The changeable granite suitings are very pleasing, and silk and wool mixed fabrics also appear in glace colors. Blue and white, blue and fawn, violet and mauve, violet and green, are among the favorite combinations.

Pale yellow is much seen in lawns, batistes and piques, and some dainty and fresh looking shirt waists are of this color. A rich orange also appears, but is used for silk waists plain or plaided and for chemisettes worn under boleros. Beneath a brown bolero, or one of navy blue, this deep, subdued orange is charming on a brunette.

The picture shows an attractive gown of steel gray cloth, the skirt having a deep facing of steel gray velvet and an additional decoration of steel buttons. The short coat is also trimmed with steel buttons, and the collar, revers and inner fronts are of mastic cloth. There is a vest of the gray cloth opening over a shirt bosom, a mastaxin yellow cravat being worn. The hat of yellow straw is trimmed with white tulle and white feathers.

FASHION HINTS.

The Preferred Mode In Stationery and Minor Matters.

Mourning toilets should always be simple. Flat trimmings are preferable, and for jewelry dull jet or black wood is alone allowed. A line of white may be worn at the throat and wrists and inside the edge of the bonnet.

Some years ago black hats were almost universally worn, accompanying even the lightest gowns, but this season there is a change, and it is not possible to have millinery too gay in color. Pale gray hats with gray trimming and white hats with white trimming will go well with any toilet, but decided colors are apt to be inconvenient for a woman who cannot afford a variety of different hats.

Most stationery now has a cipher. The cipher is small, at the top or left hand upper corner of the street. Light, soft greens, blues, lavenders and grays being favorite tints for paper, the cipher is usually white, and there is often a white border. Light rose pink stationery with the same white trimmings is also seen, but is less elegant. There is white sealing wax for use with these papers, and the cipher is repeated upon the seal.

The gown illustrated has a double skirt of pearl gray cloth, over which is a tunic of pearl gray cloth pointed in front and at the back and bordered with applications of gray velvet. The bodice, which fits tightly behind, is slightly gathered at the waist in front and is cut away to show a guimpe of plaited white satin, decorated with silver buttons. The top of the bodice is edged with gray velvet applications, and the sleeves are covered with the same ornamentation. The gray velvet belt is fastened by a silver buckle. The hat of pearl gray straw is trimmed with a drapery of gray tulle and white feathers.

VARIOUS NOTES.

Silks For Bodices and Spring Hosiery and Gloves.

The new taffetas have white or black stripes or dots on a colored ground, and these satin striped and dotted velvets, whether or satin and are an attractive novelty.

It has been announced many times that black petticoats are condemned by fashion, but nevertheless they hold their own and are as well worn if not as universally worn as ever. Colored hosiery is much used, but a large line of elegant women prefer black to any other for general wear.

White and pearl gray gloves continue to be preferred, although dead white is perhaps not quite so fashionable as those indescribable shades which have the effect of white, but are yet shadowed with a tinge of color. A suspicion of mauve or fawn or drab is rather more pleasing than absolute chalky coloriessness. The stitching may be dark or light, according to taste. In fancy shades of kid yellow appears to dominate. Glace gloves continue to be preferred to suede, perhaps because, light tints being fashionable, glace kid is more convenient. White or pearl suede gloves could not be worn in the street more than once without becoming soiled to the degree of unsightliness.

The illustration given today shows a ball costume of mauve silk. The trained skirt has five narrow plaitings around the foot. The long tunic, which is rounded in front and at the back, is bordered by a deep flounce of white lace headed by a garland of violets in front and by a little ruche of silk behind. The lace flounce is carried up the left side of the tunic in coquilles. The tight bodice is draped at one side and has a ruffle of lace at the other, which is a continuation of the lace bertha which surrounds the round decolletage. The plastron is covered with little plaitings of mauve silk. The bertha is headed by a fold of mauve velvet, which forms a knot on the right shoulder, and a garland of wallflowers is carried from the left shoulder to the waist in front. The mauve velvet belt is fastened by a jeweled buckle.

ACCESSORIES.

Dainty Bows and Ruches and Pretty Millinery.

Bows and big ruches are so becoming that fashion will not relinquish them, but continues to devise new models. A bow and muff to match frequently accompany expensive hats, and the elegant woman has a variety of such articles to harmonize with her different gowns. Although the collar of bodices and wraps is diminishing in size, the boa remains fluffy, and now that the season for fur is past ruches, chenux and coquilles of lace, gauze and tulle, bows of ribbon, knots of flowers and detached petals are combined to compose attractive neckwear. One design consists of five immense rosettes composed of wide mauve ribbon, each rosette being held in the middle by a gold buckle. The five, placed side by side, just go around the neck. At either end, in front, is a cluster of five ends of ribbon of unequal length. This is a more substantial style of bow than those made of mousseline and flowers.

Among the new millinery designs may be mentioned little capote shapes entirely covered with hyacinth bells set close to gether. One covered with deep blue hyacinths has an aigret near the front of two or three pink rosebuds with silvery foliage. These floral bonnets are fragile and short lived, but are pretty while they are fresh. Little moss rose buds are used in the same way as the hyacinth bells, as are also violets and cowslips. The form of a large and striking hat was entirely composed of the last named flowers.

The illustration given today shows a short, tight coat bodice of beige cloth. It is double breasted and fastens invisibly. There are revers and a collar like those of a man's coat and two small breast pockets. The coat is edged by many lines of heavy stitching, and the wrists of the sleeves are finished in the same way. The coat is lined with beige satin.

THIN GOODS.

Sheer Fabrics and Dainty Trimmings to Accompany Them.

Swiss muslin, our grandmothers' favorite and most economical material of all besides one of old fashioned novels, has been gradually coming to the front again after a long season of neglect, and this year it is accepted as the first material among summer goods. Charming gowns of it are shown, and not only in white, but in lavender, violet, pink and all the light and delicate shades. Valenciennes or thread lace, either white, cream or black, is the favorite trimming, and wonderfully complicated arrangements are made of it in narrow insertions. Even underwear is shown which is made of swiss muslin or of nainsook so thin and sheer as to be indistinguishable from it. As this variety of petticoat is so profusely adorned with insertion as are the gowns, it is probably designed for wear beneath transparent costumes.

The finest of embroidery and incrustations, with real antique lace or its less modern imitations, is used upon underwear. Yellow lace or guipure is combined with white batists or lawn with novel effect. All trimming, however rich, is kept flat, since costumes must be close fitting and fullness of decoration underneath causes a visible bunchiness in the gown.

The cut shows a costume of flax blue satin cloth. The skirt has several lines of silver soutache about the foot. The princess tunic, which is also bordered with silver lines, fastens at the left side with silver buttons. The bodice has revers of blue velvet, adorned with silver buttons and silver cords, and opens over a full chemisette of white mousseline de soie. The sleeves are plain, with small silver buttons at the wrists. The collar is of white mousseline de soie. The hat of fawn straw is trimmed with plumes and ribbon of the same shade and a gold buckle.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

THE COST OF DRESS.

The Secret Does Not Lie In Extravagance.

Elegance does not consist in richness of material and trimming, fortunately; it resides in the cut, fit and general style of the costume, its appropriateness to the occasion upon which it is worn and the way the wearer carries it. While it is always advisable to buy material of sterling quality it is by no means essential to purchase the most costly kinds. It is better to save on the expense of the goods and pay more for the making. A well made gown is a thing of beauty, and, if not a joy forever, it is a joy much longer than is an ill made one, which vexes its owner and makes her feel uncomfortable every time she puts it on. Very pretty gowns are to be had ready made now. They require refitting of course, but that does not cost a great deal in addition and will be well done by the establishment which sells the gown. There is, of course, the objection to be made that ready made gowns are constructed by the thousand, ever so many just alike, but the purchaser can always change hers and give it a look of originality by putting on new buttons, adding a little braid or passementerie, facing the revers with lace or making some similar variation.

The cut depicts a walking gown of silver gray cloth, the skirt being simply decorated by three stitched folds of cloth. The closed bolero is laid in horizontal stitched and corded plaits and fastened by round gold buttons. The revers are of black velvet embroidered with gold and gray, and the plaited chemisette and cuffs are of gray mousseline de soie. The upper part of the tight sleeves is corded like the bodice. The hat of gray straw is trimmed with gray tulle and plumes.

SHIRT WAISTS.

Their Decoration Is More Varied This Season.

Shirt waists maintain the same general form as ever, but the decoration varies. A new design has a plaited front of the same color as the waist, or white, just exactly like a man's plain shirt bosom. Another idea is to have revers of one color or another. Waists without these additions are finished with alternate tucks and bands of embroidery or lace arranged vertically, horizontally or in yoke effect. Many shirt waists trimmed with bias bands of plaid sashes are as usual.

Shirt waist sleeves are usually of taffeta or of a soft sort of satin and are frequently corded or tucked. In the more elaborate forms they cease to come under the head of shirt waists. Tucked sleeves are popular accompaniment and are shown in a number of forms. There is the little butterfly bow, the Spanish cravat and a diversity of plaited ones of lace or crepe lisse. Liberty silk scarfs and big net or tulle neckties are worn, tied in a large bow and stock collars with ends coming around to fasten in front.

Crepe and crepons in all varieties are to be much worn and will be trimmed with lace—point de Venise, point de Paris and guipures. Applications of lace on tulle will also be used, and there will be a revival of the bodice entirely covered with lace or guipure.

The cut shows a pretty gown of cyclamen bengaline. The skirt is quite plain. The bodice is gathered slightly at the waist and has a yoke and deep plastron of white guipure over straw silk. This guipure being embroidered with cyclamen and straw silk. The guipure decoration covers the top of the sleeves, and the double bertha of plaited straw mousseline de soie crosses the upper part of the arm. The tight sleeves are plain, the belt of cyclamen satin. A white tulle toque is worn trimmed with large, deep red roses.

To Investigate Corporations.

Information from Washington is to the effect that the Industrial Commission will investigate the subject of trusts in the state of New Jersey. The secretary has secured some official information about 256 such corporations formed from 1890 to 1899, and it is proposed to have a full statement of all necessary facts relating to organization, management, purposes and effects on business, etc., made out for the use of the commission and for the elucidation of the whole question.

These corporations are chartered by the State under its laws, and have offices within the State for the transaction of business. They are not in all cases incorporated by citizens of New Jersey, but are formed by citizens in other states, who nevertheless do business in the state in accordance with its laws.

Directions were given for special inquiries as to the incorporation of industrial combinations in New Jersey, because it had become known that a great majority of the syndicate derived their charters from that state.

"True Value" of Real Estate.

"True value" of real estate is a subject of great elasticity, and generally depends upon the point of view as to whether the man who is to name the true value is the owner or the prospective purchaser. Therefore when the State Board of Taxation orders the assessors of Passaic to hereafter assess all property in that city at true value it offers room for argument as to what constitutes that essential of property.

The latest edict of the State Board of Taxation, accompanied by previous instructions from Supreme Court Judges to Grand Juries to indict assessors who have put values on property which are conceded to be but a percentage of their actual worth, shows that the trend of events in taxation is towards higher valuations. Such a course eventually means a lower tax rate in the communities where the "real value" rule prevails. Though a high tax rate and low valuations or high valuations and a low tax rate are synonimous conditions, it is a fact that the average taxpayer prefers the former method of paying his share to the support of government.

The time is coming, however, when it will be the rule to make assessable valuations as near the true value as is possible, but the adoption of that process by assessors will be accompanied by a world of complaint. When finally accepted, however, it will be found best for all interests concerned.

Destroying City Streets.

The manner in which the employes of the Plainfield Street Railway Company have left the roadbed of Grant avenue, after having gone along their tracks at that point and tore up the macadam to repair the rail joints, is an outrage. Grant avenue was recently repaired and put in splendid condition as to the surface of the roadbed, but no one would ever know it now that the Street Railway Company have done their work.

At short intervals all along the road where the tracks are laid the macadam has been replaced in a most shiftless manner, and the numerous bumps and deviations in the heretofore smooth surface makes it decidedly uncomfortable, if not dangerous, for bicyclists to use the thoroughfare. The city officials should see to it that when the Street Railway Company repair their tracks and tear up the city streets they should leave the road in as good condition as they found it.

The need of this repair work by the Street Railway Company is caused by the cheap and faulty construction of the road when it was originally built. When the franchise was first granted to the company it was on the distinct understanding that road should be built in a substantial manner, but instead of this it is shown by later developments that the road was put down in the cheapest possible manner. It was undoubtedly the intention of the stockholders to sell out their rights long ago to a bigger syndicate, but there plans went amiss. If they had worked out as they expected, however, this repair work would have had to be done by the new owners and in this way the blame would have been shifted from the ones upon whom it should fall.

DOES COFFEE AGREE WITH YOU?

If not, drink Grain-O—made from pure grains. A lady writes: "The first time I made Grain-O I did not like it but after using it for one week nothing would induce me to go back to coffee." It nourishes and feeds the system. The children can drink it freely with great benefit. It is the strengthening substance of pure grains. Death of Rev. A. M. Powell.

The death of Rev. Aaron M. Powell deprives the world of a noble man who occupied a prominent position in a peculiar sphere of life's activities. The news of his sudden death was received in Plainfield with profound sorrow, as well as it might in view of the general recognition of the sterling qualities that went to make up his character.

There is probably no man in the country whose death will be a more distinct loss to the Friends' Society than that of Mr. Powell. He was conspicuously identified with this sect, and was looked upon by the Quakers as a leader who could be trusted to be in the right at all times and under all circumstances.

Not only will the death of Mr. Powell deprive this locality of a worthy and respected citizen, but it will be a loss that will be felt throughout the world, for in certain lines his influence and activity was not confined to this country. During his life Mr. Powell has been associated with some of the most notable reformers in the history of this country, and in his death a life link connecting the stirring scenes of fifty years ago with the present is severed.

Hitting the Newspapers.

The Morris County Board of Freeholders has been struck with a spasm of economy, and in looking around for expenses to lop off they have fell on the newspapers. For years it has been the practice of that county to pay for the publication of the report of the County Collector every three months in a number of newspapers of that county.

Following the example of their eminent superiors, the New Jersey Legislature, the Morris county legislators have decided to stop this business and instead of printing the reports in the only place they will be seen by the citizens of the bailiwick, they will give them a direct route to the wastepaper basket by having them issued in pamphlet form. The Collector's report is one of the most interesting documents of the county and it is a duty which the Freeholders owe to their constituents to have the facts and figures in this report spread before the public in a manner that will reach the largest number of persons. It is certain that the distribution of pamphlets containing the report will not be effective in spreading the information, although we suppose the Freeholders will doubtless hold up the famous action of the New Jersey Legislature in abolishing the printing of the session laws as ample precedent for their conduct.

The money appropriated for newspaper advertising is judiciously and effectively used, but money expended for printing a pamphlet containing the substance of this report is thrown away. It is not the sort of economy that is best for the interests of the community.

A perusal of the men appointed to the position of call firemen by Mayor Rockfellow at the meeting of the Common Council Monday, will show that they are a class of citizens who have taken to fighting fires in the past as readily as a duck takes to water in a rain storm. It can be truly said that firemen are born, not made. The list of appointments made under the new ordinance is comprised of the men who have been the best volunteer firemen in recent years. The amount of pay they will receive is not very great, and if it was not for their natural inclinations in the fire fighting line it is doubtful if any of them would care to enter into the strict contract with the city which their acceptance of the appointment carries.

Governor Voorhees has selected the design of the medals to be presented by the State to the soldiers and sailor volunteers in the Spanish war. The design will be a modification of a maltese cross of bronze, and about the size of a silver dollar. The front will be decorated with a laurel wreath. The reverse side will bear the inscription, "Presented by the State to ——," sailor or soldier, as the case might be. The medal will be pendant from a bronze bar, to which will be attached a blue ribbon. It is expected that the medals will be presented to the volunteers of the State about the Fourth of July.

As a municipal corporation Plainfield will probably gain a little in finances by the enforcement of the Martin Act, but as a city bent on real estate development and activity the enforcement of this law, and the consequent disclosures it has made in regard to the involved properties that were thought to be entirely free and clear of encumberances, has done more injury than the amount of money to be received will ever do good.

The fact that the people of Somerset county have petitioned for three times as many miles of macadam roads as can be built under the law within the next year by the Board of Freeholders, shows a proper appreciation of the improved highways that have already been constructed. There is no greater boon for all classes of citizens than good roads.

Novel School Government.

A novel plan has just been put into operation at Elizabeth by Superintendent of Public Schools Shearer. It is a system of self-government introduced among the scholars of the High school. Instead of having a "monitor" or teacher to watch them, they govern themselves, and have formed a republic and elected officers to that end. An Advisory Committee has also been chosen, being composed of three members of each class, elected by the pupils.

The Superintendent, Vice-Principal and teachers form the executive body of the republic. The duties of the council include the recommendations or punishments in case of misdemeanor, of privileges to be granted to classes of high standing, and of methods of enforcing the support of the resolutions passed. Superintendent Shearer holds the position of Mayor of the commonwealth to which the members of the school belong, and reserves the right to veto any measure that is not for the general good.

Plainfield again asserted its lack of interest in public affairs last evening by failing to have a quorum at its Board of Trade meeting. The case seems hopeless. It is deplorable to be obliged to admit, but it is a fact that the people who should be at the head of municipal progress remain stubbornly in the background. The old adage of "nothing risked, nothing gained," can surely be applicable to Plainfield. The great American principle of taking chances is not very well exemplified in local matters.—The News.

The interesting part of this criticism of the people who do not attend the Board of Trade meetings lies in the fact that it was not so long ago that Editor Bourgeois himself resigned from the organization. It ill befits the News man to blame others for stubbornly remaining in the background.

Senator Reed would seem to be worrying the Thompsonites of Somerset county in a pretty serious manner over the Somerville postmastership. Yesterday a delegation of Republican friends of the erstwhile leader of the county visited Governor Voorhees and tried to persuade him to take a hand in the fight and prevent George Cooper, Senator Reed's candidate for the place, from landing the prize. Like the foxy Quiller of politics that he is, however, the Governor, decided to keep hands off, and let the Somerset people adjust the trouble within their own ranks. It certainly does look as though Mr. Reed had his old preceptor on the run.

The Democratic Association of New Jersey has been incorporated at Newark. The corporators are J. W. Shuckers, G. C. Collingwood, Tyler Parmly, Benjamin F. Robey, Miles W. Ewan, Joseph H. Wehrle, Edward S. Wilde and J. W. Arrowsmith. The object of the association is the maintenance and promotion of the principles enunciated in the Chicago platform. No person can become a member of the association who did not stand by the Chicago platform and support the National Democratic candidates of that convention.

President Patton, of Princeton, joins with Bishop Scarborough in expressing his disapproval with that Sloane-Dement affair. He also denounces the facility with which divorces are now obtained, declaring that it "is gradually leading to a system of legalized concupiscence," which is a disgrace to our Christian civilization."

It is thought that the most obliging postmaster in the State of Missouri lives at Bethel. He recently put a telephone in his office, and announced that for the benefit of those out-of-town patrons who are connected by wire and who may desire it he will open their letters and will read the contents to them over the 'phone.

The metropolitan newspapers and a number of State exchanges have been making funny remarks within the last few days about a "municipal" cow in Plainfield. The real humor of the reports lies in the fact, however, that Plainfield does not own a cow of any size or breed.

Now that Senator Kean has secured the much-sought-for trolley rights in Elizabeth we suppose he will go forth looking for more municipalities to conquer in securing valuable corporation privileges.

An exhibition of temper is about the only thing that the Tammany officials seem able to show the Mazet committee.

WHAT THE SHEARS FIND

Editorial Comment From Other Papers of Interest in Plainfield.

Judge Zabriskie, of Bergen county, has found it necessary to advise a justice of the peace and constable of that county to resign, declaring that while such men are in authority the liberty of every citizen is in jeopardy. The combination of justice and constable, he says, is the sole object of getting every cent possible out of their offices, regardless of how they get it, is one prolific of evil.—Salem Sunbeam.

The Plainfield barbers who are trying to secure the repeal of the ordinance of that city which prohibits barber shops from being kept open seven days in the week are unreasonable, and do not consider peculiar local conditions. Because there are some Hebrew and Seventh-Day Baptist barbers who keep their shops open on Sunday, the other barbers profess to be alarmed lest the Sunday workers lure away permanently many of the regular customers of those whose shops are closed on the first day of the week. But when it is known that all the shops which are open on Sunday are only permitted such indulgence by reason of their being tightly closed on Saturday, the barbers' "grievance" may, it will be seen that there is little justice in the demand for the repeal of the ordinance.—Newark News.

PASSING COMMENT

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

A few days ago fire headquarters was honored with a visit from a man who buys the fire department horses for Greater New York, and after looking at the horses in the local department he remarked that there are no better horses in the New York department than those doing duty here. This is quite an honor for the Plainfield department and adds greatly to the general opinion of efficiency.

THE REASON WHY.

O, Statue of Liberty, why
Art thou watching adown the bay,
With thy flaming torch uplifted high,
Power, by night and by day?

"I seek to enlighten the World
With my torch and my tiara bright;
Till over all peoples my flag is unfurled,
I must watch by day and by night."

O, Statue of Liberty, pray
Answer me one question more;
Why dost thou turn, by light and by day,
Thy back on the New Jersey shore?

"Because I am trust her, all right.
For a backer strong and steady;
And she needs no light by day or by night,
For she is enlightened already!"

TO EXTEND THE LINE.

BRUNSWICK TRACTION COMPANY TO TAP SOUTH AMBOY.

Active Work to Be Undertaken to Secure Necessary Franchises—It Will Be a Big Stroke for Brunswick Company.

New Brunswick, May 16th—The Brunswick Traction Company has acquired the right of the Sayreville Electric Light and Power Company to the proposed electric trolley line from the terminus of the Brunswick Traction Company's New Brunswick-Sayreville line to South Amboy, and active steps are to be taken to secure the necessary franchises and consents. Formal application for franchises is to be made tonight to the Borough Council of South Amboy and the Town Council of Sayreville.

When the New Brunswick-Sayreville line was built some years ago, the Brunswick Traction Company met with opposition in its efforts to secure franchises to South Amboy, and the line from Sayreville to South Amboy was not built. Recently the Sayreville company applied for franchises and arranged for the public meetings required by law. The Brunswick Traction Company has made an arrangement with the Sayreville company, and there will be no opposition to the franchises asked by the Brunswick Company.

The construction of the line from Sayreville to South Amboy will give the Brunswick Traction Company control of a line from Raritan and Sayreville through Round Brook, New Brunswick, and South River to the shore of Raritan Bay, at South Amboy.

CHALK TALK ON "POWER."

Rev. Mr. Ladd's Interesting Lecture Before the Primary Teachers.

There was a large attendance of the members of the Primary Teachers' Union and their friends at the First Baptist church Monday evening, when a meeting of special interest was held. Miss Beeching, president of the Union, was in charge, and made a few remarks of welcome to those present, after which she introduced Rev. Mr. Ledd, of Jersey City, who gave an intensely interesting chalk talk on "Power." Mr. Ladd is a man of great ability, and his illustrations of his subject were much enjoyed.

After the chalk talk Mrs. Powlison led the devotional exercises, and then W. D Murray, of this city, was introduced. Mr. Murray taught the Sunday-school lesson for next Sunday on the subject of "Ingratitude." He taught the lesson just as though his audience was composed of children, this method being in vogue at the regular meetings of the Union. Altogether the meeting was one of great help to all present.

—Union Gospel services will be held in the room of the W. C. T. U. Thursday evening at 8 o'clock.

STREETS MUST BE REPAIRED RIGHT.

Notice Served on the Street Railway Company.

BOROUGH IS UP IN ARMS.

COUNCIL HAS TAKEN OFFICIAL ACTION ABOUT IT.

Superintendent Adelman Notified by Commissioner of Highways Dowd That Where Roadbed Is Torn up to Make Repairs the Macadam Must be Put Down in Good Condition Without Delay.

If the Plainfield Street Railway Company fails to do the right thing in the borough they will hear about it very quick, as the fact has been fixed in the campaign that will be waged against the trolley company for any infraction of the ordinance or agreement between the borough and company.

During the past few days the company has had men substituting new bond wires for old ones along the Somerset street route, and in consequence the road has been torn up to a certain extent, making travel somewhat a nuisance. This the people were able to stand very well, but after the job was completed and the road left in an unsatisfactory condition many complaints were made by the councilmanic street committee. The number of these complaints led the committee, as well as the council, to think that something should be done. Accordingly Councilman Clark, chairman of the street committee, communicated Superintendent Adleman Tuesday, and informed him that it was the desire of the committee and council that Somerset street should be placed in as good condition as it was before the trolley company disturbed it. Mr. Clark also informed Mr. Adleman that the officials would like to have the work attended to at once so that no unpleasant features would follow.

Tuesday morning Superintendent of Highways Thomas Doud met Mr. Adleman and gave him the communication from the street committee. He also informed Mr. Adleman that it would be expected that the street would be fixed at once.

Mr. Adleman remarked that it would be impossible to put the street in the same condition, but Mr. Doud replied by saying that the work could be done and the company is expected to do it. He said that in other places companies were compelled to comply with the law and this case would be no exception.

As the road now stands it is dangerous for light wagons in crossing the tracks as wheels are liable to be dished and wagons having rubber tires are apt to be cut with sharp stones that are lying about the street as a result of the recent tear up. Mr. Doud intends that the street shall be put in condition and he will personally see that the work is done.

BEAUTIFUL CYCLING TRIPS.

Physical Director Heywood Laying Out the Routes Now.

Physical Director C. E. A. Heywood, of the Y.M.C.A., has arranged a number of interesting runs which will be taken this summer by the members of the association. The runs will take two, three, four or five days, some of them, and will be planned with a view to taking in the prettiest parts of this adjacent country.

Most of them will be through New York State, or on Long Island. One is to take the boat up the Hudson river to Poughkeepsie, and then ride down along the river to New York, visiting all the prominent places on the route.

Another one is to take the boat from New York to New Haven, and then wheel up the Connecticut Valley as far as Springfield, Mass., around the Berkshire Hills, and home by way of the Hudson. This is the longest trip and also the most beautiful.

Another pretty one, but a short one, is around part of Long Island. Mr. Heywood will accompany the boys on any or all of these runs, which will be taken under the personal supervision of the association.

TURNED BROTHER OUT.

AN UNUSUAL CASE HEARD BEFORE JUSTICE COLLINS.

Jacob J. Holmes Alleges That Henry J. Holmes Took Forcible Possession of a House to Which He Had no Claim.

Westfield, May 16.—The first case of forcible entry and retainer tried in Union county in twenty years took place in the town rooms yesterday when the case of Jacob J. Holmes against his brother, Henry J. Holmes, was heard before Justice E. P. Collins.

C. H. Angleman, of Plainfield, appeared for the plaintiff and Levi E. Hart looked after the interests of the defendant. Jacob J. Holmes was the first witness and he swore that he had possession of the property on January 3d but that his brother broke into the house while he was away from home and put his things on the porch and moved his own in. He also testified that his brother had threatened to kill him for not getting off of the property before. Anson McDede, who had been hired by Mr. Holmes to look after the property, testified that he was in the the house on January 3d and that Henry J. Holmes had broken into the door and gained an entrance. He said that Holmes had offered him $5 to say nothing.

Henry Holmes swore that he had gone to the house and entered by the back door to which he had a key. He said that he had never threatened to hurt his brother and that he was only taking possession of his own property. Charles Bainster swore that he was with Henry Holmes and that he had entered the house by unlocking the door with a key. The jury went out at 3:30 and came in at 5 o'clock with a verdict of guilty and the defendant to pay treble costs.

He must vacate the house within eight days.

ENGLISH ARCHITECTURE.

Interesting and Instructive Lecture Before Monday Afternoon Club.

A very interesting lecture was given Monday afternoon before the Monday Afternoon Club at the Casino by A. D. F. Hamlin, professor at Columbia University. His subject was "The Manorial and Public Architecture of England in the Time of Elizabeth and the Early Stuarts," and was illustrated by the use of a fine lantern in the hands of a skilful operator. Prof. Hamlin described the transition in English architecture from the rough, dungeon like castles to the artistic manor houses with many windows, a roof of chimneys and styles borrowed from the south of Europe. He said an Englishman regarded building as a diversion and a duty. He quoted largely from Bacon whose idea is that houses should not be built for show but places to live in.

Among the castles and manors of especial interest thrown upon the canvas were Kenilworth Castle, Hardwick Castle, Hampton Court, Hadden Hall, Haddon and Chenies Castle. The lecture was filled with illustrations of some of the famous universities of learning like Trinity College, Eton and Oxford.

This lecture concludes the meetings of the club for the season.

DINNER MAY BE GIVEN.

BOARD OF TRADE TALKING OF HOLDING SUCH AN AFFAIR.

S. D Drake Attended the Meeting and Tried to Stir Up Some Interest—He Exploited His Usual Enthusiastic Views.

The Board of Trade tried hard to hold a meeting Monday, but it was useless in so far as the being a formal gathering. The faithful few were on hand to the number of seven or eight, but as there was not a quorum no business could be transacted.

Silas D. Drake, the irrepressible real estate boomer, was on hand and indulged in airing his views as to what was needed to give Plainfield an awakening. In its languishing position Mr. Drake realized that the Board of Trade would be unable to undertake a very great project, but he proposed that some attempt be made to stir up interest. One of the things he proposed was to rent Music Hall for one night and to secure a number of lively and able talkers to appear and discuss the advantages and needs of Plainfield.

Mr. Drake argued that if such a meeting was held it would result in some good anyway, and might be the means of starting the ball rolling so that an enterprising movement would be undertaken and result in material benefit to the city. From the views and ideas expressed and exploited at such a meeting enough might be gathered for a nucles to build on, Mr. Drake said, that would gather force as the time and energy of a few was given to it till the outcome would result in material and lasting benefit to the city.

Mr. Drake also suggested the idea of a Board of Trade dinner, although he said he was not in a position to know how the financial end of it would be met. He referred to the fact that Elizabeth and Rahway held such events once a year and the good that resulted from gathering around the festive board and hearing admirable and progressive addresses was felt for a year afterward.

In an informal discussion of the few present the idea of a dinner seemed to find favor, though in the present condition of the Board of Trade none of them were enthusiastic over the matter.

It was decided to hold a meeting next Monday evening when Mr. Drake will be present and exploit his ideas to a larger number of membeys, if it is possible to get them to attend the meeting.

FIRST AID TO INJURED.

Instructive Lectures Being Given by Dr. Hedges.

The lectures that Dr. B. Van D. Hedges is giving to the Young Woman's Club on "First Aid to the Injured," were continued Monday, and several new features were taken up. Last week Dr. Hedges stopped with accidents by burning, and began last night with freezing.

He illustrated the treatment of sprained bruises, fractures of all kinds, and told how to sober up a drunken man. His remedy was an emetic, or a cold bath.

The lecture ended with an exhibition of how to resuscitate a drowning person, and to ward off the effects of poison.

Dr. Hedges will continue these lectures until he has covered a complete course. With the help of a small boy the Doctor also explained how bandages were made, and showed how to set a broken leg or arm. The lectures are given free to the members of the club, and it is hoped that as a result they will be better able to be of service in times of accident.

DISASTROUS DEFEAT IN DRIZZLING RAIN

The Plainfield High School Boys Were Demoralized.

A SCORE OF SPECTATORS.

NEWARK BOYS WON GAME BY A SCORE OF 20 TO 8.

Poor Exhibition of Baseball on Muddy Oval—Game Was Played in the Rain—Local Infield Collapsed—Edwards Hit Very Freely at Times—The Plainfield Boys Couldn't Bat—Were Demoralized.

Before a single score of spectators and in a drizzling rain, the Plainfield High School received a sound drubbing at the hands of the Newark School nine Saturday afternoon at the Crescent Oval. It was by far the worst exhibition of baseball that the High School boys have given. The Newark team won by a score of 20 to 8.

The day was a very unsatisfactory one for baseball. The Newark boys considered the question and finally decided to come. After they reached the Oval it began to rain quite heavily. Only a few spectators reached the grounds before the downpour. Manager Fisher, of the Plainfield nine, decided to call the game off, but when there were signs of a letup it was decided to have some kind of a game as long as both teams were there. The ground was wet and slippery and half the game was played in the rain.

Whether it was the wet and slimy ball or the generally unpropitiousness of the weather, it is hard to tell. At any rate the local players were completely demoralized. Both teams played a sluggish game at the start, but the visitors braced up as the game progressed and they won without any trouble.

Edwards did not pitch his usual excellent game. The visitors batted him freely. In the sixth inning they fell upon him with much ardor and scored seven runs. They repeated the operation in the ninth. Besides Edwards' poor work the Plainfield infield, so strong, usually, couldn't seem to stop. Ball after ball went through Fisher, the crack shortstop. Craig, at third, wasn't able to hold anything. Everybody seemed to have an off day and there was a host of errors in consequence.

Despite his weakness Edwards managed to strike out ten men. The Plainfielders lost their knack of batting and were not able to run bases when they did reach first. The team did not seem like the same one that played Newark Academy a week ago. An effort will be made to get the Newark High School team to come again and give the local boys a chance to recover their lost honors.

The High School was represented by the usual team, Edwards and Squires were the battery, with Morgan, Mason and Craig on the bases and Fisher at short. Radford, Droll and Miller were in the field. Charles Mumford umpired the game.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

Death of Mrs. Crane.

Mrs. Fanny L. Crane, aged 66 years, died last Sunday at St. Luke's Hospital, New York, after being confined to that institution for about a month. She was the mother of J. M. Crane, of this city, and was born at Florida, Orange county, N. Y. She was a resident of Plainfield for nine years, but a complication of diseases necessitated her removal to the hospital. Three sons survive her, J. M. Crane, of this city; William H. Crane and Charles Crane, of New York. The funeral services were held from St. Luke's chapel, New York.

THEODORE ROANTREE SENTENCED FOR STABBING GEO. PIZIE.

His Mother Made a Scene in Court When Sentence was Pronounced—Judge Strong Delivered a Severe Lecture.

New Brunswick, May 16.—Theodore Roantree, of New Market, who was found guilty last week of stabbing George Pizie, of that place, was sentenced to eighteen months in State prison yesterday by Judge Strong. The young man's mother was in court and created a scene by loudly crying. One of the constables tried to quiet her, but she only shrank from him.

Judge Strong, in sentencing the man, said that there was no doubt in his mind but that the stabbing was the result of an old grudge, and that the claim of self defense was not justified. He spoke feelingly to the man, saying that he had more sorrow for his mother than for him. This same woman, who was in the courtroom imploring the Judge, with tears in her eyes, to be lenient, was led to swear out a complaint of threats against him and compel him to give bonds to keep the peace some time ago. The Court spoke of these things and said that the man was not entitled to any clemency. He had intended to sentence him to State prison for two years, but owing to the recommendation for mercy made by the jury, which found him guilty, he reduced the sentence six months, making it eighteen months.

DESECRATING GRAVES.

Woman in Black Steals Flowers in Hillside Cemetery.

For some time past those in charge of Hillside Cemetery have been troubled greatly with various persons who visit the grounds and wait for opportunities to carry off flowers that have been placed on graves, and it keeps those in charge busy watching these people. Last Saturday afternoon while the relatives of the late Dr Robert S Tracy were at the cemetery performing the last sad rites, a woman dressed in mourning and accompanied by two children were in the cemetery. It was then sometime after 5 o'clock and as the woman and the children persisted in hanging around they soon became suspicious persons, and Superintendent Smith kept his eyes on them.

It was some time after the mourners had left the grounds that these people were seen wandering about, and they evidently had their eyes on the very handsome display placed on the new-made grave. By this time Mr. Smith made up his mind that the woman was staying about for no good purpose, and he, together with his foreman, made a tour of inspection. They followed the woman and the children and they had not gone far when they saw Mrs. Gerry, wife of the foreman, chasing the trio across the grounds. The woman had a large bunch of lilacs and was fast making her escape. Mrs. Gerry soon caught her and inquired what right she had to come there an i take flowers. The strange woman made some insolent reply, whereupon Mrs. Gerry quickly made her drop the lilacs and ordered her to leave the place immediately, which she did.

The strange-appearing woman is well-known in Plainfield, and Mr. Smith will see that she does not have another opportunity to steal flowers. Mr. Smith states that at times a great deal of trouble is experienced in keeping people from picking flowers and taking them away, and he thinks that if the woman in question had been given an opportunity she would have removed flowers from the grave where Dr. Tracy was buried.

IMPROVED STREETS FOR BOROUGHITES.

Council Talked About the Matter Very Earnestly.

ANXIOUS TO GET TO WORK.

COUNCILMAN VALIANT WANTS THE SPRINKLING DONE BY BOROUGH.

He Believes That It Would Better Preserve the Streets If the Roads Were Wet Two or Three Times a Day—He Would Have it Paid for by Additional Tax—Can't Start This Year.

A special meeting of the Borough Council was held Monday, principally to talk over matters pertaining to the streets and crosswalks. All the members were present except Councilman Swackhamer.

Before the discussion upon the street work, two communications were read. One was from the Memorial Day committee of the G. A. R., signed by E. C. Morse, chairman, and Elmore D. Moffatt, secretary, inviting the Mayor and Council to attend the Memorial Day exercises in Music Hall. The invitation was acknowledged.

A petition came from the residents of Steiner place and Linden avenue, asking that a crosswalk be laid across Linden avenue at Steiner place. This communication was referred to the committee on streets. Warrants for the payment of the work of bills for labor and materials furnished on the streets, was ordered drawn.

The meeting was here thrown open for discussions upon street work. The Mayor said that the street committee was anxious to get at the street work right away before hot weather comes. He said he would like to have the petition for macadamizing Orchard place sent in.

Mr. Valiant suggested that the borough take up the subject of sprinkling their own streets, a matter which met with favor. Mr. Valiant proposed that the borough provide itself with two carts and four horses, also men to drive them, and add what the cost is to the tax bills.

As an argument Mr. Valiant spoke of the benefit it would be to the roads to give them a systematic wetting twice or three times a day. The Mayor expressed himself as in favor of it, but pointed out the impossibility of doing anything with it this year, because the contracts for wetting the streets had been awarded to private individuals.

Mr. Valiant made a motion, which was passed, that the street committee be empowered to look into the matter, see what the cost of wagons and horses will be, and report at a regular meeting of the Council. The proposition is to water all of the streets in the borough.

Mr. Clark spoke of the way French's men allow the water from the wagons and hose to leak out over the streets when they are filling the water wagons, and the Mayor proposed that he, as chairman of the committee on streets, send Mr. French a note explaining the matter. The Council then adjourned.

Aaron M. Powell Making an Address at Fatal Moment.

FAMOUS FOR REFORM WORK

NEWS OF THE DEATH CAUSES PROFOUND SORROW IN PLAINFIELD.

He Was Active in the Highest Walks of Life—A Noted Anti-Slavery Advocate Once and of Late Years Editor of the Philanthropist and a Public Speaker on Temperance and Other Great Subjects.

A sad fatality resulting in the death of Aaron M. Powell, the noted anti-slavery man, temperance worker and writer, occurred at the corner of East Sixth and Washington streets, occurred in Philadelphia Saturday afternoon, and was a terrible shock to the ministers and elders in attendance upon the opening session of the Friends' yearly meeting being held at the Fifteenth and Race streets meeting house. The sad news reached this city Saturday evening at 10 o'clock, when Dr. Edward Rushmore, of Park avenue, received a telegram from G. Harold Powell of Philadelphia. Mr. and Mrs. Powell left Plainfield Saturday morning for Philadelphia to attend the meeting and Mr. Powell was in his usual good health.

Sunday morning Dr. Rushmore received a letter from G. Harold Powell, which stated that Mr. Powell passed away suddenly and quietly just as began an address. The letter also stated that the body would be taken to Ghent, N.Y., Monday, where the funeral services and would take place Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Mrs. Powell will not return to Plainfield for several days.

Further particulars regarding Mr. Powell's death are as follows:

The meeting was nearly at an end, about 4 o'clock, when Mr. Powell, who was a visiting Friend, rose to address the meeting. He was apparently in good health, and spoke for a moment with much earnestness. Suddenly, and without warning, the aged speaker fell forward from hi s seat and lay unconscious. Aid was promptly given him, and Dr. Joseph Foulke was summoned. All efforts at resuscitation were futile, however, and the end came in a few moments. With him at the time of his death were his wife, Mrs. Anna M. Powell, and his sister Elizabeth Powell Bond, dean of Swarthmore College.

The suddenness of the affair greatly shocked those present, many being close personal friends of the dead man. The greatest excitement prevailed for a time, and the meeting was abruptly adjourned.

Mr. Powell was a member of the New York Monthly Meeting, and went to Philadelphia as an honored guest to the Yearly Meeting of the Hicksite Friends. He and his wife were guests of Samuel S. Ash, of No. 1717 Vine street, and the body was taken to that residence.

The news of Mr. Powell's sudden death was received at the Plainfield meeting of Friends yesterday morning, and it cast a gloom of sadness over all present. Although no action was taken at the meeting, no doubt the local members will suitably recognize the death of one who has been a leader and a guide for so many years.

Mr. and Mrs. Powell came to Plainfield from New York about twenty years ago and have lived here ever since. Mr. Powell was a native of Ghent, N. Y., where he has one brother living at present.

Mr. Powell was 67 years of age and was well known on this and the other side of the Atlantic on account of his association with the National Purity Alliance movement. He made a number of trips abroad where he met many of the most prominent men and women in foreign countries. He was graduated from the State Normal School at Albany, N. Y., and while a student his sympathies were enlisted in the anti-slavery movement. During the war, together with William Lloyd Garrison and Wendell Phillips, he was associated in the publication of the Anti Slavery Standard, which was later called the National Standard. He was also the moving spirit in the American Anti-Slavery Society. Mr. Powell was also a well known temperance worker and the National Purity Alliance, of which organization he was president. For several years he was editor of the Philanthropist, published in New York. Besides his editorial work Mr. Powell was a prolific writer on all topics relating to political and social reform subjects, contributing largely to various publications for a number of years.

He was married many years ago to Miss Anna M. Rice, of Worcester, Mass., also a person of strong character, and she was a great help to her husband in his wide field of labor.

Since Mr. Powell came to Plainfield he was closely identified with the interests of the city, county and State, and his strong influence was felt in many channels. His death will be a severe blow to the Society of Friends. He will be greatly missed in this city in more ways than one, and the peculiar line of work he carried on will suffer beyond estimate as a result of his death. There is probably no Plainfield who has been associated with or met as many prominent men as Mr. Powell.

BROKE INTO THE CHURCH.

All Souls' Edifice Invaded by Thieves or Tramps, Who Slept There All Night.

Sometime during Friday night someone broke into All Souls' church, on Park avenue, but got no further than the basement. The janitor, Mr. Hughson, discovered the fact last Saturday when he went to open the church for his Saturday's cleaning.

He found one of the cellar windows broken and indications inside as if some one had spent the night there. The door leading from the basement or kitchen to the church was securely locked, but the readers were foiled in their attempt to reach the upper floor.

There is nothing of value kept in the church, not even a silver communion set, as is the case in most all churches of other denominations. It is not known whether they were tramps or boys, probably the former, as they spent the night in the basement, making a bed of a quantity of bagging found and a bundle of newspapers for his head rest.

CLIMAX WON THE SHOOT.

OPENING OF CENTRAL NEW JERSEY TRAP SHOOTERS' LEAGUE.

Held at Dunellen Saturday Afternoon —Annual Election of Officers—Bound Brook Has Withdrawn—First Shoot Held

Dunellen, May 15.—The drizzling rain of Saturday afternoon dampened neither the ardor nor the powder of the trap-shooters who gathered on the grounds of the Dunellen Gun Club to attend the first meeting for the year of the Central New Jersey Trap Shooters' League. There was a good attendance.

The clubs represented were the home club, the Climax Gun Club, of Plainfield, the Reservoir Gun Club, of New Brunswick. The Bound Brook Club has decided not to join the League this year but its place will probably be filled by another club from New Brunswick where the interest in the sport is quite high.

The annual election of officers was held and resulted as follows: President, John Lindzey, of Dunellen; vice-president, Thomas H. Kellar, of New York; secretary and treasurer, R. Smith, of New Brunswick. The shoots will be held every other week. The next one will be at New Brunswick Saturday afternoon, May 27th.

T. H. Kellar, who was one of the organizers of the league, came out from New York, accompanied by his son, Hazlewood, to attend the shoot. As the Brunswick team was short one man, Mr. Kellar helped them out. The three teams, of five men each shot a match at 25 targets each. The traps were fitted with new springs and the targets flew hard and fast. The grey skies made them hard to see so the scores were low.

The Climax team won by a total of 91. Dunellen was second with 85, and the Reservoir third with 81.

FUNERAL OF DR. TRACY.

Obsequies Held at His Parents' Home Sunday Afternoon.

The funeral services of the late Dr. Robert S. Tracy were held this afternoon from the residence of his parents, Mr. and Mrs J. Evarts Tracy, 440 West Eighth street, at 4 o'clock.

After Rev. G. Kennedy Newell, pastor of Hope chapel, read a few appropriate selections from the Scriptures, a quartette consisting of Mrs. J. K. Myers, Miss Julia Ketcham, City Judge Wm. N. Runyon and Elmer E. Runyon, sang "Jesus Lover of My Soul." This was followed with Scripture selections read by Rev. K. P. Ketcham, of Freeport, L. I. The quartette also sang "There is a land of Pure Delight," after which Dr. Ketcham pronounced the closing prayer.

Resting on the casket were many beautiful floral tributes from friends and associates. Interment took place in Hillside cemetery, and those who acted as pall-bearers, all close friends of the departed, were: Dr. Francis E. Shire, of the New York Hospital; Dr. Frank O. Dorsey, of the Presbyterian Hospital; Dr. Augustus B. Wadsworth, of St. Luke's Hospital, New York; Dr. Carlyle Smithen, of Newark; Noah H. Swayne, 2d, of New York; Frederick W. Yates, of this city.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT DEAD BY A SOLDIER.

A Former Plainfielder Killed in Middletown, Pa.

J. P. THORN THE VICTIM.

GOT IN RANGE OF A GUN IN THE SOLDIER'S HANDS.

Mr. Thorn Was Conducting a Rifle Range and the Soldier Was Practicing When the Fatal Accident Happened—Remains Brought to Plainfield—Interment to be in Rahway.

Last Saturday afternoon Alex. Thorn, of Craig place, received a telegram from Middletown, Pa., informing him of the death of his brother, James P. Thorn, which was due to accidental shooting. Mr. Thorn left at once for Middletown and he returned last evening with the body, accompanied by the dead man's wife.

Mr. Thorn and his wife had been living at Middletown for some time, where Mr. Thorn conducted a rifle range. During Saturday Private James D. Shay, of Co. C., Battalion of Engineers from Camp Meade, was in the rifle range practicing, and in doing so he accidentally shot Mr. Thorn, who happened to be on a line of the range. Mr. Thorn was shot in the left side, the bullet entering under the heart. He died in a few minutes. Mr. Thorn's wife was standing near and saw the accident.

Mr. Thorn resided in Plainfield for many years where he was well known. He was the son of James and Rachel Thorn, and was fifty-two years of age. When in this city he worked in the hardware business and was very popular in a large circle of friends. He has been away from Plainfield for several years.

FINED $100 FOR FISHING.

BOYS CATCHING SHAD ILLEGALLY IN THE RARITAN RIVER.

Game Warden Miller Makes the Arrest But Previously Had Let Two Men go—Boys Were Released Under Bail.

Bound Brook, May 15.—Under the law of 1895 fishing with hook lines or nets is prohibited 900 feet below or above the dam in the Raritan River one mile south of Bound Brook. Many shad are caught in the Raritan at this time of the year and many fishing parties have tried their luck the past week. Early the past week George Miller, of Finderne, the new Fish and Game Warden of Somerset county, caught Charles R. Brokaw and Edward F. Brady fishing with a net for shad within 100 feet of the dam. He warned them to desist and let them go.

Later in the week he found Field Gaskson and Fred Coleman, both twelve years old, trying to secure a mess of fish for breakfast, by actual measurement, 893 feet from the dam, although there is no stake or mark to show the lawful fishing line. Miller arrested the boys on a warrant and took them before Justice Sutphin, in Somerville.

Edward S. Fisher, the boys' counsel, showed by the testimony of Fish Warden Miller that he did not know really know how far from the dam the boys were fishing, and Justice Sutphin convicted the boys and fined them $100 each, in default of payment of which he sent them to the County Jail for three months.

Fisher took an appeal to the Somerset Common Pleas, and the boys were released under bail on the order of Judge Bartine.

Prisoners Before Mayor Smalley.

Last Saturday evening the marshals of the borough made arrests of several disorderly women residing on Chatham street. Owing to the absence of the Recorder the prisoners were arraigned before Mayor Smalley, who, after giving them a good lecture, suspended sentence on their promises to be good and not disturb their neighbors again. Each one promised not to repeat the offence, and they were allowed to depart.

The Gift of Power.

Twenty-three New Members.

Yesterday was a big day at Hope Chapel. At the evening service twenty three new members were received into the membership of the chapel, twenty by letter and three by confession of faith.

Mrs. J. M. Dryden and daughter, Mrs. Wm. J. R. Thiers, of Watchung avenue, accompanied by Miss Ethel Green, of Washington Park, are visiting at St. Michael's, Md.

—A musicale of unusual excellence will be held in the Seventh-day Baptist church tomorrow evening under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society. Admission will be free.

EPWORTH LEAGUE IS IN ITS TENTH YEAR.

Anniversary of the Great Metnodist Society Celebrated.

SPECIAL SERVICES HELD.

MEMBERS OF THE LEAGUE IN CHARGE OF PROGRAMMES.

Celebration Held in the First Methodist Monroe Avenue and Grace Churches—In the Latter Church Visiting Members Were Present and Made Addresses About the Work of the League

The tenth anniversary of the Epworth League of the First Methodist Episcopal church was celebrated last Sunday. The exercises were held in the body of the church.

The members of the League were seated together in the front of the church, and at the opening of the service twenty-five members of the Junior Epworth League, under the charge of their superintendent, Miss Susie Davies, marched in singing, and took their place in front of the members of the older society.

Prayer was offered by H. A. McGee, and the Scripture lesson was read by Robert W. Davis, a former president. The programme also included four short addresses. The first was a historical sketch by Charles W. Sprague, the secretary of the society. He first gave a history of the Epworth League movement as a whole, and then very briefly reviewed the history of the chapter connected with the First M. E. church. This League has now a membership of 106. This was followed by a summary of the department work of the League, given by the pastor of the church, Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass. The president of the chapter, Harry Rice, spoke on "The Spiritual Aim of the Epworth League," and Miss Susie Davies followed with an address on "The Breadth and Intensity of the Epworth League as Expressed in Our Motttoes."

The exercises were closed with a prayer and song of consecration, expressing the desire to go on to still higher service in fighting the battles of their great Commander.

The tenth anniversary of the Epworth League was appropriately celebrated last Sunday in Grace M. E. church. E. E. Winckler, president of the local chapter, presided, and *after the opening exercises, which in*cluded Scripture reading, an anthem by the choir, a vocal solo by Miss Carroll and a prayer by Hon. H. K. Carroll, he also gave a few words of welcome. Miss Ussing, of Cranford, third vice-president of the District League, was the first speaker introduced. She spoke of the growth of the league from twenty-seven members to a million and a half. She also related some touching personal incidents in connection with her Christian life.

F. B. Ham, of Westfield, who is first vice-president of the District League and chairman of the devotional committee, spoke of the growth in the league and how it could continue.

The last speaker was Miss Carlton, of Elizabeth, who is fourth vice-president of the District League, and chairman of the social committee. Her remarks were along the line of the necessity of individual growth in the love of Christ. Miss Carlton then conducted a short consecration service.

At the Monroe Avenue M. E. church the services were in charge of Edward Beekman, president of the Epworth League of that church. There was a large attendance of interested ones and the whole service was given up to the celebration of the tenth anniversary of the birth of the society. The history of the League was read by Mansfield Smith, and an address was delivered by Dr. Whitney. The singing was under the directing of William Tallamy.

IN THEIR OWN CHURCH.

Calvary Baptist Edifice Worshipped in for the First Time.

Although their new stone church on Central avenue is not quite finished yet, the members of the Calvary Baptist church worshipped there yesterday for the first time. The services were held in the Sunday-school room, in the basement of the church, which is finished.

The windows are still to be put in the church part, and a little work will have to be done about the walls. This work is expected to be finished by Sunday.

The members of the church have already paid $1,100 to Contractor Smith, as per agreement, and will borrow $3,000 more for a period of eleven years.

The sermons yesterday were preached by the pastor, Rev. Scott Wallace, in the morning, and by Rev. E. E. Jackson, of Mt. Olive Baptist church, in the afternoon, and by Rev. J. A. Harris, of Orange, in the evening.

HOW WOMEN AID IN THE WORK OF CHURCH.

Anniversary of Woman's Christian Work Society.

HELP TO TRINITY CHURCH

EIGHTEENTH YEAR STARTED UNDER AUSPICIOUS CIRCUMSTANCES.

In His Sermon for the Occasion Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck Dwelt Particularly on the Condition of Women of Today and What Valuable Workers They Are for Christianity—Reports of Officers.

The Woman's Christian Work Society of the Trinity Reformed church celebrated its eighteenth anniversary Sunday, and listened to an address from its pastor. Reports of the secretary and treasurer were presented, and those showed something of the work done by the women of Trinity Reformed church during the past twelve months.

Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph D., used as the subject for his remarks the different conditions of woman now, as compared to their state before the birth of Christ. He spoke of the degraded lives females used to endure in lands not accustomed to the civilizing influences of the Gospel, and said that even today in heathen lands they do not occupy the exalted station of American and English women.

Mr. Schenck also alluded to the value of woman in the church. She is better adapted for some kinds of work than man, and her social position adds to her usefulness. He ended by urging the women of the Christian Work Society to redouble their efforts along those lines already mapped out by them.

The report of the secretary, Mrs. A. L. Marshall, gives an idea of what the society has been doing during the past year. It was as follows:

Another year has rolled away and again we meet to celebrate the anniversary of the society. The past year has been a prosperous one and it is with pleasure that we look back at the work which has been done, and the help we have given to others for the Master's sake.

During the year four new members have been added. One has resigned for other fields. The "Angel of Death" has entered our midst and taken from us one of our faithful and earnest workers. The meetings of the society were held once a month in the ladies' parlor. We have a membership of 52 active and 8 honorary members, average attendance 22. The Devotional committee has been engaged in furnishing leaders for the half-hour prayer service each month.

The Missionary committee have collected from the 5-cent-a-month plan $63.10, which was equally divided between foreign and domestic missions. A number of silk bags were donated by a friend of the society which were sold. The proceeds went to missions. A box of clothing, kitchen utensils and canned fruit was sent to Rev. Stegerman in the West, valued at $86.40. A parcel of clothing was sent to the Schofield school in South Carolina, valued at $35. A sewing class committee collected quite a little money, which was used for garments for the missionary box. A very handsome comfortable was pieced and finished by the ladies for this same box. The visiting committee have made 192 calls during the year on the sick and new members of the church. Social committee gave an entertainment in October called the birthday social and realized $94.50. In December the committee canvassed the ladies of the church for 10 cents donation and realized $14.90. In January they gave the usual annual supper and realized $189.

The society gave the consistory $50 toward the running expenses of the church. The usual account of $5 was donated to the W. C. T. U. Chairman of the sewing guild received 22 garments, 20 of which were returned for the Mission box. The flower committee have worked very faithful and we are sure we have the voice of the congregation when we say the church was handsomely decorated on special occasions.

All of our committees have worked faithful. And have we not cause for encouragement? Let us strive for still greater things and be faithful to him who said "inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Respectfully summitted,
Mrs. A. L. Marshall,
Secretary.

A break was caused in the festivities about 7 o'clock when a telegram was received informing Mrs. Royal Gibson and Mrs. Alfred Calver, of Newark of the serious illness of a brother Newark, who it was thought could not live. At the receipt of the message Mrs. Gibson and Mrs. Calver fainted away. BOWLING ON THE GREEN.

MIDDLESEX CLUB OPENS ITS SEASON IN THE RAIN.

Meeting at the Home of Christian Schepflin, Dunellen, Who was Elected President—The Club Starts With 26 Members.

Dunellen, May 15—In spite of the rain Saturday afternoon, the Middlesex Bowling Green Club met on Christian Schepflin's green and organized for the season. No match games were played, however, but the members went out in the rain and rolled several games by themselves.

Previous to their coming to Dunellen the club met in New Brunswick, where most of the members live, and organized for the season. Officers were elected as follows: President, Christian Sepepflin, of Dunellen; vice-president, L. A. Poulson, of New Brunswick; secretary, H. Brewster Willis, of New Brunswick; treasurer, Peter W. Fick, of New Brunswick.

In addition to the officers there is a special board of governors, who assist the officers. They are Frederick Weigel, C. A. Schenck and R. M. Pettit, all of New Brunswick.

The club this year starts with twenty six members. The green is in fine condition, and a pleasant season is expected. Refreshments were served Saturday, and a social time enjoyed in connection with the games. The next gathering of the club will be held a week from Saturday.

It is probable that there will be two or three medals to be played for this year. Ladies' day will be observed several times as usual.

FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

Arrangements for the Performance Perfected by the G. A. R.

The memorial committee of Winfield Scott Post, G. A. R., met with the committees from the Women's Relief Corps, the Sons of Veterans and the soldiers of the late war Thursday in Justice Moffett's office, on Park avenue, and made final arrangements for the observance of Decoration Day. This is probably the last meeting of the committees unless there is something important to be considered.

The post will have charge of the morning parade and the decoration of the graves. After the address in Music Hall in the afternoon by Rev. W. C. Snodgrass, Mrs. E. C. Morse, president of the Women's Relief Corps, will take charge of the exercises, which will consist of recitations and music by the young ladies.

Sunday evening preceding Memorial Day Rev. Dr. Yerkes will preach to the G. A. R. Men in the First Baptist church.

FIVE RACES OF OUR NEW POSSESSION.

Interesting Address on the Peoples of Hawaii.

BY AN AMERICAN PASTOR.

ANNUAL MEETING OF CONGREGATIONAL WOMEN'S ASSOCIATION.

Address by Rev. D. F. Birnie, Former Pastor of the American Church at Hawaii—Told Interesting Facts Concerning the Five Races That Predominate in the New Possession.

Hawaii, the new American possession, is a fascinating subject at all times, but when known by one who has lived there himself, and, in the advantageous position of pastor of a church in the beautiful capital of the island, learning to know the various races that make up their composite population, it becomes doubly so. An unusually interesting talk on "The Five Races in Hawaii," was given last Friday under the auspices of the Woman's Association of the Congregational church by Rev. D. F. Birnie, for three years pastor of the *American church in Honolulu. The ad*dress was the principal feature of the annual public meeting of the association.

Mr. Birnie spoke first of the native Hawaiians, a brown race, tall and well-made, easily led, either for good or evil, with little idea of the value or use of money. The Chinese of the islands, on the contrary, he called the financiers of Hawaii. They own a large amount of property, and are remarkably successful in business. Mission work among them is slow but sure, as when once converted they are thoroughly so.

The Japanese of Hawaii are more numerous than the Chinese. They are always courteous and agreeable, charming to deal with, but whether their word is to be depended on is another matter. Mr. Birnie said it took a large amount of gospel to convert a Japanese to truthfulness. They are bright and clever, with great ability in many directions, but have little staying quality.

The large Portuguese population thrive in the hot climate; there are more Portuguese children in the islands than children of any other nationality. Protestant mission work is very successful among them. The white population includes nearly every white race. Many are the children of missionaries. There are some men in the islands who have made the most of a great opportunity to do a good work, and there are others who have used their opportunity to oppress those of weaker races.

In closing, Mr. Birnie spoke very hopefully of the future of missions in the islands. He does not think the Christian nations altogether understand the unevangelized people as yet, but he has seen proof that the religion of Jesus Christ is suited to every nation on earth.

Other features of the evening were a report of the work done by the woman's Association during the year, given by the president, Mrs. M. E. Dwight; an instrumental trio by Mrs. B. T. Barnes, organist; Mrs. Dwight, pianist, and F. Ludwig Conde, violinist; and a violin solo by Mr. Conde, accompanied by Mrs. Dwight. Rev. Charles Lyman Goodrich, pastor of the church, presided. The programme was followed by a social hour and the serving of refreshments.

HIGH SCHOOL BOYS MAKE GOOD SOLDIERS.

Reviewed in Crescent Rink By Lieut. Col. Holly.

MADE FINE APPEARANCE.

COL. MURPHY, OF GOV. VOORHEES' STAFF, INSPECTS THE CORPS.

Three Medals Were Awarded for Perfect Attendance and General Excellence—Won By Lieut. Fogate, Corporal Bridgman and Private Mason—Honorable Mention Also for Three.

It was a great surprise to Lieutenant Colonel John I. Holly, of Park avenue, who is quartermaster of the New York National Guard, to find a well drilled cadet company almost at his very door. Thursday he reviewed the cadet corps of the Plainfield High School in the presence of three hundred of the relatives and friends of the cadets.

The success that the High School cadets have made under the direction of Captain George F. Edwards was fully demonstrated. The drill was very successful, the corps making an excellent showing. As the company is a recognized military organization of this State, it was intended to have the regular State inspection take place yesterday at the same time with the review. Owing to some misunderstanding at the headquarters of the New Jersey National Guard, the State orders set the inspection for 2 o'clock. The orders did not reach Captain Edwards until last night, too late to obey them.

Colonel Murphy, of Camden, inspector-general of the State staff, came to Plainfield to inspect the company. It was not until the drill was partially over that he found that it was to be held in the evening and so did not have to don his uniform but hurried to the rink in citizen's clothes.

Captain George F. Edwards, commandant of the company, was in command of the corps. There were thirty of the boys in line and they made an excellent showing. To show the proficiency of the officers as well as the men, the company was turned over to Cadet Captain William A. Fisher and Cadet Lieutenants Radford and Fogate, each of whom directed the maneuvres of the company without mistake.

The bronze medals, offered by Captain Edwards for 100 per cent. efficiency, were presented by Lieut. Col. Holly with a neat speach. Medals were awarded to Second Lieutant Blanchard Fosgats, Corporal Linden Bridgeman and Private Fred Mason for perfect attendance and prompt obedience of all orders and commands. Honorable mention was given to First Lieutenant Roy H. Rasford, Corporal Harold Phillips and Private John Phillips, who would have received medals but for the fact that they had been late to one drill.

CHARMING MAY TEA.

Miss Alice Thompson Entertained in Honor of an Easter Bride.

One of the most delightful teas of the spring time was given Saturday afternoon by Miss Alice Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Thompson, of Rockview Terrace. The tea was given in honor of Mrs. Edmund Rushmore, a bride of the Easter week. The rooms were artistically decorated with roses, the effect of which combined with the light gowns of the young girls made a veritable springtime scene.

Miss Alice Thompson and Mrs. Rushmore received the guests in the parlor, assisted by Mrs. David Thompson, the Misses Emily and Mary Thompson, sisters of the hostess, and the Misses Clapp, Wells, Schroeder and Beardsley, of Berkley Heights. In the dining room Mrs. Samuel St. J. McCutchen and Mrs. Charles Reed presided at the table, assisted by the Misses Horne, Barlow, VanDeventer, Anderson and Alice Rushmore.

Crazy Man Stole a Cow.

John J. Cullen, at one time a prosperous produce dealer in Summit, was arrested Friday for stealing a cow from Tax Collector Baldwin, of Chatham. The cow was found later two miles away in Ellis Baldwin's barn. Cullen claimed that he had taken the cow away from a thief, but gave such a contradictory account of the affair that City Physician William H. Lawrence and Dr. John Burling testified that he was insane and he was taken to the State Insane Asylum at Morris Plains.

The New Standpipe

The Plainfield Water Supply Company has laid pipes to where the new stand-pipe is to be built on the mountain. The stand-pipe will be 35 feet high and 75 feet in diameter, making it of the same capacity as the one at Netherwood.

Plans for a Drinking Fountain.

The Loyal Temperance Legion of Plainfield propose to erect a drinking fountain. Plans are being considered and ways and means devised.

APPEAL FOR BABY CAMP

ARRANGEMENTS BEING MADE BY THE KING'S DAUGHTERS.

Total Loss of the Camp by Fire Recently Makes it Necessary to Start all Over Again, and Contributions are Asked.

At a meeting of the Executive Board of the King's Daughters Union Friday a committee was appointed to carry on the Camp work for the summer. Each King's Daughters Circle is represented by one member on this committee.

Owing to the total loss of our Camp by fire it has hampered the progress we anticipated making in this branch of the work. Definite arrangements will not be made yet until we know how large our contributions will be. It is our idea to secure some place for the time being to care for the little ones during the heat of the coming months. Our expenses will be heavier than they were last year and as our funds are low will not the people of Plainfield give us their co-operation as well as their money in our efforts to care for the little children in our town.

As our furniture has all been destroyed we will have to commence over again and if any one has an ice box, water cooler, oil stoves, baby carriages, hammocks, cots or rocking chairs they will be greatly appreciated.

We will be glad to have the little people in our town become interested in our work for the babies as well as the churches, Sunday-schools and other societies that are interested in the comfort of the poorer people around our homes

The committee hope for a hearty and generous response to their appeal.

All contributions of either furniture or money can be sent to Miss E. Little, 144 East Ninth street.

COLT DID A JIG OVER COOPER

Horseshoer Was in a Ticklish Position for a Short Time.

Howard Cooper, foreman at M. Quinn's horseshoeing shop on East Fourth street, had a narrow escape from serious injury Thursday afternoon. He was engaged shoeing a colt belonging to S. A. Cruikshank, of Baldwin avenue. C. C. Brower, of Park avenue, has been breaking the colt and brought it to be shod for the first time.

The colt soon began to plunge and kick. Cooper was thrown down and the colt stood over him narrowly missing his head. The colt struck Cooper's left shoulder, badly bruising it, and stepped on his left hand, breaking the little finger.

To Buy Out Mr. Rugg.

Negotiations are now pending for the purchase of C. H. Rugg's coal yard on Madison avenue, near West Third street, by the Paul T. Norton Company. The latter concern is going to leave its present headquarters on East Front street and plans to establish a coal and grain depot in the yard now conducted by Mr. Rugg. Mr. Rugg will probably start a new yard in some other part of the city.

Horse Fell in a Hole

Last Thursday a horse and wagon owned by Fred J. Harris, of Clinton avenue, was driven into Mr. Wenzer's yard at 1362 West Third street, where there is a cesspool covered with boards. The horse stepped on the boards, which gave way, allowing the hindquarters of the animal to sink into the cesspool. With assistance the horse was rescued without sustaining any injury.

Hegeman, Jr., Mrs. J. W. Reinhart, Mrs. Frank Bushnell and Mrs. William J. Boome. The committee in charge consisted of Howard Bushnell, Carroll L. Runyon and William J. Boome, Jr.

Cadets Not to Drill This Summer.

The drills of the cadets corps of Leals' School have been discontinued for a time. It is not probable that they will be resumed until fall. The reason of it is the lack of interest and enthusiasm among the members.

RECKLESS RUNNING OF TROLLEY CARS.

Bound Brook Residents Complain to Council.

MANY ACCIDENTS HAPPEN.

TROLLEY COMPANY MONOPOLIZE THE HIGHWAYS.

In the Last Two Weeks it is Said That a Dozen Accidents Have Happened—Vehicles Must Travel Over Other Roads if They Do Not Want to Imperil Their Lives — Council Will Act.

Since the Brunswick Traction Company has obtained the right of way through Bound Brook to Somerville, persons who are compelled to travel along the old turnpike have been forced not only to give the entire right of way to the trolley companies, but if they fear to imperil their lives, they must travel over some other highway.

In the last two weeks not less than a dozen accidents have occurred. Among the serious ones was one Monday, when Irwin Miller, of South Bound Brook, was struck by car No. 110 and knocked twenty-five feet. He was badly injured. The same day Mrs. Freeling was struck by a car going at top speed, and thrown into the gutter and badly hurt. Tuesday Herman Goltra, eighty years of age, was looking at the battle monument, in the public square in Bound Brook, when a trolley car came bowling along, struck the old man and injured him severely.

While William Hamilton and his wife were driving toward Somerville, Wednesday, a trolley car came up behind them, frightening the horse, which ran away, throwing the Hamiltons out and bruising them badly. Bystanders say that the motorman did not slow up even when he saw the horse was about to run away.

A car from Somerville ran into Mundy Brother's wagon at Bound Brook Thursday, demolishing it and injuring the driver. The wagon had a load of 1,600 pounds, and the driver weighed over two hundred, and when the collision came the wagon and men were thrown more than fifty feet. Late this afternoon little Jimmie Vatelli was playing in the Main street, in front of his father's shop, and started to run across the trolley tracks when he was knocked down by a rapidly moving car, and but for the promptness of a policeman, who dragged the child from the tracks at the risk of his life, would have been killed.

Residents in Bound Brook have filed a petition to the Council, asking that some steps be taken to prevent reckless running through the town.

$100 WATCH RECOVERED.

Nine-Year-Old Boy Stole to Buy Food for His Folks Who are Poor.

Recently a gold watch valued at $100, and owned by a coachman in the employ of Mrs. Elizabeth M. Conway, 920 West Seventh street, was stolen. Every effort to find it was unavailing until Friday when it was learned that Bruno Tablet, of West Eighth street, had the watch. The boy is about 9 years of age, and took the watch, he says, to sell so that he could get money to buy something to eat for the house as the family were in reduced circumstances. The boy was suspicioned, and yesterday the young lad's brother said that his younger brother had the watch, and it was returned to the owner

PLAINFIELDERS ENTERTAINED.

The reception according the members of the Plainfield Catholic Club Tuesday evening by the Young Men's Father Mathew T. A. B. Society was a pleasant one. The visitors were met at the Elizabethport depot of the Central Railroad by Messrs. M. O'Leary, P. J. Boyle, Andrew Farrell and John Stanley, a committee appointed for the purpose, and escorted to the clubhouse. A bowling game was the first feature, and this was won by the T. A. B. team, by a score of 833 to 598. For the visitors Thomas McCarty did the best, bowling 142. For the T. A. B. team Burke bowled 211 and Hefferman 206. —Elizabeth Journal.

EULOGY BY DR. BLISS.

FORMER PASTOR SPOKE AT FUNERAL OF LATE J. S. SCHOONMAKER.

A Large Attendance of Friends of the Deceased—Comrades From G. A. R. Post Present—Interment in Hillside Cemetery.

The home of the late Joseph Stockton Schoonmaker on Central avenue was filled with relatives and friends Thursday afternoon, who had gathered to pay their last tribute of love and respect to one whom they had known to admire for his many excellent qualities. That the departed was highly esteemed by all who knew him was evidenced in a great measure by the large attendance of mourners.

The services were held at 2:30 o'clock and were in charge of Rev. Dr. John O. Bliss, formerly a pastor of the Crescent Avenue church, where the deceased was a member, but now of New York. The words spoken by Dr. Bliss were from the heart and from one who had known Mr. Schoonmaker for forty years. He spoke of the Christian qualities of the departed, how devoted he was to his family and how closely drawn were the family ties that had bound each member of the family in the strongest love known to the human heart. He also spoke of Mr. Schoonmaker's earnest Christian life and how devoted he was to his church and to the cause of Christ. Dr. Bliss dwelt at some length on Mr. Schoonmaker's life in a business way, and how sincere and upright he was in all his dealings with his fellow-men.

During the service the quartette from the Crescent Avenue church, consisting of Mrs. Brooke, soprano; Miss Perry, contralto; Mr. Potter, tenor; Charles L. Lewis, baritone, sang with much effect Tennyson's "Sunset and Evening Star," and "Hark! Hark! My Soul."

There were many floral tributes from associates and friends of the departed, and resting on the bier was a large American flag and a sword, as significant of the fact that Mr. Schoonmaker was a loyal man to his country.

Among those present at the services was a delegation from Lafayette Post, G. A. R., of New York, of which Mr. Schoonmaker was a member. They appeared in civilian dress and wore the G. A. R. badge on the lapel of the coat.

The interment will take place at Hillside cemetery in the family plot, which is in accord with the wish of Mr. Schoonmaker, expressed some time ago.

WAR ON DUMPING GARBAGE

Robert Randolph Pleaded Guilty and Judge Suspended Sentence.

Health Inspector Addis has declared war against all ashcarters who dump garbage in the public dump. Beginning with May 1st, all the private dumps were closed and now the public one on East Third street, near Johnston avenue, is the only one where ashcarters may deposit their gather*ings within the city limits. Special* officer O'Gorman is on duty there to prevent the dumping of garbage and refuse there. Last Saturday he appeared as witness against Robert Randolph, colored ashcarter, who was arraigned in city court several days ago.

Randolph pleaded guilty to dumping garbage there but not in such quantity as Inspector Addis claimed. He explained that some of his customers hid the garbage in their ash barrels and he knew nothing of it until the officer at the dump discovered the refuse hidden in the ashes.

The Judge heard the stories of both sides and decided that Randolph was not a wilful offender although guilty. He therefore suspended sentence.

Music at the Hunnewton

George Rogers has the contract for furnishing the music this summer at the Hotel Hunnewton. Beginning with June 1st, his instrumental quartette will give three concerts a day. One will be in the morning, another at the dinner hour and the third during the evening. The Plainfield public will be invited to attend them.

The Biscuit was Not Hurt.

Joseph Sweeney, of West Fourth street, came in contact with a biscuit thrown at him by a soldier on the rear platform of a train that passed through here Thursday. The biscuit came with so much force that it raised a lump on Sweeney's head. Needless to say the biscuit was not broken.

To Attend Divine Services.

Sunday evening, May 28th, the members of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., Woman's Relief Corps, No. 10, auxiliary to the Post, and Sons of Veterans, will attend the divine services at the First Baptist church, when Dr. Yerkes will preach a sermon appropriate to Memorial Day.

Expects to be Home May 23d.

The Honeyman party is due to arrive in New York May 23d, instead of the 30th, as previously announced. The fact that they went on another steamer than at first intended made the trip a little quicker.

Circus is Coming.

Plainfield is to see a circus this spring after all. J. H. LaPearl's Allied Shows and two-ring circus will appear in this city Wednesday, May 24th.

CENTRAL PLANS FOR A FREIGHT TERMINAL.

Wharves to Be Used at Elizabethport, Not Jersey City.

WILL MAKE LESS WORK.

A NEW TRANSFER STATION WILL BE ERECTED.

On the Face of the Plan the Primary Cause of the Change is That the Transfer Department in Jersey City is Unable to Handle the Increasing Amount of Work Thrown on It.

Among the many changes made and proposed by the Central Railroad Company of much importance is that which contemplates making the freight transfer terminus at the wharves in Elizabethport instead of at Jersey City.

On the face of the plan the primary cause of the change is that the transfer department in Jersey City is unable to handle the increasing amount of work thrown upon it by the growth of traffic over the road. Some of the railway men, however, seem to find another motive, in that ultimately the transferring will all be done at the yards and docks at Elizabethport with a less force of men than at present employed.

Until Monday the freight was sent from all points to Jersey City, where it was assorted for its various destinations. Cars were reloaded so as to make through ones for Brooklyn, New York and other places. This work is said to have become too heavy, and part of it has been transferred to this city. All that will run to Jersey City now will be the full cars ready for float shipment to the various connecting roads or to the nearby cities.

Plans for a new transfer station, large enough to accommodate the great amount of work, will be put into effect immediately, and the building erected. After that is done the cars will be made ready at the Port for their final destination, and sent to Jersey City for direct shipment.

FOUGHT FIVE ROUNDS.

Fourth Ward Bully Knocked Out by a Volunteer Fresh From Cuba.

There was a quiet little prize fight Thursday morning along Green brook near Giraud avenue. A young man, recently returned from the war, had some words with a big Fourth Warder, who is said to pose as a leader in his crowd. The Fourth Warder declared he could lick the soldier and all his family. It took the young soldier just five rounds to knock his opponent out for good.

The battle was fought in a sixteen foot ring with seconds, time keeper and all the proper surroundings for a prize fight.

HURRAH FOR THE CIRCUS.

J. H. LaPearl's Great Two Ring Show Coming to This City.

Novelty, excellent, originality and magnitude are striking characteristics of J. H. LaPearl's circus performances this season. In this department are seen a multitude of new features; so many new displays are presented this year as to give the circus a new character throughout. So vast is the array of arenic talent that for three solid hours, two rings and elevated stage, a world of aerial apparatus and immense surrounding race course are occupied with sensational displays participated in by over 100 peerless artists. New features are the rule, the old-time worn numbers have been discarded to make room for the many superb attractions gathered from all parts of the world. In the two rings, elevated stage and upon the aerial apparatus contained in J. H. LaPearl's Colossal Pavillion, the champions of every country meet in friendly rivalry for supremacy, and compose the most varied and grandest arenic exhibition ever seen under canvas. Will exhibit at Plainfield, May 24th.

STUDENT TO PRESIDENT

REV. JOHN A. STAFFORD IS NOW HEAD OF SETON HALL COLLEGE.

Was Formerly Assistant Rector in St Mary's Church in This City and Helped Also to Establish the Catholic Lyceum.

There is more than ordinary interest in the new president of Seton Hall College, the leading Catholic educational institution of New Jersey, because he was formerly engaged in pastoral work in St. Mary's parish in Plainfield. The one who has been distinguished by reflection for this responsible position is Rev. John A. Stafford, pleasantly remembered by all the Catholics and many others of this city.

The new appointee took charge this week. Since Father Synnott's death the vice-president, Rev. George F. Brown, has been acting president and has been congratulated for his abilities by educational circles which he has shown in discharging his duties as executive of old Seton.

Father Stafford's election is very popular. He is thoroughly conversant with the duties of the college presidency, having served as vice-president for two years. He assumed the duties of president of the college when Rev. William F. Marshall, the president, found it necessary to go to Europe for his health. Father Marshall is still abroad and is not yet in good health.

Father Stafford was ordained in Rome. This was in 1888. He received the sacred orders of the priesthood in Rome Cathedral, the Church of St. John Lateran. Cardinal Parocchi presided at the ordination ceremonies.

Shortly after returning to this country Father Stafford was assigned by the Rev. Bishop W. M. Wigger, of the Newark diocese, as curate to the Rev. F. B. Smyth at St. Mary's church, Plainfield. He was stationed in Plainfield for four years, during which time he assisted very materially in having a handsome new club house erected for the Young Men's Catholic Association connected with St. Mary's church.

From Plainfield the energetic young priest was assigned to St. Mary's church in Jersey City, where he labored under the Rev. Dr. Charles J. Kelly, now of Hoboken. While in Jersey City Father Stafford did a great deal to further the interests of the well-known Catholic Club there, and to him more credit is due for the prominent position this association holds in Catholic affairs in Jersey City today.

Father Stafford was summoned to Seton Hall from Jersey City to accept the vice-presidency of the college. After serving as acting president until a few years ago, when he was sent to St. Augustine's church, Union Hill, which was really his first work as a parish priest or pastor. He was extremely successful at Union Hill.

By earnest and energetic work he had the school reopened, and now it is in a flourishing condition. He has also paid off considerable of the parish debt.

SUNDAY SHAVING MAKES DISCONTENT.

Troubles in the Ranks of the Local Barbers.

THE SPIRIT OF THE LAW.

ALLEGED THAT ALL BARBERS ARE NOT OBSERVING IT.

Majority of the Tonsorial Artists Favor Sunday Closing, But Are Not Satisfied With Methods Now in Vogue—Some Allege That the Law is Being Violated by Several in the Business.

"What? Keep open on Sundays again?" exclaimed one of Plainfield's leading tonsorial artists, pausing razor in hand while removing the stubby growth on a familiar chin. "Not if I can help it, at least."

Such seems the general opinion among the local barbers although a few would like to see the present city ordinance, relating to the subject revoked. While the spirit of the ordinance suits the great majority of the barbers, they are by no means satisfied with the way in which it has been observed. There is even some talk of complaints to the City Judge and subsequent arrests for alleged infractions of the ordinance.

The ordinance allowing the barbers to keep open only six days a week was passed by the Common Council at the express request of the local barbers. A petition was drawn up and almost unanimously signed. Then came the passage of the ordinance and, for a time, every barber shop in the city was closed on Sunday.

Several months after the passage of the ordinance, David Miodovnik, better known as "Dave," whose shop is at 213 West Front street, closed up Friday nights at sundown and opened Saturday night at sundown, keeping open all Sunday. As he is a Hebrew, he has a right to observe the Hebrew Sabbath according to the ordinance. As Dave was one of the leaders in the Sunday closing movement and signed the petition, there was considerable feeling against him on the part of some of the other barbers.

George Richter has a barber shop at 15 Somerset street. He, too, signed the petition asking for Sunday closing. After a time he rented a small establishment on Somerset street, just across the line and in the county line. The North Plainfield shop is kept open on Sunday while the Plainfield establishment runs week days. While there is no breaking of the ordinance, the other barbers claim that he has violated the spirit of the agreement.

Certain of the proprietors of the tonsorial parlors, which are closed Sundays, spend the greater part of their day in visiting the homes of certain of their patrons. This, they claim, they are compelled to do to keep their trade from the hands of those who keep open Sunday.

Several establishments have recently opened on the principle of closing Saturdays and opening Sundays. It is alleged by several other Sunday-closing barbers that the law is violated by them frequently. Their claim is that these shops are not closed Friday nights until long after sundown and open Saturdays at 5 o'clock, while the sun does not set at this time of year until after 7 o'clock. Complaint has been made to Chief Grant, and he has expressed a willingness to move forward in the matter if a formal complaint is made.

One barber has declared that he intends to keep open Sundays if the law on the subject is not better enforced. He declares that the city ordinance is really not legal and could be broken by the barbers, if they united and made a joint fight on a test case in the county and State courts.

The general sentiment is undoubtedly in favor of the Sunday closing, and any attempt to persuade the Council to revoke its ordinance would meet with strong opposition. There is, nevertheless, a feeling among the trade that something ought to be done, although none are anxious to take a lead in the movement.

Ate Too Much Ice Shad.

Last week Bert Sherman, of Sherman avenue, was taken violently ill on account of eating roe shad, and since then he has been in a rather critical condition. A physician was called and he decided after an examination that an operation would have to be performed. Of late the young man has eaten a great deal of roe shad. In the examination made by the physician an abscess was discovered, and this will have to be removed.

MAYOR APPOINTED THE CALL FIREMEN.

New Ordinance Went Into Effect at Midnight Yesterday.

CHIEF NAMED THE FIREMEN.

PETITION RECEIVED IN RELATION TO MARTIN ACT TAXES.

The Application of Michael Welsh for a Saloon License in the West End Was Opposed by Rev. G Kennedy Nowell and Was Finally Laid on the Table—Other Business Considered.

The most important matter decided upon at the special meeting of the Common Council held last Monday was the abolishing of the present fire department system and the organizing of a paid department. Mr. Corlell offered a resolution to the effect that the Council deemed it wise to increase the fire protection of the city, and that the Chief of the department give notice that the services of the volunteer men shall cease tomorrow night at midnight, when all property held by them belonging to the city shall be turned over to the city. Mr. Corlell expressed the highest appreciation of the Council to the volunteer firemen for the excellent service performed by them, and said that the officials would be pleased at all times to receive advice and suggestions from the exempt firemen.

In connection with the above Mayor Rockfellow presented to the Council his appointments of the officers, paid and call men, who are to serve under the new system. The appointments were made pursuant to the provisions of the ordinance entitled "An ordinance to establish, regulate and control a fire department in the city of Plainfield, approved May 6th, 1899." The officers appointed are those who, under Section 2 of said ordinance, are required to be retained in office. The list is as follows:

Chief Engineer, T. O. Doane; first assistant engineer, J. W. Murray; second assistant engineer, A. D. Jennings; drivers, W. F. Townley, James F. Daly, George Fetring, William Koss, Fred Breese, J. E. Bailey; tillerman, H. C. Bush; engineer for steamer, Frank Schick; veterinary surgeon, L. S. Pocock; full paid men, L. M. Dunavan, George Mehl, Jr.; call men, D. S. Dunavan, William Newman, D. V. Force, F. C. Putnam, L. J. Spicer, Frank Hart, R. B. Rogers, A. Kahrman, C. W. Smith, W. C. Chamberlain, Walter Harrison, Edward Vail, W. H. Addis, E. McCann, Harry Kesselring, J. Kline Charles Graves, H. Manning, Francis Marsh, Joseph Clark, J. B. Cose, W. P. Henderson, Geo. H. Freeman and Alex. Moir.

Following the above appointments the following were designated by Chief Doane to serve as foremen of the various companies: Hose No. 1, D. S. Dunavan; hose No. 2, R. B. Rogers; hose No. 3, Charles Graves; hook and ladder No. 1, W. H. Addis.

All of the above appointments were confirmed by the Council and the men commenced duty at 12 midnight yesterday.

Another important matter was the action taken regarding the license applicated made by Michael Welsh to establish a saloon on Grant avenue. A recess was taken to consider the matter, during which the Council received Rev. G. Kennedy Newell, pastor of Hope chapel, who desired to have something to say about the licensing of the place. After the Council had been out nearly forty-five minutes, they returned and upon a motion offered by Chairman Leifke, of the license committee, the license was laid over. It is now hardly probable that it will be brought up again by the present Council.

The routine business of the evening was taken up and considered as follows:

Three bids were received for macadamizing West Third and Fourth streets, as follows: C. M. Meeker, West Third street, 77 cents per lineal foot; West Fourth street, 30 feet wide, $1.35 per lineal foot; 40 feet, $1.60 per lineal foot; A. J. and N. B Smalley, West Third street, 80 cents per lineal foot; West Fourth street, 30 feet wide, $1.38 per lineal foot; 40 feet, $1.56 per lineal foot; John Y. Wilson, West Third street, 83 cents per lineal foot. Mr. Wilson did not bid on West Fourth street. All bids were referred to the street committee and the successful bidders will be announced at a later meeting.

An electric light was petitioned for to be located on Hillside avenue, between Lake and Highland avenues. Patsy Christmas asked for more time to start work on the Park avenue storm sewer, owing to delay in receiving pipe, and the request was granted. A petition signed by R. O. Howell and others asked the Council to postpone for present action in the collection of back taxes under the Martin Act, until those affected could better arrange to meet the payment. This petition was referred to the committee on collection and assessment of taxes. S. P. T. Wilbur and others asked to have a fire-alarm box located on Westervelt avenue between Orange street and the brook. The petition was referred with power

Patrolman James A Tutten, through his counsel, Lawyer Robert M. Clark, cited the charge made against him by the city, that of drinking in Kane's saloon on West Third street, and made a demand for trial or a dismissal of the charge. The matter was referred to the Police Board.

Residents of Mariner's avenue petitioned for electric lights on their avenue. A communication was received from President Hugh Fox, of the New Jersey State Children's Guardian Association, stating that such an association is now organized and incorporated for the purpose of taking care of the dependent children of the State, and the Council was asked to make its proportionate appropriation toward the work.

An application was received from Major F. W. Coleman for a liquor license to sell at the Hotel Hunterson. This matter was referred to the proper committee.

The Council received an invitation to attend Memorial Day exercises in Music Hall in the afternoon of May 30th.

Mr. VanHorwerden offered a resolution regarding the salary to be paid the Martin Act Commissioners for their work. The resolution stated that while the council believed that $1,500 for each commissioner was a reasonable sum, it desired that the Corporation Counsel ask the court to fix the salaries, believing that it would adjust the matter in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. Mellick reported on the request of Myra P. Eddy, of Jersey City, to have $28 66 returned to her, that being the excess amount assessed and collected on property owned by her on Muhlenberg place. Mr. Mellick stated that the amount in question is due the petitioner and on his motion it was ordered returned to her.

On motion offered by Mr. Tolles two new electric lights were located. One will be placed on Filmore avenue, between East Third street and North avenue, and the other on Madison avenue between Third and Fourth streets.

After receiving and acting favorably on the report of the auditing committee, the council adjourned.

MUSIC OF A HIGH ORDER.

CONCERT GIVEN BY METRONOME BANJO AND MANDOLIN CLUB.

Proceeds for the Benefit of Muhlenberg Hospital—Greater New York Quartette Unable to Appear at Casino.

A large and fashionable audience gathered in the Casino Monday and heard the rendition of a fine programme under the auspices of the Metronome Banjo and Mandolin Club, a local organization that is possessed of more than ordinary musical ability. The proceeds of the affair will be given to Muhlenberg Hospital.

Unfortunately, the Greater New York Quartette was prevented from appearing, but the loss of this feature was compensated for in the solos which Alfred Holmes was prevailed upon to render at the last moment to fill the numbers assigned to the quartette. The excellence of Mr. Holmes' voice and his popularity with Plainfielders was sufficient to keep up the standard of the talent promised.

The playing of the club, which opened the programme with the "Napoleon March," was excellent. Under the able direction of Fred Van Eps the players are working in unison so that they take high rank among the musical clubs of the metropolitan district.

The previous debut of Miss Marion Short, the elocutionist, made her appearance anticipated with pleasure by the audience. She was at her best during the evening, and was given several encores in appreciation of her entertaining qualities.

Miss Marian Rummler, of New York, rendered two contralto solos in rare voice. Her voice shows excellent training, and her singing was much appreciated.

Fred VanEps distinguished himself with his banjo solos. On this instrument Mr. VanEps is an artist of rare ability, and in the rendition of in two solos he pleased the audience an exceptional manner.

CITY STREET WORK.

Street Commissioner Busy Putting Thoroughfares in Good Condition.

While the stone is being spread on the lower end of Central avenue the steam roller is being put to use on Liberty street, near Front street. Several spots have been patched there, and the Street Commissioner has been waiting for some time for an opportunity to roll them down.

The Street Commission is anxious to roll down those streets where loose stone has been spread during the spring. Among the places are Plainfield avenue, Rahway road, the south end of Belvidere avenue, East and West Front street. This work must be done at once.

Fourth street will be macadamized from curb to curb, while the macadam on Third street will be only sixteen feet wide.

CITY NEEDS TALKED OF

Enthusiastic Meeting of Business Men Held.

SENATOR REED ON HAND.

JAMES E. MARTINE WANTS MORE LIBERAL OFFICIALS.

Silas Dewey Drake Believes in Advertising and Suggests That the Common Council Appropriate $1,000 for Such a Purpose.

If there is anything in indications Plainfield is about to be enlivened and improved in several respects by the active and aggressive action of a number of the leading citizens in both business and professional circles. As arranged, a meeting was held in the Coward building an East Front street last Tuesday which was attended by a representative gathering.

J. B. Coward called the meeting to order, and Mayor Smalley was selected for chairman. Assessor Elston M. French was chosen for secretary. Mayor Smalley was brief in his remarks upon assuming the chair, and shortly introduced Senator Reed as the first speaker of the evening. Mr. Reed said that he had been called upon without much notice and was not prepared to say much. However, he assumed that the meeting was to indulge in discussion that would be of some benefit in advancing the material interests of the city, and along such a line he thought that a few remarks pointing out the faults of Plainfielders, with a view to their correction, might not be amiss. The first thing, he said, that came into his mind in this connection was the tone of criticism for their home town that many Plainfielders assume in conversing with strangers. This fault, he thought, prevailed to a greater extent among the ladies than among the men. As the general reputation of a city, as its own citizens spoke of it, was a very important detail in inducing others to come here and take up their residence and help to contribute to the business interests, he thought it a very bad fault that anyone should speak ill of it.

The most important matter, and the most interesting, to which the Senator referred, was the taxation question and its relation to prospective residents. Mr. Reed believed that when a visitor heard that the tax rate was $2 40 on the $100 it did more than anything else to keep them away from the place. The solution of this difficulty was in making valuations at the market value of the property. The Senator dwelt at considerable length on this phase of the matter, and declared that the prevailing custom of assessing properties at a per centage of its true value was a system that obtained practice because of public sentiment in the community. That sentiment ought to be changed, he said, and the assessments made at true value, which would result in reducing the rate of taxation to $1 on the $100, and would prove the biggest drawing card that Plainfield could secure.

After Senator Reed had finished James E. Martine was introduced by Mayor Smalley. Mr. Martine, who is one of the largest property owners in Plainfield, and one of its most careful observers, said that Plainfield was not growing as it should grow. Mr. Martine attributed a part of this condition of affairs to the railroad fares. He thought that they were too high.

One point that Mr. Martine dwelt upon to considerable extent was the officious and narrow-minded ways of the city officials. The present municipal government seemed devoted to the idea of making a Paris of Plainfield in short order, irrespective of the hardships, injustices and aggravations that they heaped upon the property owners. They drew a line here and a circle there, and said that all things within those lines must be so and so, irrespective of whether the conditions warranted it or not. That was not the right policy for the city officials to pursue, as it did no good to the people in the city and kept many from coming here.

Mr. Martine also thought that in many ways Plainfield was narrow-minded, puritanical and bigoted in its idea of Sunday practices. He alluded to the fact that it was against the law for a drug store to sell a cigar or a

THE ENDEAVOR CYCLERS.

FIRST RUN ENJOYED TO MARCONIER CHAPEL TUESDAY NIGHT.

Forty in the Party, Which Proved to Be a Jolly One in Every Respect—Good Time Was Had at the Chapel.

The Christian Endeavor bicycle squad took their first run of the season last Tuesday and attended a strawberry festival and entertainment at the Marconnier chapel. The squad begins the year with every prospect for a most successful season of work along those lines which they have chosen.

The start was made soon after 7:30 o'clock from the Park Avenue Baptist church. There were about forty Endeavorers in the party and they made a fine appearance as they wheeled away. They came from all the societies in the city. The night could not have been finer, and the roads were in first-class condition.

At the festival an enjoyable programme of violin and piano music was presented, also vocal selections. A good social time was enjoyed. The run home was made in a half hour, the party reaching town at 11 o'clock.

This is the third year of the squad. It was organized originally to go to the outlying societies of the local union and encourage the workers in their religious services, but at length the members began to take in social affairs.

Last Thursday night all those interested in a bicycle squad met at the home of E. E. Anthony, of West Front street, and reorganized for the year of 1899. Mr Anthony was elected captain and last Tuesday the first run was taken. The destination of the party next time has not been decided upon.

RAILS ARE NOW AT HAND.

MATERIAL FOR CONSTRUCTION OF TROLLEY ROAD.

Each Rail Weighs 1,680 Pounds—Roadbed Said to be the Best in the State—The Rails Will be Laid Right Away, Probably, May 31.

Eight carloads were left here, six at Garwood and six at Cranford. Workmen are now busily engaged unloading the rails and carting them to the places along the line, where they will be utilized. Contractor Serrell was at this place and Cranford yesterday. Work will begin at once laying the rails, starting at the Roselle borough dividing line. The railroad ties have been laying along the line for several days past. The poles and overhead work are expected to arrive very shortly.

The rails have attracted considerable attention. It requires two cars to carry the rails. These rails are twenty yards long, and weigh eighty-four pounds to the yard, making each rail's weight 1,680 pounds. The double-track railway will therefore contain 240 tons of rail to the mile.

It is said the roadbed will be the best built in the State. From present indications it now looks as if the south-side trolley will connect Elizabeth with Plainfield before September.

Timbo & Company's New Store.

Fitted out with everything new from top to bottom and end to end, the cigar store and lunch place of Thomas Timbo & Co., at 135 North avenue, is without doubt the neatest and prettiest place of its kind in the city. Mr. Timbo has gone to heavy expense in furnishing the new store, the fixtures and details in every respect being made especially for his use. The interior of the store has been painted and decorated throughout and presents a bright and handsome appearance. A costly and beautiful onyx soda fountain has been established in the front of the store, from which the best of hot weather decoctions will be served this summer. New and costly show cases have been bought for the cigars, a stock which Mr. Timbo and his assistant, Erwin Neighbor, keeps up to the finest standard at all times.

Opening of Arlington Hotel.

Last Tuesday a formal opening of the Arlington Hotel, under the proprietorship of Mr. Jensen, took place, and was a great success. The principal feature of the affair was the dancing which continued until a late hour. Wallander furnished the music. During the evening a sumptuous repast was served by the host and this was greatly enjoyed. There was a large attendance of people and everyone expressed satisfaction with the opening. Mr. Jensen has made a great many improvements about his hotel and it is now considered to be one of the best kept houses in this vicinity.

FLAMES MAKE CLEAN SWEEP OF ICEHOUSE.

Disastrous Conflagration of the Brady Brothers' Property.

OF AN INCENDIARY ORIGIN.

THE TOTAL LOSS IS ESTIMATED TO BE $6,000 OR $7,000.

The Newly-Organized Fire Department Worked Hard to Prevent Adjoining Buildings From Igniting—1,000 Tons of Ice Destroyed—An Immense Crowd Attracted By the Glare.

One of the worst fires with which this city has been visited for some time past broke out last Tuesday about 8 o'clock in the icehouses owned by Brady Brothers, and located on West Front street. The fire is supposed to be of incendiary origin. Two alarms were sent in, one from Box No. 47, near the Pond Tool Works, and the other from Box No. 45, at South Second street and Muhlenberg place.

There never was a time when the department responded so quickly and did such prompt and efficient work. Everything seemed to work in harmony and the call men turned out to a man. All the hydrants accessible were used and a number of streams of water were poured into the flames.

According to the best of authority the fire started next to the railroad on the south side of the building about half way up from the bottom. Considering the exact location of the starting point, according to the best judges, it hardly seems probable that the fire was the result of a spark from a locomotive. The building is so constructed that the sides are open with a double lining, and once a fire got started it would be impossible to stop it.

The house had a capacity of 6,000 tons of ice, and there were about 1,000 tons stored therein. The house and contents were a complete loss, which it is estimated will be in the neighborhood of $6,000 or $7,000. There is no insurance on the ice, but the building was fully covered by insurance, $1,500 of which was held by E. M. French & Co.

A Daily Press representative was in conversation with Bernard Brady last Tuesday, and was informed that the ice house would be replaced immediately, and that the fire would not interfere with their plans. The firm has 200,000 tons of ice stored in their houses at Lake Hopatcong.

Mr. Brady is inclined to be suspicious regarding the fire.

During the early part of the fire some of the nearby dwellings suffered from the heat and were scorched to some extent, in some cases necessitating the use of water. A barn owned by Brady Bros., standing a short distance from the icehouse, was not damaged to any extent whatever. Several horses and wagons located in nearby barns were narrowly rescued from destruction.

The fire attracted the greater portion of Plainfield and North Plainfield people. Passing trains felt perceptibly the intense heat thrown out. At Potter Press Works the night men run out the hose stationed there and water was thrown on the press works. Owing to lines of hose being laid on Front street trolley cars were prevented from running past the fire. Their traffic was continued through a system of transfer.

Regarding the insurance it should be stated that several companies held policies on the building, no one company being willing to take the entire risk. As soon as possible the debris will be cleared away and work will be started to replace the destroyed house, with another one of similar construction.

The chiefs of the department are liberal in their distribution of praise of the work of the call men, and the way in which the fire was handled is certainly a credit to Plainfield's firemen. In less than one hour and a half from the time the fire started, it was practically extinguished.

The alarm from Box 47 was sent in by Augustus Jacobson, and Fred Weber sent the alarm in from Box 45.

Fire Department Changes.

The change in the fire department apparatus will not be made until June 1st. The pavement has been laid in front of the new engine house in the West End and the first of the month the apparatus assigned to that house will be transferred.

Dennis Carney, of East Fourth street, is able to be out again after a severe illness.

C. F. Mason and wife, Ethel Mason, Willie Mason, Frank Martin and Alfred Tibo, of Jersey City, were guests of W. A. Schorb, of Front street, over Sunday.

HIGH IN MASONRY NOW.

GOVERNOR VOORHEES ADVANCED TO THE 32D DEGREE.

H. W. Marshall and J. A. Smith, of Plainfield, Were Among Those Advanced Tuesday—Mr. Durand Faint.

H. W. Marshall and J. A. Smith, of this city, were among the candidates who were advanced to the thirty-second degree in Masonry in company with Governor Voorhees at Phillips Hall in Jersey City Tuesday. A number of Plainfield Masons were in attendance at the event.

Congressman Henry N. Fowler, of Elizabeth, ex-Mayor John C. Rankin, of Elizabeth, Congressman W. D. Daly, of Hoboken, and Judge Frank Fort, of Newark, were also advanced to the thirty-second degree.

All the degrees were conferred by New Jersey Consistory No. 1. The chief working officers were James Durand, Stephen Smith and Thomas Tilden. A banquet followed the conferring of the degrees.

Mr. Durand, who lives in Rahway, during the initiation of the Governor, fainted from excitement. He was taken to the City Hospital.

A FRUHLINGS FEST.

Seasonable Event to Be Given By Church of the Heavenly Rest.

The children and teachers of the Heavenly Rest Industrial School are making elaborate plans for a Fruhlings Fest, or spring festival, to be held on the church property the afternoon and evening of Saturday, June 17th. The grounds will be prettily decorated with flags and lanterns, and a number of attractive booths will be erected in the parish house, where fancy articles to suit the most æsthetic taste will be on sale, besides plenty of refreshments.

Miss Minnie Wilson, the chairman of the Fruhlings Fest committee, will be assisted by a number of her friends and the corps of thirteen teachers who give instruction to the scholars.

It is astonishing the progress this school has made. Organized the 26th of November in a blizzard with nine scholars, it now numbers 126, with an average attendance of 60 pupils. Instruction is now being given in singing, German, embroidery, outline work, plain sewing, crocheting, darning and kindergarten. The fest is given for the purpose of raising money enough to carry on the work and establish a booking class in the fall.

The school is non-sectarian and holds its session every Saturday from 2 until 4:30, and visitors are always welcome and will be well repaid for their trouble. Such work ought to be encouraged.

WANTS HER DRESSES BACK.

Mrs. Anna Leary Brings Suit Against Morristown Domestic.

J. P. D. Kirch has brought suit before a Morristown justice of the peace for Mrs. Anna Leary, of this city, against Miss Belle Mason, of that place, in tort.

Miss Mason was a domestic in the employ of Mrs. Leary last February, and at the expiration of the month when she left her employer alleges that she took with her two costly dresses. One was taken with Mrs. Leary's permission to wear home, and the other one was taken without her permission.

The first one was to be sent home at once, but weeks have passed and the dresses have not come. Now Mrs. Leary sues for their recovery, or their equivalent.

WATER COVERED SEWER PIPES.

It Came From Leaks in the System of Water Pipes.

It was only necessary to take a glance in the sewer trenches on Richmond street a few days ago, to see that Street Commissioner Gavett was right when he said that the sewer pipes were covered with water. When the trenches were opened and the pipes laid bare, it was seen that water rose up to within a few inches of the ground, completely covering the pipes.

For the past few days men have been pumping the water out, and now the trenches are nearly dry. This was necessary before any work could be done. The water comes from leaks in the system of water pipes.

Has Not Sold Land for Naval Magazine.

Elizabeth, May 24.—Farmer John Winans, of Tremley, denies the story that the United States Government had purchased his farm for the purpose of locating a naval magazine on the land for the storage of high explosives. He said that parties had called on him to secure the price of his land, and he gave them the figure at which he would sell it. Since then he had not heard anything from them.

COOPER WILL GET POSTMASTERSHIP.

It is Thought Senator Reed's Friend Will Win.

THOMPSON SEEMS WORRIED

WANTED THE GOVERNOR TO UNDERSTAND SITUATION.

Somerville Delegation of Republicans Did Not go to Ask Voorhees to Interfere in Contest, but Went to Vouch for the Loyalty of Thompson to Regular Republican Candidate.

Somerville, May 24—Local leaders of both the so-called Thompson and Reed factions of the Republican party in Somerset County appear pretty well satisfied that George W. Cooper, whose candidacy aroused the opposition of the Thompson faction, will succeed Alvah A. Clark as postmaster here.

The contest, like almost everything of a political character which has happened in this county recently, has been marked by charges and counter-charges, emanating from the rival factions. So direct and apparently well-authenticated were some of these allegations of party disloyalty that Congressman Howell, through whom the appointment is made, ventured the opinion that inasmuch as there appeared to be no straightout Republican seeking the office, it might be as well to urge Postmaster Clark to retain the position. This suggestion, while not taken seriously, was regarded as indicating that Congressman Howell intended to fulfil the partial promise he had made to Senator Reed and recommended the appointment of Mr. Cooper, notwithstanding the intimation that Cooper and other members of the Reed faction had at divers times worked against the election of Republican candidates.

In refuting the assertion of party treachery made against Cooper, followers of the Reed faction declared that Clerk in Chancery Lewis A. Thompson and his followers were responsible for such dissatisfaction as existed in the Republican ranks, because of their determination to rule or ruin the party in the county. Mr. Thompson, holding, as he does, a position of trust under appointment by the Governor, was averse to casting under the imputation that he was directly or otherwise responsible for the defeat of any Republican candidate in his county. He determined to assure Governor Voorhees that such was not the case, and with that object in view he requested several of the leading Republicans of the county to visit the Governor at Trenton last Tuesday and explain to him the situation as it actually exists. They did so, and it is said convinced the Governor that no matter what the factional differences in Somerset may be, all sides appear united on election day and work hard for the success of the Republican candidates.

Governor Voorhees expressed the hope that this pleasant relationship did exist, and one of the delegation said that it would be demonstrated by the withdrawl of such opposition as existed toward the appointment of Cooper as postmaster.

This gave rise to the impression that the delegation had called on Governor Voorhees to ask his influence in defeating Cooper and securing the nomination of some other candidate for postmaster. No such request was made, members of the delegation say, and if it had been Governor Voorhees would have ignored it, because he does not consider it within his province as Governor to interfere with the selection of a candidate for postmaster of Somerville or any other locality.

RAIN AND FLOODS, HE SAYS.

For the Pacific Coast DeVoe Predicts a Dry, Scorching Spell.

Weather Prophet DeVoe, of Hackensack, says we are about to have a spell of weather never before experienced in this country, and cautions the people to prepare for it. According to his forecast, the Pacific coast will be almost cremated by a burning drought during the last days in May and the early part of June.

Along the Atlantic seaboard the Hackensack forecaster says there will be heavy floods due to great rainstorms.

MR WHITE'S ENTERPRISE

TO START A DEPARTMENT STORE IN STOCKTON, CAL.

Plainfield's Former Merchant Will, It Is Said, Invest $75,000 in a Dry Goods Store on the Pacific Slope.

The Stockton, (Cal.) Evening Mail prints the following story in its issue of May 16th, which will be of interest to Plainfield:

Two or three times within the past month The Mail has made reference to the probability that a certain gentleman, whose name was withheld at the time, would soon open a large department store in Stockton, making a specialty of dry goods. The articles stated that the gentleman was from the East, and that he had $75,000 to risk on the venture. The particulars were secured by The Mail from M. Arndt, of the Arcade, with whom the Eastern man had held a conference in regard to the matter. Mr. Arndt declined to divulge the name of the gentleman, at the latter's request, as he was not fully determined upon the location of the store, and was looking at Los Angeles and Sacramento.

The merchant is E. H. White, and his home is in Plainfield, New Jersey. He has selected Stockton as the most desirable place for the large department store, and, in company with Mr. McCarty, the head man in the dry goods department of Levi Strauss & Co., of San Francisco, will be in Stockton about the 1st of September next, when the preliminary work of establishing the store will probably be begun.

Mr. McCarty was in Stockton the past day or two, and informed Mr. Arndt that Mr. White favored Stockton above the other two places mentioned.

TO ENJOY LOWER TAXES

BOROUGH FINANCES ARE IN SPLENDID CONDITION.

Prompt Payment of Taxes and a Reduction in the Cost of the Municipal Government Will Materially Decrease the Rate.

The present condition of the borough from a financial standpoint is one of which every citizen can feel proud, for her citizens have been remarkably prompt in paying their taxes. Of the 1898 personal tax there is now remaining unpaid about $35, which, according to Mayor Smalley, is not equaled any where in New Jersey, and the next two weeks will make a far better showing. His Honor is also authority for the statement that this year the tax rate will be lessened to a great extent. This reduction will result in a measure from the fact that the police department this year will cost the borough about $1,000 less than previously. In the other departments such great reductions cannot be made, as there are generally fixed sums for each one.

The remaining taxes for 1898 unpaid is comparatively small and the collections are good. Instead of the officials resorting to dogmatic methods in collecting taxes they are using a great deal of moral persuasion and according to their own statements excellent results are obtained.

The school tax may be a little higher this year on account of the building of the new school, and this matter is not altogether in the hands of the Council to control. However, where the Council has control of the finances there will be reductions wherever it is possible.

Y. M. C. A. Bicycle Run.

The second Y. M. C. A. bicycle run occurs this evening, and the boys are to be treated to something nice at Ashbey's, the consolation they are going to visit, has the sleeve for them. The members there have put their hands down in their pockets and offered to entertain the visiting wheelmen from Plainfield, New Brunswick and Summit.

Took Insect Poison.

A young man rushed in Hepburn's drug store Monday night, all excitement, saying that he had swallowed a dose of insect poison for powdered licorice. Mr. Hepburn administered an emetic as soon as possible. He was soon out of danger. Next time he says he will look at the label on bottles and papers before tasting of their contents.

DEPRAVITY AT 'PLAINS

What Rev. Mr. Shott Has To Say About It.

TIME FOR REFORMATION.

PROPOSES TO DO WHAT HE CAN TO BRING A CHANGE.

Says There Are Too Many Licensed Drinking Places—Bad as the Bowery—Shocking Profanity Heard—Cock Fights There, Too.

Nestling quietly under the shadow of the stately Watchung range of mountains in one corner of Union county, one would scarcely think that Scotch Plains, rich with tradition that dates back to the time of King George, was a hamlet wherein vice and evil doing prevailed to more than an ordinary extent. But if recent developments are taken to indicate anything, Scotch Plains is a wonderfully deceiving place as to its moral turpitude. In fact, Scotch Plains is had in a good many senses of the word. And there are none who recognize this condition more poignantly than Rev. James Shott, pastor of the Scotch Plains Baptist church, which is 102 years old, and the mother of the first Baptist church ever organized in New York city.

Last Friday afternoon Miss Alida Messler, nineteen years of age, who has spent all her life in Scotch Plains, came to Plainfield and tried to commit suicide in a sensational manner in the hallway of the Codlaction building on Park avenue. The desperate act of this young girl is now said to be the culmination of a disgraceful condition of affairs that prevails in Scotch Plains.

Tuesday afternoon a Daily Press reporter called on the reverend gentleman at his parsonage, bounded on one side by the century-old church over which he presides and on the other by a dozen modest cottages and five hotels. It is the latter to which he attributes much of the badness of the town.

"Just think of it," said the minister with considerable warmth of expression, "here we are with five licensed drinking places and yet possess a population of but 3,000 souls. That is a worse condition than you will find on the Bowery in New York. I tell you it is outrageous, disgraceful. What am I going to do about it. Well I'll tell you I propose to do some moralizing from my pulpit before long." And there was an inference in his remarks that was suggestive of the fact that someone was going to hear truth that would strike home.

"It doesn't need a murder to make me commence preaching temperance," continued Rev. Mr. Shott. "And when I say temperance, I don't mean the stopping of liquor drinking alone, I mean temperance in language as well. Why, the profanity that I hear on the streets and in the public places of this town is simply shocking; men who are supposed to be reputable citizens, and mere lads too, are disgustingly shocking in the profanity that they turn their tongues to. This lewd talk is heard in the presence of ladies and children till one fails of language severe enough to express his feelings in relation to the matter."

It is a fact that for several years Scotch Plains has been one of the favorite places for pulling off cock fights, these affairs usually attract crowds of from all over Union and Somerset counties. Rev. Mr. Shott had heard of these things, and he presumed that they were true

"I think there is nothing that an American citizen can do," he said, that is more belittling to his country and to himself than to indulge in this sort of a pastime, sport or whatever name you may designate it by. It is a cherished institution of the Spaniards, and it seems to me that in the light of recent events even the low class that attend the cock fights would feel like absolving themselves of this practice as citizens of a country that has done wonders in relieving other people of the infamy and injustices of the Spaniards."

Speaking of the causes that led up to the attempted suicide of Miss Messler, Rev. Mr. Shott said that he had visited the young girl at the hospital and that she had told him things which were of such a character that

THE PROPER CARE OF FOOD.

Never Put It Away or Leave It Very Long Wrapped in Brown Paper.

It is a very common practice to put away food that comes from the shop in the brown paper in which the dealer wraps it. While this may be convenient, it certainly is open to serious objection on the score of health and cleanliness. Most of the cheap papers are made from material hardly up to the standard of the housekeeper's idea of neatness; and although a certain degree of heat is employed in their preparation it is by no means sufficient to destroy all the disease germs with which the raw material may be filled.

When taking into consideration that waste paper of all sorts, and those for all purposes are gathered up and worked over into new paper to wrap our food in, it behooves the housewife who cares for the health of her family to see to it that articles of food remain in contact with it after wrapping the very shortest possible time.

It is not unusual to see meat, butter, cheese and other extremely susceptible articles put away in the very cheapest, common brown paper.

Immediately upon the receipt of soft groceries or fruits they should be put into earthen dishes, and under no circumstances should they be allowed to remain in the papers in which they are delivered.

It is useless to expect that a better class of paper will be employed, and so we may as well make up our minds to guard against trouble by shifting all articles of food to some dish that is absolutely free from contaminating elements.

New Tools to Eat With.

With the fruit course at dinner is now served a gold-looking knife that has a silver handle and the prongs of steel blades. This is accompanied by a rather deadly weapon that appears to be a silver corkscrew mounted on a straight silver shaft handle. In reality these new arrivals are designed for better mastery of oranges, apples and pears. The corkscrew is driven, by a deft rotary motion, into the fruit, which is thus firmly held during the removal of the skin and the paring off of slices. Good form dictates the leaving of the screw in the fruit when all that is desired is eaten from the heart of the core.

Another addition to the list of handling of food in a pretty pair of scissors with saw-like points, in place of a knife-like edge, along the blades. Between the teeth thus formed the ends of asparagus are caught and held fast, and the tender head can then be neatly elevated and nipped off by the teeth. These same little scissors are employed in eating artichokes.

Hints for Housewives.

To take cream oil without fasting it squeeze the juice of a lemon into a wineglass, and pour the oil into the center. Drink the contents of the glass before the oil has time to spread.

If a baby has a cold in the chest rub well with camphorated oil, cover with soft flannel cloths soaked in olive oil, and protect the clothing with another layer of flannel.

To save time and strength in the weekly ironing, remember that dish towels and bathing towels can be ironed quite well enough and in half the time if folded together once.

If a small splinter of wood is knocked off a bureau or chair, give it up again with a little liquid glue, and, if the edges show white, color them with paint to match the rest of the wood. When this is dry, varnish, and the break will hardly be perceptible.

Renovating Velvet.

A simple method of cleaning velvet, velveteen and plush is as follows: With the assistance of a stiff whisk broom, a pan of boiling water and an obliging friend, who will brush up the nap as you hold the goods taut over the steam of the vessel in the water, these materials will look like new. This process removes wrinkles, brightens the color and makes the crushed nap stay up when brushed against the grain, and will answer for black or colored pile fabrics. If the velvet has a grease spot on it remove it with French chalk before steaming. A sticky spot may be lightly touched with clean cold water before the steaming process.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A Fine Plum Pudding.

"If you like a good cold-weather pudding," said the Englishwoman, and like a little variation from the ordinary plum puddings, here is one that I can recommend. Take 2½ cups of cracker dust, 1 cup of currants, 1 cup raisins, 1 cup suet, 1 cup molasses, with one level teaspoonful of saleratus dissolved in it; lemon peel and spices to taste, 3 eggs, and boil 2½ hours in a floured pudding bag."

Fruits That Harm the Teeth.

After eating very acidulous fruit, like grapes and oranges, teeth should always be washed clean. Grapes especially leave upon the teeth a deposit of tartar which is very injurious. Apples, the cheapest and commonest of native fruits, are not especially harmful to the teeth and are excellent for digestion.

About the Baby.

Don't toss and play with a young baby, even if it enjoys it. Don't speak loudly to it or yell coochee! coochee! at the top of your lungs. Let the child have long intervals of perfect quiet. Every demand made upon the child's attention helps to exhaust its feeble strength and make it peevish.

Fear That Kills.

The fear of appendicitis has by this time killed more people than the disease ever did by causing them to give up eating fruit. Appendicitis is quite as apt to be caused by bread-crumbs as by grape seeds, and neither will cause it unless the person is predisposed to it.

Making Paper Flowers

Of all tissue paper flowers chrysanthemums are the most effective for decoration, and when natural flowers are scarce these take their places most acceptably. Large masses of them put in a handsome vase make a beautiful spot of color. There are so many colors and shades of color among them, as well as sizes.

They are very easy to make from directions, but to achieve really artistic success they should be copied after natural models, since there are so many varieties of this royal flower.

There are ragged ones, large and sprawling, small ones scarcely larger than a nickel. Some are outcurved and some incurved, so that one need not fail of finding variety.

The colors range from white to dark bronze brown, with all shades of yellow, pink and purplish. The calyx is almost exactly like that of the daisy.

The buds are made by having a flattened bunch of wax, slightly rounded at the top. Over this is pasted around and around a strip of green paper of which one is slashed, so as to give it that overlapped appearance. The center is pinched together. The leaves can be purchased, all cut and pressed into shape, by the dozen, in different sizes. These are of a thick waxed variety of paper and the best, though the artist may cut hers herself, by following the model herewith, and being careful to crease them where marked.

To make chrysanthemums, cut four sets of places, for petals of four sizes, with six each for the large in or out curved varieties, and four each for the more open and straggly kinds. The model will be found on diagram 1, Fig. 1. They may be six inches in diameter, or two, or even less, according to the kind.

The incurved ones are to be creased and each petal slightly curled at the same time, and the smallest sizes slipped over the stem and up to the calyx and turned over that, as is done in making roses. The pressure must not be great enough, however, to crush out the creases.

When all the petals are on, a few drops of mucilage may be dropped along in among them to hold them strongly, and then a little green wax is brought up against the outside row of petals, and this covered with slashed green paper makes it look like the natural flower. The petals are opened with the hatpinning process.

The stems to chrysanthemums are quite stiff and rather rigid. Where they do branch the junction is rather rough. The leaves almost always curl backward. Large and small ones grow close together. It is the very irregularity of leaves, flowers and branches that makes these so valuable as decorative plants.

When the bunch is ready to be mounted, the leaves are fastened to the stems by gluing the ends around them. On the diagram the mark on the leaves shows where they are to be creased. A circle like No. 3 may finish the flower as its base and also make a bud instead of the long stem.

All flowers can be copied by following nature both in cutting the petals and in making them up.

Large shades are made of crape paper and decorated with rich ribbon tied around the upper part, and often a spray of some kind loosely fastened to one side. Small candle shades for dinner table decoration are also made of tissue paper and decorated as one's taste may dictate.

The crape paper may be purchased ready crimped; but, as it is not always at hand, it is well to know how to make it. For a banquet lamp made over a wire frame it requires six yards of soft tissue paper 18 inches wide. Paste these together to make one piece 6 yards long and 18 inches wide. Lap the edges flat and paste them and leave them to dry. When it is perfectly dry, gather it into the hands little by little until you grasp the whole six yards. Then begin and gently rub it downward, slightly twisting it at the same time until it is like a cloth and reduced to its smallest possible diameter.

Then bold it up to the frame and work it around the top, spreading the bottom a little, but keeping the top close. Let the paper extend about two and a half inches above the top of the shade frame, or globe, if it is applied to a globe. When it fits around, hold it with both hands while some one draws a wire around it twice and fastens it.

The ribbon is now to be tied around it outside the wire, and the bow should be rich and ample and also graceful. When the tow is tied, take hold of the overhanging part of the paper and pull it gently to open it out to form a full ruffle, which, however, is to stand up. Three inches of the crape paper at the lower edge is also to be pulled smooth in the same way, which leaves it in a beautiful fluted frill.

Shades to fit down over globes may be formed of net drawn over wires twisted and fastened to fit the shape. Some are made of cardboard sewed together. The net is preferable. The paper is craped and tacked top and bottom with needle and thread. A wreath at the top and a fringe at the bottom are to be made of daisies, violets or some other flower with a flexible stem, or a moss border can be made of finely slashed and crimped paper with a pretty sprig of flowers at one side.

Butterfly lamp screens are made of tissue paper craped over cardboard. Their bodies are made of cotton. Their feelers of fine wire wound with paper and tipped.

Fans may be covered with crape paper, bordered with violets or some other flower or bordered with a moss and with a rose spray. A bow of ribbon on the handle makes a finish.

There really is no limit to the daintiness and pretty things one can make of these papers. As soon as you have learned to make one thing the rest seem to come easy, and one needs no teacher, but patience and a close study of nature.

OLIVE HARPER.

FEMININE NOTES.

Miss Marion Jean Craig, a bright young Milwaukee woman, is engaged in teaching Boston clubwomen the fine art of impromptu speaking.

From the pen of a Chicago woman, Mrs. Adeline Cobnfeldt Lust, comes what promises to be one of the most popular novels of the year. It is entitled "A Tent of Grace."

Miss Helen M. Cole of Boston gives interpretative Bible readings before assemblies of clubwomen. Her calling, in which she has spent several years of preparation, she regards as sacred as the ministry.

Lady Marcus Beresford conducts a veritable paradise for cats, housing and feeding her pets in really regal style. She is said to have the finest collection of feline specimens in England, some of the bluest blooded of them costing $250 each.

Miss R. Louise Hopkins of New York is the promoter of a new idea in servant girls' clubs, her aim being to foster amicable relations between the employer and the employed and furnish some practical points for the improvement of both.

With the hope of establishing a precedent and helping to liberate womankind from bondage to their servants, Mrs. W. T. Moore, president of the Christian Female college at Columbia, Mo., has begun a suit for $500 damages against her negro cook for leaving her service.

The Boston board of education has inaugurated a new departure in the introduction of bathing appliances at the primary schools, matrons being appointed to conduct the bathing in the girls' departments.

Mrs. M. T. Shelford, wife of the pastor of the George Road Baptist church, near New Brunswick, N. J., recently surprised her husband's congregation by appearing in the pulpit and delivering a sermon in his stead, the husband being unexpectedly called away.

The English quarter sessions court at Surrey has put its ban on bloomers. Lady Florence Wallace Harburton, a viscountess who wears the so called "rational costume" when she would be wheeling go, recently rode up to the hostelry of Martha Jane Sprague for rest and refreshment and was refused admittance to the ladies' sitting room, being told that she must go to the public coffee room, where men were smoking. Her indignity is an officer of the National Dress league and brought an action against the landlady to test the rights of wheeling women to wear bloomers. The learned judge decided that Mrs. Sprague had a right to exclude Lady Florence from the ladies' sitting room.

THE SINGER'S RUSE

It was one of those cold rainy days. Everybody knows what that means on shipboard: the deserted decks flooded with water and the saloon crowded with listless and unhappy passengers. Each time I thrust my nose outside, a fierce gust of rain and fog tore the door from my grasp. Invoking such injured and wrathful glances from my fellow voyagers, that I finally abandoned all hope of fresh air, and succumbed to the glare, heat and general stuffiness of the saloon.

Too sluggish to give more than half attention to the book I was reading, I ensconced myself comfortably in a corner, with cushions at my back and an incandescent light directly over my head, and proceeded in a desultory fashion to inspect my traveling companions. Some, like myself, were pretending to read. Some were dozing, and a few were simply sitting—waiting for something to happen. It occurred to me that the only passengers who were not distinctly bored, were a group of six or seven gathered about the piano. When I looked closer and perceived who was in that group I did not wonder. A man with a gray beard was sitting on the stool. Near him stood a beautiful young girl with a violin. She had been playing the intermezzo from Cavalleria Rusticana, rather well, and I also recognized some young men, who were returning home after a year or two's study of music in Paris and Berlin. They had been honoring one another with various exhibitions of skill; but first then were engaged in chaffing the gray beard.

"Ah, he does for us!" exclaimed the young girl, with extravagant emphasis, "I am sure you have talent, I can tell it by the noble line of your brow." Her beautiful eyes when turned on the older man, were very pleading, but behind his back she gave the youngsters a telling wink. And they were hugely flattered by this bit of by-play, and at once began vieing with each other in elaborate efforts to cajole the stranger.

Finally, to my surprise, he did sing. His gave them a queer, outlandish song, in a cracked voice, quivering and tremulous. They pretended to be in raptures. And the more they urged, the more he sang—simple hearted and obliging.

This little farce continued throughout the voyage. Not content with amusing themselves at the expense of the feeble old singer, these young humorists sought to enlarge his audience. I heard one little girl rush up to her parents and say—"Oh, we are having such fun! We tell him his songs are lovely, and then we look at each other and laugh!" This child was a mere infant, and her fond mother smiled admiringly upon her, and then glanced proudly over her little curly head at me.

Toward the close of the trip, the last day out, in fact, the lovely violinist proposed that he give a concert for the benefit of the crew. In reply to his suggestion that she join him in the programme, she said that she would not dream of matching her poor talent with his! Then saying she turned her back, and glanced significantly at the others present. Smiles of sympathy greeted her. She was very beautiful.

I smiled too. At last I began to smile, and then my smile broadened into a laugh, and I choked, and had to leave the room. I returned just in time to hear that old fool—I beg your pardon—that most amiable clown, consent to give the concert.

As he did so, a grave child in brown, who had been all alone but a silent observer like myself, left her seat and came hurriedly to his side. She looked pale and full of nervous determination. "No, don't give the concert," she said, "the people are all thinking about landing, and won't listen. It would simply be kindness thrown away."

"You don't like to hear me sing?"

"Not now," she answered, bravely meeting his look. Then she added, glancing at the others with a half smile that bespoke her less the child than I had fancied: "We are a very egotistical set, you know, and are little interested in anybody's talents but our own."

The man's eyes flashed with a sudden resolution; but the next instant he simpered fatuously, and said: "I will sing to-night. I will sing just one song, and it shall be for you! Now I must go—and shave."

They all laughed. And the girl in brown flushed painfully—he ought to have taken her kindly hint, instead of which he was rendering her ridiculous!

I smiled; at least, I commenced to smile, but it ended in a laugh.

That evening he was late in joining them; but when he did enter the salon, he strode straightway to the piano—took his seat—and commanded their attention by one, sweeping, masterful chord.

What was this? The lovely violinist forgot to solicit appreciative glances from the assembly.

A graceful, rippling prelude, and then his magnificent voice burst forth in all its fullness. They were amazed—stunned! They forgot where they were and why they had been, where they were going—in the one overwhelming consciousness of that superb voice!

Leaving the piano, he bowed low to the little lady in brown. He was shaved; they recognized ——, the famous baritone.

This time ladies not even began to smile, I laughed from the outset.

You see I had always claimed that my friend was as great an actor, as musician. This trip proved it. He had scorned the ruse too late to have his name entered on the passenger list. And he vowed he would enjoy the freedom of his vocation, and his barbarous beard, up to the day of landing in New York.

A few nights later little Miss Brown had the pleasure of hearing he opera from a box.

WOMEN'S REALM

FLAX COLORED CLOTH DRESS.

A Description of the Manner in Which This Pretty Costume Is Made.

This dress is of flax colored riding cloth. The skirt, which is extremely tight around the figure, is made with a tunic, very long behind, cut away at the sides and forming a rounded festoon in the centre in front. This tunic falls over a shaped flounce, rather full at the bottom, and forming rather pronounced godets. The flounce is very apparent in front, less visible at the sides and almost disappears behind the tunic behind, projecting only a few centimetres beneath it. The tunic is trimmed round the bottom with two bands of the cloth of which it is composed, of equal width.

The corsage is in shape like a small habit, very closely adjusted to the figure by being taken in, and without a seam down the back. The basque hangs easily in front, is rounded at the sides and in the back, and is slightly longer in the centre. The corsage fastens toward the left side with three large crystal buttons inlaid with gold in relief.

The upper part of the corsage is cut low, over a yoke of turquoise panne de soie, with spots of white silk worked upon it at regular distances. The in-trimming is of the same materials. The fichu is split up in the centre of the back. The sleeves are quite tight from end to end, and are finished off at the wrist by a funnel shaped flounce, headed by two bands of stitched cloth.

The hat designed to complete the costume is flax colored toque of tulle, matching the dress. The ground is chiffonne, and the edges are trimmed with a drapery of tulle to match. On the left side is a large rosette of turquoise velvet draped and chiffonne, with an ornament of straw in the centre.

Smelling Salts Cause Wrinkles.

The woman who wishes to retain the beauty of her face—and what woman does not?—should forego the use of the smelling bottle, so according to a well-known New York physician, who has lately been making experiments in that line, the use of smelling salts produces wrinkles.

"If you don't believe me," he says, stand in front of a mirror and inhale the pungent odor from a smelling bottle and notice the number of lines that form about the eyes, nose and mouth. Each sniff taken from the bottle causes the same screwing up of the face, and each time the unbecoming lines deepen. Remember, all this is an unpleasant experience which has called up these wrinkles. Those caused by laughing and talking are bad enough, but the wrinkles formed by the use of smelling salts give an absolutely undesirable expression.

"But if you are already in possession of wrinkles which have been produced in other ways than by the use of salts, then smelling salts are a specific for removing them and causing them to vanish. In almost every case the wrinkles formed by laughing and crying are in an exactly opposite direction to those produced by inhaling salts, and in this case smelling salts act like a charm in causing the unbecoming lines to disappear.

Daintily Sweet.

Here are some excellent suggestions about perfume which, if followed, will keep initially as sweetly fragrant as a rose, although the fragrance will be but the suggestion of fragrance—simply a fresh sweetness. As a foundation there is nothing better than orris, the pure talcum powder that is imported in large jars. With this large silk pads are filled, one being placed at the bottom of each drawer in the chiffonier. Little silk sachets are also made to fit and sewn in the sleeves of each frock, and even in the bottom of the skirt. At the shoulder of each chemise there is a little silk sachet, sewed to ribbons and daintily tied to the shoulder. These are embroidered with initials in white. For the bath little cakes of sweetness, that effervesce and dissolve when thrown into the water, imparting a delicate fragrance almost imperceptible, although lasting, should be used. A simple bath powder may be made by mixing violet with orris and keeping it in a large box, with which an immense powder puff put temptingly on top. A massage with lanoline ointment is also recommended for this hair.

THE BELLES OF CUBA

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE DAUGHTERS OF THIS ISLAND.

They Possess Many Graces, Love Music and Are Passionately Fond of Dancing—Always Accompanied by a Chaperon—The Custom at Weddings and Christenings.

No other word than Chaucer's "shimmering" can portray the peculiar sunshine in Cuba when the air appears to be full of floating gold dust. The balmy climate, the fragrance of tropical flowers, with their soporiferous perfumes, steep the senses in a dreamy languor, and all the enchantments which nature weaves in the Pearl of the Antilles render Cuba a veritable Garden of Eden.

The passage of the time is almost imperceptible, as there is no radical change of season to mark its course, for summer only differs from winter by virtue of greater heat and heavy rains, while vegetation and foliage are perennial and gladden the eye all the year round.

The daughters of Cuba possess a languid grace and soft, caressing ways particularly charming. They are very fond of music, and in that hour when the sinking sun still gilds the landscape and tempers the evening air, often leave their homes to drive about the city and listen to the bands in the plazas. In these daily airings they are always accompanied by their mothers, or some elderly female relative. Propriety demands this concession in Cuba, as in Spain, whence most of the prevailing customs are derived.

While the band fills the drowsy air with alternating languorous airs and stirring martial strains, a steady stream of carriages circles about the plaza. Few men ride on these occasions. They promenade on foot upon the walks which are laid just inside the carriage drive, always going in the opposite direction to the string of vehicles. By this plan the men secure the coveted advantage of a direct look into each carriage as it passes, and their glances can thus meet the dark eyes of their inamoritas. Occasionally a carriage will turn aside and stop, when a number of gallants are sure to seize the opportunity to pay compliments to the fair occupants. Etiquette still demands that most of these remarks be directed to mamma or the accompanying duenna. In this respect, however, there are already signs of revolt, and the greater social freedom indulged by Americans, and there is little doubt that a new social era confronts Cuba. This, no doubt, will be welcomed by the Cuban society girls, notwithstanding their long affected habits of reserve.

When the concert ends the carriages whirl away to the cafes, where they draw up at the tables of waiters hastening to serve the occupants with ices and refections. These are consumed while seated in the carriage, for Cuban women are too proud to eat unless in company with father, husband or brother. It sometimes happens that when the belle comes it is found to have been paid by some unknown admirer, who takes this rather substantial way of showing devotion.

Cuban society women are passionately fond of dancing, although the "danza" has been long discountenanced by fashion. The Spanish officers, who have for centuries taken a principal part in social affairs, have done, but in their places are the American officers, who are not slow to admire the Cuban belles. So the remainder of the winter bids fair to be merry. Already a number of sumptuous entertainments are contemplated. The presence in Havana of a large American element will give additional zest and variety to the social season. At these functions Spaniard, Cuban and American will continually meet, and there, at least the spanish war will be ignored.

Weddings usually are celebrated in church, the favorite hour being four o'clock in the morning, as more fitting for the celebration of early mass, without which function no Roman Catholic considers the ceremony complete.

Christenings serve as an excuse for social gatherings. The infant is carried to church by the godparents, who return to the parents' home after the baptism. A collation is then served, and baptismal ribbons, bearing their names and the date, and gold coins, are distributed among the guests. On the way from church the carringes are followed by a lot of urchins vociferating for some souvenir of the occasion.

justed to any skirt. It comes in sets of a half dozen pairs and is easily sewed on.

A Peculiar Case.

Deafness is a peculiar thing, and the ear seems to be a weak sister, which suffers seriously from the ills of other parts of the body. A woman who had for quite a length of time been suffering from deafness and had not known the sound of her own doorbell, went not long ago to a throat specialist for some trouble of that organ. She was treated, and, returning home, the next day was sitting sewing, when she was greatly startled by the sound of a bell, which was so unusual that her first thought was of a fire. On second thought she knew it could not be that, and upon investigating she found that it was the forgotten sound of the doorbell which she had heard. With the benefit of the throat treatment she hearing had returned, and she could hear as well as ever.

Household Talks

In the Bathroom.

The towels that should always hang in the bathroom are, first and foremost, the bath towels of the best quality and largest size. Then there should be the very fine damask towels, and also two or three towels of rather heavier damask. This face-cloth will often remove dust and dirt from the face where a sponge is practically useless. The number of sponges can only be decided upon by one's personal ideas, but there must be at least two—one large and one small. A much disputed question of the day is the soap. The fine French soaps are the pleasantest, but they do not agree with everyone's skin, and some people prefer the plain soaps. In fitting up a bathroom for a guest there must always be a fresh cake of soap in its paper wrappings. This soap can afterwards be taken, washed off and used by children or servants, but it is the height of rudeness to offer a guest any soap that has been used before.

The flesh-brushes seen in every well-appointed bathroom are of course private belongings.

Novel Use for Paper.

Crinkled Japanese paper may be used for decorative as well as useful purposes in the bedroom, dressing room or boudoir. It can be used to cover the backs of chairs, shelves, &c., hanging down over the ends, and with its slightly ruffled edges it makes a most artistic appearance, especially when selected to harmonize with the wall hangings and draperies of the room.

I saw a very pretty boudoir and dressing room clothed fitted up in greens and dull tans, which blend so well together, and the walls, ceilings, carpets, rugs and cushions were all of one shade of plain or blended patterns. Coverings of all shelves, tables, dresser top, &c., were of the same tinge of green, with the edges pulled out ever so slightly, and the effect was most pleasing.

An Artistic Room.

Books are the best possible ornamentation for all rooms. They are at once furnishing and decoration. In straight, unbroken lines around a wall, however, they are sometimes too severe to suit feminine taste. If the shelves are built with breaks as are these in the illustration the effect is extremely graceful.

Moorish Tea.

Tea a la Morocco is made by putting the requisite amount of leaves in the teapot and pouring a small amount of hot water over them and immediately pouring it off again. This frees the tea from dust or any foreign matter which by accident or design, may have been mixed with it.

After the first water has been turned off sugar is put into the teapot, one lump of sugar for each cup; the pot is then filled with boiling water and allowed to stand for a few minutes; neither milk nor cream is ever used. Fresh gathered leaves of wild thyme or verbena are often added to give flavor to the beverage.

To Wash Muslins.

To Wash Muslins and Flowered Cottons.—Wash in plain water with very little soap, then boil in rice water. Oriental washermen, having so washed muslin, would refrain from ironing them. All the requisite ironing would be done by means of a polished stone, rubbed gently over the slightly damp article. But this is too lengthy an operation, and if the muslins are ironed gently, with a piece of white muslin between them, they will not receive damage.

A Hint for Mothers

Don't let the children get into a stooping position while eating. In their fear of spilling or dropping the particles they sit with their heads pitched forward and in toppled over their shoulders, which looks badly, to say nothing of the habit of stooping that is being formed. Teach them that the proper way is to bend upward and out at the table as well as on the street, and that their hands were made to carry food to their mouths and not their heads to dive for their food.

Worth Knowing.

Try steaming fowls instead of boiling and you will find that the meat is always tender and the fine flavor of the fowl is retained.

To keep cakes fresh have large cake boxes or a stone jar always covered closely with a tight-fitting lid.

A THUG'S CONSCIENCE.

"You lads have a fine time of it nowadays with your machine-guns and a commissariat that knows canned meat from condensed milk."

It was an Indian veteran who spoke—Col. Carrill—to whom Myers and I, returning from Peschawur, were lunching in Burma, had been relating our exploits.

"Fifty years ago fighting was fighting," he went on, "but now——"

We smiled the smile of the young and up-to-date. What did he know of the vagaries of the modern savage; of the Dacoit who came in the night quietly and peaceful life and death with an ugly and unnecessarily large stab in the breast.

The colonel read our thoughts.

"Dacoits may be a stealthier foe," he said, "but for undiluted vagabondism and downright villainy give me the Thug."

"What may have been bad," I ventured.

"At the very best, and yet I found a little grain of virtue in one," said the veteran. "Shall I tell you a yarn? It will be like a page of ancient history now, but I don't think it has been told before; and really Hosein Ali was a picturesque scoundrel who deserved record—and hanging.

"It was in the autumn of '34," proceeded the colonel. "I went out from Hyderabad under Major Groves northward across the Godavery after Thugs. The authorities were getting the thieir eyes wide open at last, and a great effort was being made to exterminate the village. I have seen me off on my own account with a troop of about 30 Sepoys and a couple of non-coms. We had no success until Hosein Ali fell into our hands. He was taken quite accidentally, but just after the act, with the proof of guilt thick upon him and the spoil in his possession. He refused to admit all the stubborness of innocence.

"I know nothing of what you say, sahib, I am from home to see Krishna.'

"I looked long and fixedly at the man .He was a fine specimen of a fine race. Tall, and straight as a bamboo; corded of muscle and limb, with a handsome and well-kept beard and mustache and black eyes which glowed with indignation and a hint of defiance. He looked anything but the scoundrel he was. If I had not been so absolutely certain of his guilt, I must have doubted that one of so noble bint a bearing could be that worst of all criminals, a Thug.

"What are you doing here, then,' I asked Hosein, 'with a turban made in your own Kishna,' your occupation? How did you come by these pearls?'

"'If I answer the sahib at all,' he replied, 'it is that he may be satisfied and let me go on my journey in peace. I am on travel honestly to my sister's wedding, and the stones are a wedding gift.'

"The words came glibly off his tongue; but just as my eyes left his I saw a look of triumph—of confidence for a second to a furtive glance, which seemed to say, 'Is he fool enough to believe it?'

"'I don't believe a word of it,' said I, replying to his glance; 'you are a Thug and a murderer, and deserve hanging. Your only chance is—but—save yourself useful; tell me your companions, show me their haunts, take me to the graves of your victims, and your life may be spared.'

"'I know nothing of what you say, sahib,' he repeated doggedly.

"'Then, Sepoy,' I commanded, 'and in 10 minutes' time hang him.'

"Of course, this was pure bounce, but he knew no better, and I was in the sentence. I turned my back I heard a scuffle, and looking quickly around, was just in time to knock the Sepoy's hands from my throat. Taking the Sepoys by surprise, he had with great energy dashed them aside and sprung at me.

"In another moment the men had him down, and, though he struggled desperately, he was bound and dragged to his tent as a prisoner of the law.

"'None but the guilty would have behaved so,' I said sternly—I know no better in those days. You have sealed your doom.'

"The man took a deep breath—he was still panting from the struggle—and showed with an excess of strength and enthusiasm:

"'Jey Bhowanee!'

"It was the warcry of Thuggee—the invocation to the goddess. If anything more was needed to convict him, it was provided in the extraordinary change in his appearance. All the signs of vice and cupidity which I had looked for in vain at first were now most prominent in the angry, passion-distorted face.

* * * * *

"After a short consideration I sent him back to his prison under guard. It was plain that we had made a capture of the first importance. The circumstances under which he had been taken the demeanor and bearing of the man his strength of will and virility, marked him as more than ordinarily dangerous. Such a man could not, without doubt, be the leader, or at least a very prominent member, of any gang with which he was connected, and would possess just the sort of information we wanted. On the other hand, just these qualities in virtue of which his information would be so valuable would be his probability prevent us from acquiring it. Informers are supposed to be built of different material.

"However, I determined to try first and as a first step I had him informed that unless he consented to give us the information we wanted, he would certainly be hung in the morning. As an extra argument we built a gallows opposite the windows of his cell.

"At first this only excited his derision. Every time we came he kept up a stream of ribald and obscene jests, varied with vindictive and comprehensive curses, at which he and his guard alternatively laugh and shake their fists in righteous anger.

"The small hours of morning, however, proved too much for him. I was wakened early and told he wanted to speak.

"'I will him he can say all he wants under the rope,' was my reply. I thought a little more fear of death would make his tongue all the readier.

"When the hour came the man was led out. Nothing remained of the scorn and defiance of the previous day; a night of passion and fear had broken him down.

"As he caught sight of me he called out: 'I will tell all, Sahib Bahadur.' One of the Sepoys previously instructed, began to busy himself with the rope.

"'All,' I said; 'nothing kept back?'

"'Nothing,' he answered eagerly. 'All I have done and my companions.'

"'And their names, all of them?'

"'Yes.'

"'And help us to take them by all means and strategies in your power?'

"He hesitated at this; but a glance at the gallows which held the rope, and who had now made a pretty noose in it, was enough.

"'I will, sahib,' he muttered. 'My life will be dust.'

"'On condition that you carry out your promise to the letter, I will do my best to save it.'

"A table was brought, my native clerk prepared his writing materials, and there, within a yard of the gallows, the man told a tale of murder and robbery appalling in its extent, sickening in its cold-bloodedness and deliberation . To this he added a list of some 100 graves and victims, and with a remarkable effort of memory, described the positions of the rude graves of over 100 victims.

"On the one day we set out to investigate, and the following evening reached one of the indicated spots. There we found buried proof of the reality of one part of the Thug's confession, and in that a guarantee for the truth of the rest.

"A couple of weeks of activity passed. Thanks to Hosein, who had been shaved and otherwise disguised, we had only ourselves ample proof of the crimes committed, but succeeded in securing many of the culprits, who were taken to the nearest court and tried. By judicious sorting of cases against caste, we managed to cause recriminations and retaliations among the prisoners, which led to their confessing and betraying. We avoided the necessity of producing Hosein Ali as a witness—a course which would have been fatal to his safety—and he became, so far the informer had amply fulfilled his contract. He had, indeed, displayed a zeal which made me at times very doubtful of his sincerity. No government officer could have been more anxious to run the culprits to earth, no one more fruitful in devices to entrap. He found out at last that his thoroughness was charateristic of the man in all things.

"'Sahib,' he said to me, 'I thought he might count on getting off cheap his services had been so valuable and so willingly given. I added a hope that the future might be different life when the business was over.

"'What business, sahib?' he asked.

"'When Thuggee is suppressed,' I replied.

"'Thuggee!' He made a wide gesture with his arms, as though to deprecate all blame, looked around with a smile, that had a grain of pride in it: 'We shall be old men, sahib.'

"I was but 23 then, and incredulous; but he was right. Five years when I came home, and I left Thugs behind me.

"Well, the further the work of suppression advanced, the more difficult it became. The Thugs had enjoyed immunity so long that many of the leading men had grown rich. Arrests were taken with comparative ease; but as the news of their capture spread, and the fate which met them became known, they showed more and more wary and difficult of approach.

"We had, of course, spies and scouts on all directions. Some of the leading men of the villages were even too eager to give us information, and often the accounts were so conflicting that I was puzzled to know which statement was invaluable. He smelt out the true and reliable, and knew exactly what Thugs, for a time or that dilicty he would do or attempt.

"About a month after Hosein's capture we got on the heels of a band which, from the number of graves, was 40 members. Instead of following them up, we crossed the river along the banks of which they were marching, and, hurrying on, got in advance of them. We knew that they would have to cross later and hoped to ambush them. The river at this point of the river was covered with a thick and broad belt of jungle, beyond which was a chain of hills whose lower slopes were well wooded. In the shade of these trees we rested for the noon. In the early afternoon one of our scouts came in with news. A thin pale in front of us he had seen a party of natives, whose manner seemed to him suspicious, entering a grove of trees. The position of this was a detachment of the band we were after at once occurred to me. We were on our feet at once and pushing forward with all possible despatch, almost succeeded in surrounding the grove without detection. At the last moment we were seen, but, thanks to the heat, to our surprise, met no resistance. Instead, indeed, of a band of determined and defiant robbers, we broke in on a party of terrified and travelling merchants in the deepest distress. The night was full of low lamentations. Pushing my way into the group I saw the cause of the trouble. A body lay stretched out in the unmistakable attitude of death, covered reverently with a linen cloak. Catching sight of me one of the mourners spoke:

"'Shookr Khoda! Now shall the wicked suffer.'

"'What wrong?' I inquired.

"'Thugs!' was the reply. 'Our brother left us this morning in a fit of anger and, pushing his journey alone. Here we overtake him at noon, dead, and the villains are gone.'

"I plied the men with questions as to the numbers of the by the robbers. 'Eastward,' they said. They had not seen them but from various signs, were confident. This was enough to me. I had no idea as to their route, and I was considering how to rearrange our plans when I heard Hosein Ali's voice whispering at my elbow. 'My lord puts his ear around or show surprise. This body is still warm. The man is but just dead, and they are Thugs.' he added. 'I was too bewildered at first to speak, but, pulling myself together, partly grasped the situation.

"Turning to the spokesman of the party, I did my best to impress him with my words completely taken in; and, assuring him that we should most certainly pursue the culprits, left him ostensibly to make preparations for that end.

"'Now, what is this?' I asked Hosein.

"'They are Thugs,' he repeated, 'an advanced guard who came across this traveler unexpectedly. They had just strangled him as we rushed in. This 's an accident.'

"'What is?'

"'This pretense of finding the man dead and mourning.'

"Old as it was, I was all but taken in, and but for Hosein Ali, villains have got away and sent me on a wild-goose chase.

"In view of this, it was somewhat humbly I asked Hosein what was best to be done.

"'Let them all be seized and bound without delay,' he said with his usual decision; the rest will come across after dark, and we will take them also.'

"It was no easy matter to carry out this plan. The Thugs were prone to suspicion, and once alarmed would fight desperately. However, by setting part of them to furnish my clerk with an account of the affair—an account which was afterward highly esteemed as a specimen of impromptu lying—and giving the others with questions as to the direction taken by the alleged assassins, we managed to lull suspicion and divide the party into groups. At a given signal, we were then and tied them securely, to their intense amazement and disgust. We did not move from the grove till daylight began to die out. Hosein had the whole detachment busy for some hours cutting a number of short bamboo sticks and burning them at their ends, though short lengths of cord were run. He had a way of holding his tongue till questioned, and I, accustomed to his ways, left him then and tied them securely, to their intense amazement and disgust. Home Trade Question.

There must be something wrong when business men of a town feel that they keep trade at home only by discouraging better outside communication. That is the Plainfield recipe for retaining local trade.—Newark News.

There is nothing wrong with Plainfield at all. The merchants of this city are established here to do business, and to make as much money as is possible out of the trade that is at hand. Plainfield trade naturally belongs to Plainfield, the same as Newark trade belongs to Newark. Does the News or anyone else believe that the Newark Board of Trade would sit idly by if the big department stores of New York were making a special effort to divert the trade of their city into the metropolitan stores? Certainly not.

If the Central Railroad of New Jersey ran trains direct from Plainfield to Newark a dozen times a day the Plainfield merchants would continue to live and do business. Perhaps some of their customers would go to Newark now and then, and thus cause a slight decrease in the revenues of the local stores. But so far as affecting them materially it would not make a great deal of difference, because Plainfield stores are carrying quantity and quality of stock that can easily compete with Newark.

No matter how small the dribble of trade is that is threatened to be diverted from the local stores, the merchants of Plainfield would be lax and unwise not to retain it here if such a thing is possible. The movement to counteract the efforts of the Newark Board of Trade to secure more Plainfield trade is in direct line with enterprise and energy that contributes to make Plainfield one of the best trading centres in Northern New Jersey, and puts her merchants in a superior position in catering to the trade of neighboring towns.

However, the question of Plainfield trade being diverted to Newark is not the sole issue that is interesting Plainfield merchants now; there are other considerations more important that are agitating the movement for an organization to be known as the "Home Trade and Improvement Association."

The Fall Election.

Sheriffs will be elected in seventeen counties next fall. Eleven of the Sheriffs to be elected to succeed Republicans, and six will succeed Democrats. The counties to elect in place of Republicans are Atlantic, Burlington, Camden, Cumberland, Essex, Gloucester, Mercer, Morris, Ocean, Salem and Union. The counties to elect in place of Democrats are Hudson, Hunterdon, Middlesex, Monmouth, Sussex and Warren.

It is urged that with the ordinary care on the part of the Republican managers in the respective counties, all the Republican Sheriffs will be succeeded by men of that same faith. It is also quite possible for the Republicans to win in Middlesex County. Congressman Howell carried the county by over 900 last fall. Eleven of the Republican standard-bearers have been very successful in that county during the past few years. The other counties having Democratic Sheriffs now, are pretty certain to return Democrats.

Besides this general election of Sheriffs to create a great interest in the contest, there will be State Senators elected in seven counties, who will have a vote on the election of a United States Senator to succeed Senator Sewell. These counties are Camden, Essex, Gloucester, Monmouth, Salem, Somerset and Warren. Of these seven six will be held a Republican and a Sheriff, viz: Camden, Essex, Gloucester, Monmouth, Salem and Warren. Six of the seven Senatorial counties are now represented by Republicans, and one—Warren—by a Democrat.

The Newark newspapers seem to be thoroughly aroused over the disposition that the Plainfield merchants have shown in the endeavor to retain home trade. Be calm, dear brethren of Newark. Plainfield may be one-fifteenth as large as Newark, but when we get through with this matter of home trade we will show you that all things do not go according to the size of the town.

Whatever else may be the result of the agitation of the Newark Board of Trade for more Plainfield custom for the merchants of that city, and the counteracting influences that Plainfield merchants are resorting to, it is certain that Plainfield, as a city, is receiving a lot of free advertising that is not doing it any harm.

GIVE THE CHILDREN A DRINK

called Grain-O. It is a delicious, appetizing, nourishing food drink to take the place of coffee. Sold by all grocers and liked by all who have used it because when properly prepared it tastes like the finest coffee but is free from all its injurious properties. Grain-O aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. It is not a stimulant but a health builder, and children, as well as adults, can drink it with great benefit. Costs about ¼ as much as coffee 15 and 25c.

Voorhees is Reed's Friend.

If Senator Reed keeps all the press comments concerning his contest for the leadership of Somerset county with Chancery Clerk Thompson, he will be obliged to add several more books to his library of personal reminiscences. The following from The New York World's Jersey page is the latest summing up of the situation in Somerset county:

The attempt of Clerk in Chancery Thompson to get Gov. Voorhees to take a hand against Senator Reed's candidate in the factional fight of the Somerset Republicans over the Somerville postmastership is looked upon by close observers as not helping Mr. Thompson's own chances to reappointment by the Governor in 1901. The Governor's friendliness for Senator Reed is quite as well known as the fact that Thompson himself was against Voorhees' nomination for Governor as long as he had as opposing aspirant.

It is probably reasoned out by Mr. Thompson that whether Reed is renominated or not the next Senator from Somerset county will be a Democrat.

Bad Loan Associations.

The presentment made by the Grand Jury against certain building and loan associations doing business in this State under laws of adjoining commonwealths, which, if not fraudulent, is not desirable, is in line with what many, who have had sorry experiences with this class of institutions, believe should have happened long ago.

There is no town in New Jersey, probably, where these foreign loan associations have worked more extensively than in Plainfield, and the result to the local subscribers has often times been disastrous. There are several sound and successful loan and building associations in this city, officered and controlled by local people, that ought to afford every investor ample chances to put his money where it will be safe and make a profit for him, without entering the associations which the Grand Jury has had occasion to so severely censure.

Doubtless the action of the Grand Jury in the premises will result in a law being introduced into the Legislature and passed at the next session, as recommended by them, aiming to stop such business in New Jersey. Such legislation is needed.

A Democratic Chance.

In reviewing the State political news, the Newark News says that: "If the Republicans continue their warring in Somerset county there is great danger of their losing it. Clerk in Chancery Lewis A. Thompson, who for many years has been regarded as the Republican leader in the county, and Senator Charles A. Reed, who aspires to the leadership, are just now in a very perplexing entanglement. They are fighting each other tooth and nail over the Postmastership at Somerville, and the outcome of the contest will be watched with much interest. Meanwhile the Democrats in Somerset county are getting together and carefully going over the ground, with the idea of putting forward a strong candidate.

"Among those spoken of on the Democratic possibilities are former Speaker James J. Bergen and Nelson Y. Dungan, who recently retired as Prosecutor of the county. Senator Reed is very anxious to get the Republican nomination, and there has been sometalk of the possibility of Clerk Thompson going after the nomination in order to defeat Senator Reed. * * * Should Monmouth, Salem and Somerset counties join the Democratic column in the Senate, the Democrats would control that body by one majority.

The selection of Assessor Elston M. French as chairman of the Somerset County Board of Assessors is a recognition and honor that the young North Plainfielder may well feel proud of. Mr. French is the youngest assessor in the county and that he should be selected to preside over his colleagues, many of whom were members of the Board while he was yet in knickerbockers, is a recognition of his capabilities in that line of official work that is not only a credit to himself but as well to the municipality which he represents.

Senator Joseph Cross seems to have a clear road so far to succeed himself. While there are undoubtedly plenty for the offices of Sheriff and County Clerk on the Republican side no one as yet has popped up to dispute Senator Cross' right to a renomination. He has made, it is conceded, a good Senator, and as he only served one year to fill a vacancy his friends say he is entitled by party usage to fill a full term of three years.

Ready to Receive Taxes.

Collector James A. Martin is now prepared to receive all taxes due in 1897, and he takes this opportunity to inform those affected that they are now due. In a short time the list will be advertised in the local papers.

Rev. Mr. Francis, pastor of the Westfield Baptist church, has been visiting Plainfield friends for a short time.

CITY NEEDS TALKED OF.

glass of soda water Sunday, and declared that such conditions did not contribute in any way to make Plainfield better. On the contrary it made too many hypocrites. The flat had gone forth that we are narrow-minded, and this hurt the town severely. It was easy to be orderly without being puritanical, he said. Mr. Martine said that he did not believe in a wide-open town, but he did believe in a more liberal interpretation of the laws than prevails in Plainfield now.

Between addresses Mayor Smalley referred to the fact that when he was running for office in the borough, he stated that if he was elected he would see to it that the tax rate would be reduced in that municipality. He said that some people doubted it, but he was in a position to say last night that such a result would be found this year. Mayor Smalley then introduced the far-famed and irrepressible Silas Dewey Drake, who was greeted with applause.

After telling the audience several funny stories about his own experiences, all with a good moral application to them in conformity to the purposes of the meeting, Mr. Drake said that all that Plainfield needed was advertising. Not advertising in a haphazard way, but publicity that keeps everlastingly at it. He realized that advertising cost money, and that it was a difficult job sometimes to get funds for such a purpose. Then it was that Mr. Drake made a novel proposition. It was that the Common Council be induced to appropriate $1,000 a year to be used to exploit in the public press of the country, as well as by circulars and other medium of circulation, the advantages that Plainfield possesses as a place for residence or business. Such a sum could be raised with a slight tax, and it would be found to do inestimable benefit to the city by attracting new residents here who would add to the volume of business in all directions and in indirect ways more than return the original expenditure.

Following Mr. Drake David Eastman made a few remarks about real estate matters, the principal point of which was that everyone should speak favorably of the city whenever opportunity afforded.

After this it was decided to form an organization to carry on a work of improvement and advancement in Plainfield, and to that end a committee was authorized to be appointed by Mayor Smalley to take the initiative steps in the matter. It will consist of five members, who will be named later.

DEPRAVITY AT 'PLAINS.

he felt that he could not even intimate what they were until he had verified them. "Her act was undoubtedly the result of a long series of incidents that have been permitted to happen.

"I do not think that any particular action recently would have caused her to do it if she had not experienced things heretofore that she should not have experienced, and probably would not have if the tone of morality among the people of Scotch Plains had been higher. I don't mean by that," said the minister, "that the majority of people of Scotch Plains are bad; on the contrary I think that individually they are quite up to the average, and perhaps a little better than those of many other towns similarly situated, but by sitting idly by and winking at the practices, or by feeling that it is none of their business what others do as long as they try to do right, this impure social system has been creeping into the very vitals of the community until it has resulted in a scandal and almost a tragedy that may, after all, be the cause of reform of a stringent character."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

DYNAMITE FOR TROLLEY

STARTLING THINGS BURIED ON VAN NESS' PROPERTY.

The "Count" Says That He Does Not Want the Tracks Laid on His Land —Company Anticipates Little Trouble.

The Plainfield Street Railway Company is still anticipating trouble with "Count" J. K. VanNess, of East Front street, in building their extension to Scotch Plains. After the road leaves East Second street it goes on to private property, at which it runs till Fair wood township is reached. A portion of the surveyed route is on property owned by VanNess.

Recently VanNess has declared that he will not permit the company to lay their tracks across his fields. The company has announced its determination to go ahead with their work as they have planned, and if they do this, and VanNess sticks to his word about not letting them cross, there is likely to be trouble. The workmen employed by Contractor Serrell have been regaled, it is said, with many startling stories by VanNess since he has used his stand against the company. The most exciting one is that he has planted large sticks of dynamite at several points along the surveyed route of the trolley on his property, to which electric wires are attached. He says that if the company attempts to break ground on his property he will touch off the dynamite and blow the workmen sky-high.

Last Friday the contractor cut down a couple of trees on VanNess' property to bring his opposition to a head, but as yet VanNess has done nothing more than talk about what he is going to do.

ASK COUNTY PRIVILEGES.

TROLLEY COMPANY MAKE REQUESTS OF BOARD OF FREEHOLDERS.

Scotch Plains and Fanwood People Want Short Section of Mountain Avenue Macadamized to Connect Two Counties.

Elizabeth, May 20—Colonel Hine and Mr. Geddis, representing the Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railway Company, were in attendance at the meeting of the Board of Freeholders last week seeking the right to run their tracks for a trolley road between Rahway and Westfield over portions of the county roads, and to cross a county bridge in Cranford.

The matter was presented at the previous Board meeting by resolution of Freeholder Scudder, but County Attorney Pottington decided that the company must make a formal application for the franchise, which must be advertised and a date fixed for a public hearing.

Colonel Hine gave the application to Freeholder King, and it was regularly presented, followed by a resolution which fixed June 9 as the date for the public hearing.

Former Sheriff Kyte and other property owners on Mountain avenue, a highway from Scotch Plains to Berkley Heights, petitioned to have the road adopted and improved as a county road, thus connecting the Union and Somerset county improved roads systems.

Freeholder Robison said that the signers on the petition represented every foot of land fronting on the road.

The petition was referred to the Board as a whole to meet Wednesday, May 24, at 3:40 p. m., at the Fanwood station, and to go over the road in carriages.

Director Hubbard announced the standing committees. Two changes only were made, and these were to provide for Freeholder Cady, the new member from the city of Summit. Mr. Cady was made chairman of the committee on miscellaneous accounts, and placed on the committee on buildings and grounds, of which Freeholder Farrell, of Rahway, is chairman.

Decoration Day Excursion.

May 30th, Memorial Day, the Central Railroad Company will run an excursion to Mauch Chunk, Glen Onoko and the Switchback Railroad. A special excursion train, with lunch car attached, will leave this city at 9:30 a. m., and the fare for the round trip will be $1.50, children $1.13. These outings have always proved to be thoroughly enjoyable and no doubt a great many from this city will accept the opportunity to take a day off in the mountains.

SENATOR KEAN TALKS OF TRUSTS IN JERSEY.

Speaks of Benefits Derived From the State Laws.

EASY ON THE INDIVIDUALS.

FIGHT AGAINST TRUSTS NOT FEARED BY REPUBLICANS.

Declares That New Jersey People Do Not Share in the Criticisms Made Against the Practices Allowed in Their State—He Thinks the Profits Derived Pleases the People of Jersey.

United States Senator John Kean, of New Jersey, has expressed his views respecting the effect that a war upon trusts will have in the State he represents. He does not in the least believe, so he says, that it will result in making the State again Democratic.

The Senator says that there has been some effort "to cite New Jersey as a frightful example because of the laws which invite corporations to organize within our State, but the New Jersey people do not sympathize with this criticism. We compel the payment of a fee, based on the amount of capital specified in the certificate of incorporation, whether the stock has been issued or not, and the result is that our revenues have increased this year at least $400,000 or $500,000.

"The last Legislature made generous appropriations for the blind asylum, the Reformatory at Rahway, the equipment of the National Guard and the additional payment to the soldiers who served in the war with Spain My information is that all of these extraordinary expenses of the State will be met by the fees from corporations, organized under our laws this year.

"The annual revenue from the tax on the capital of all corporations created under our laws now amounts to between $800,000 and $900,000 a year. You can readily see that the people who benefit from this influx of wealth are not apt to be antagonistic to the corporations which contribute it.

"Corporations select New Jersey," the Senator added, "not because our laws are not legitimate, but simply because we do not require returns from private corporations. Public concerns, such as banks, insurance companies, etc., must file their statements, but private corporations are exempt. I understand that Delaware, attracted by the increase in our State revenues, has enacted similar laws with very much smaller fees, in order to divert corporations away from New Jersey."

PLEASANT SOCIAL TIME.

Termination of a Series of Festivities in Honor of a Visitor.

The termination of a series of festivities was enjoyed Monday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Martin, Park place, when a number of friends and relatives gathered in honor of Mrs. E. S. Miles and her daughter, Miss Nettie Miles, of Hyde Park, N. Y., who have been guests of their relatives in this city for two weeks. Mrs. Miles is a sister of Joseph Martin, Horace J Martin, Mrs. Harry Moore and Mrs. Chas. Steiner, of the borough, and during her stay here each one has taken turns in entertaining her, and on each occasion there were about the same persons present. As Mrs. Miles returned home yesterday the affair of Monday evening was arranged.

During the evening there was good music by a quartette consisting of Robert M. Clark, Edward Clark, Bert Moore and Joseph Martin, who sang a number of the latest songs, and some of the old-time familiar ones. There was also phonographic music to entertain the guests, and some of those present enjoyed playing games. At the conclusion of the entertainment refreshments were served in abundance. As the guests departed the quartette sang "Good Night Ladies," "How Can I Bear to Leave Thee," and several other popular songs.

TRAIN'S VAIN RACE TO SAVE A YOUNG LIFE.

Miss Edith Taylor Died on Her Way Home.

A FEW MINUTES TOO LATE.

SHE HAD BEEN IN COLORADO FOR PAST TWO YEARS.

Returning to the East in a Special Car When Death Overtook Her at Omaha, Neb.—Doctors Were on Hand, But Train Arrived Too Late—Family Resided on Rockview Terrace.

Omaha, Neb., May 22.—Just as the handsome private car Atlantic, on the Rock Island Railroad, drew into the Central station yesterday afternoon, Miss Edith Taylor, a member of a well-known family of Plainfield, N. J., died from pulmonary complications. The young woman was accompanied by her mother, Mrs. M. S. Taylor, and her brother, Frederick.

The private car of the company was attached to the Eastern Express at Colorado Springs Saturday. Miss Taylor was ill, and two professional nurses were engaged for the trip. When the lower altitude was reached the young woman exhibited signs of exhaustion, and as the train approached Omaha a supreme effort was made to save her life.

Physicians were consulted by wire and a specialist hurried to the railroad station with a machine prepared to administer oxygen to the dying girl the moment the train arrived.

Two persons accompanied the specialist, and the machine was prepared for work on the platform about where the special car would stop.

As the train halted the specialist leaped aboard ready for work, but was met by the weeping parent of the young woman, who had died but two minutes before. The oxygen might have preserved her life, and the engine driver made an especially fast run for forty miles with the hope of reaching Omaha in time.

The brother of the dead girl offered a large sum of money as a premium to the engine driver if he could rush the train ahead of time, but after all efforts the young woman died when help was near at hand.

The special car was sidetracked here and the body prepared for shipment to the east. The family is well known in the east. The father, a merchant of long standing, died several months ago. He had resided for some time at Plainfield, N. J.

The family had been traveling west for several months.

Miss Taylor, whose sad death is recorded in the above despatch from Omaha, was well-known in Plainfield. For several years the family lived on Rockview terrace, and were active in social and church circles. For the past two years Miss Taylor and her mother have been in Colorado in the hopes of benefiting the former's health. Recently they decided to come east as Miss Taylor was not improving and she desired her last days near her old home. It was while making the trip that death occurred as stated above.

Last Saturday S. St. John McCutchen, of Rockview avenue, received a telegram from Mrs. Taylor requesting him to rent a cottage for them at Belmar for the summer. Saturday he went to Belmar and made arrangements for the cottage. Sunday Mr. McCutchen received a telegram conveying the news of Miss Taylor's death. The remains will be brought to this city for interment.

Writ of Attachment Issued.

T. J. Carey has had an attachment issued by Justice Nash on the goods of Mrs. Bogert, who was about to move them out of the state without paying an alleged storage bill. Carey has been storing the goods for sometime, and when they were removed last week and put on the car Monday morning without Mrs. Bogert satisfying the bill, which amounted to $9, Carey swore out the writ.

JEW CHRISTIANS HEARD.

Interesting Address Made by G. Herr Cohen Sunday Night.

Last Sunday at Trinity Reformed church a large and thoroughly interested audience had the pleasure of listening to an address by G. Herr Cohen, a Jewish Christian, of London, who is now traveling in this country enlisting the sympathies of the Gentiles in behalf of his people. He was accompanied by B. A. M. Schapiro, superintendent of the Christian Mission to the Jews, 129 Boerum street, Brooklyn. The object of the service was to secure funds to carry on the work in Brooklyn among the Jews. Through the earnest talk of Mr. Cohen a great many people present were induced to contribute to the cause.

Mr. Cohen's remarks were chiefly devoted to the Jew as he is at his home in Jerusalem, and in several other countries. He spoke about the manners, customs, etc., of the Jew, and of how he is persecuted throughout the world. Mr. Cohen exhibited several articles of dress worn by the Jews and explained their use. Altogether the service was an interesting and helpful one to all present. Any person desiring to contribute to this work can send their money to John W. James, treasurer, 123 Maiden Lane, New York.

Many persons attending the meetings at the Y. M. C. A. yesterday afternoon and Trinity Reformed church last evening, were impressed with the fact that Mr. Cohen, one of the Jewish speakers, resembled very much many celebrated paintings of the Saviour.

A PRESUMPTIOUS OFFICER.

A Jersey City Special Got His Face Punched Saturday Night.

John Neuman and Patrick Lawler were arrigned before City Judge Runyon last Monday on the charge of disorderly conduct on Somerset street Saturday night. They were having a wordy set-to with a Scortch Plains man when James McKeon, who claims to be a special officer at Jersey City, attempted to act as peace maker McKeon's participation in the argument was resented and Neuman landed a sockdolager on his face. Then McKeon re-aliated by hitting Lawler and sending him sprawling out into the street. Subsequently Lawler was put under arrest, as well as Neuman.

McKeon appeared in court Monday morning and explained his part in the fracas. His reason for interfering with the men was that he is a special officer in Jersey City, but what a Jersey City officer had to do with the peace and good morals of Plainfield was not dilated on by the court officers. The Judge suspended sentence on the prisoners. It appeared as though McKeon's conduct was presumptious.

Acted Only as an Agent.

Robert La Pierce, of New Market, who was connected as agent with the financial concern which the Calvary Baptist church claims cheated them out of $240, explained to a local reporter Saturday how he came to be connected with it. Mr. Pierce says that he answered an advertisement in the New York Herald for a financial solicitor, and took up the work for them. He negotiated the loan for the church. But Mr. Pierce says he did not handle a cent of the advance money.

Talked to Trinity Sunday-School.

Mrs. E. B. Horton, of Cranford, who is employed by the board of domestic missions to personally visit the Indian schools and churches in the west, Sunday afternoon gave a very interesting account of a recent visit to an Indian church at Oklahoma. Her talk was so entertaining that all of the 325 scholars and teachers present were really sorry when it was time for her to stop. One of the small boys, Elmer Bohan, was dressed as an Indian warrior, and stood on the platform beside the speaker, as an object-lesson.

Fire of Little Consequence.

Last Sunday about 9:30 an alarm of fire was sent in from Box No. 63, corner of South avenue and Berckman street, and the department responded. The fire was of small consequence as it consisted only of a few railroad ties burning in the rear of the carpet works. Very soon after the alarm was sent in the recall was sounded, and it required little effort to put the fire out.

Fountain for Man and Beast.

Plans are about completed whereby the Loyal Temperance Union hope to raise sufficient funds to erect a drinking fountain this summer. It will be located on one of the principal streets and will supply all kinds of animals as well as man. It is hoped that every citizen will aid the cause by liberal contributions.

Elected Chairman of the Somerset County Board.

IS THE YOUNGEST MEMBER.

MATTER OF "TRUE VALUATION" WAS DISCUSSED.

Mr. French Has Made a Thorough Study of Taxation Problems During the Past Year and He was Able to Enlighten His Colleagues on Many Points—To Assess at True Valuation.

Somerville, May 22.—The annual meeting of the assessors of Somerset county was held Saturday afternoon in the TenEyck House in this place, and the plans upon which they will prosecute their work of making valuations for the coming year were discussed and mutually agreed upon. Assessor Kennedy, of Bedminster, who was chairman of the Board last year, resigned and necessitated the selection of a successor. Assessor Elston M. French, of North Plainfield, was nominated and unanimously chosen as presiding officer, notwithstanding that Mr. French stated that he had no desire to occupy such a prominent place among the assessors of the county. Mr. French is the youngest member of the Board, and his selection for the position is quite an honor for him.

Assessor Charles V. Voorhees, of Somerville, was re-elected secretary of the Board.

Taxation problems in Somerset county, as well as those general in all communities, were discussed with a view of overcoming the unsatisfactory features and making the work of assessors as nearly satisfactory and as just to both the public and the individual alike as it is possible. During the past year Mr. French has devoted a great deal of his time to the study of taxation, having read many of the standard works of this sort, as well as observed the methods that prevail in other states. He gave an instructive and interesting review of what he had learned in his observations, with suggestions to be applied locally in the work of assessing valuations in Somerset county. His thorough study of the subject had put him in a superior position as compared to the majority of his colleagues, and his talk and the answering of questions put to him by the other members he was able to enlighten the Board on many valuable points.

One of the most important matters brought up was the question of assessing at true valuation. The recent order of the State Board of Taxation to the Passaic county assessors to assess on this plan, as well as the agitation in the same direction in other parts of the State, was called to the attention of the Board. Some were in favor of a resolution being passed calling upon the various assessors of the county to assess at true valuation, but this action was not taken; instead it was mutually agreed that valuations named for taxable purposes should be as near real as it was possible for the assessor to get it.

A uniform rate of assessing corporation property lying in different towns was also settled upon so as to avoid charges of discrimination by the latter.

The work of assessors will be started this week in earnest and it is calculated that in most of the towns they will have finished their rounds of the property in four or five weeks.

MIDST OF POKER GAME POLICE CAME.

Eight Colored Men Were Caught in the Raid.

ONLY ONE WAS PUNISHED.

HE WAS CHARLES CHAMBERLAIN WHO RENTED THE ROOM.

The Arrest Made in a Garret Room in the Hatfield Row by Three Officers—Judge Runyon Decided That Chamberlain Was the Only One Who Had Committed an Offense Against the City Law.

Since the decision of Judge Runyon that it is not a crime to play cards in a private house, even for the money, the police have made but few arrests on the charge of gambling. Early Sunday morning, however, the minions of the law downed their warpaint and went forth. The result was shown in police court last Monday when eight gentlemen of color lined up in front of City Judge Runyon, all charged with being in a full fledged poker game which Sergeant Kiely, Rundman, Frederickson and Patrolman VanDerweg raided at 1 o'clock yesterday morning in the top room in one of the houses in Hatfield row on Arlington avenue.

For sometime past the police have been suspicious of the place and have been waiting their chance to unearth what they thought to be a complete gambling outfit. Shortly after midnight Sunday the trio of officers decided that the opportune time had arrived. Having located the suspicious place before they had no trouble in making direct for it. Up to the garret room they went, and in some hokus-pokus method gain admittance in impromptu manner.

The scene that met their eyes would doubtless have whetted the appetite of a Manteo. Eight gentlemen of color were in the room, six of whom were engaged in playing the festive game, around a table covered with a bed quilt to deaden the sound of cards as they were thrown down by the interested players.

While all was quiet on the scene before the advent of the police, the moment they appeared the room was in utter confusion owing to the prompt and promiscuous manner in which the dusky players endeavored to conceal their acts. But the police were too quick and in a minute the occupants of the room submitted to arrest and the capture of their paraphernalia and money. They were all taken to the police station and locked up till morning.

Sunday morning they were arraigned before Mayor Rockfellow and released to appear before Judge Runyon this morning. The names of the prisoners were as follows: Charles Chamberlain, proprietor of the room, Gilbert Thompson, Charles Crouse, Ted Fleselman, Leander Brown, Charles Jefferson, Rowley Crouse and Reuben Ray.

Last Monday they were brought before Judge Runyon and the story of the raid told. The Judge decided that under the law he could not hold any of the prisoners but Chamberlain, whom he adjudged guilty of conducting a gambling house. He fined him $25 which was paid. The others players were discharged.

SUNDAY NEWSPAPERS.

The Subject Debated by Y. M. C. A. But No Decision Reached.

The alleged evils of the Sunday newspapers were discussed at length last Monday at the meeting of the Y. M. C. A. Literary society, and several members of the society offered their opinions whether they are evils or not.

A debate was arranged between T. A. Cuming, C. E. Drange and Paul S. Whitall, on the affirmative side, and R. W. Davis and C. M. Dolliver, for the negative. Mr. Cuming wrote to Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, of Philadelphia, and to Rev. Josiah Strong, of New York, for their opinions on the subject, and read extracts from a sermon on "Sunday Newspapers" written by Rev. Dr. Burrell, of the Marble Collegiate church, of New York.

No decision was reached, but next week judges will be appointed, and a decision given. Other features of the evening were literary readings and an oration by Mr. Cuming.

Still Alarm for Chimney Fire.

About 8 o'clock last Sunday a still alarm of fire was received at headquarters for a chimney fire at the home of Edward Dooley, 219 East Fourth street. The Chief's wagon and No. 2 hose wagon responded, and two extinguishers were used to put the fire out. The chimney was found to be in a very dirty condition. The fire did very little damage.

MINISTER SAYS THE 'PLAINS IS WICKED.

Rev. Mr. Shott Refers to Desperate Act of Miss Messler.

HAS SECURED HER STORY.

VISITED HER AT THE HOSPITAL YESTERDAY AFTERNOON.

Stated in His Sermon Last Night That She Made a Statement to Him That He Would Not Repeat Until He Had Investigated It—Promises Some Revelations in His Sermon Next Sunday.

The attempted suicide of Miss Alida Messler in the hallway of the Codington building on Park avenue last Friday afternoon as a result of the trouble she had gone through with her parents, who did not like the company she went with, was the basis for a statement made by Rev. Mr. Shott, pastor of the Scotch Plains Baptist church, Sunday, during the course of his sermon, that Scotch Plains was the most sinful town he had ever lived in.

Miss Messler is a member of the Baptist congregation and this fact has led Rev. Mr. Shott to take a special interest in the attempted suicide of the girl. Sunday morning Rev. Mr. Shott intimated that Miss Messler's desperate act was the result of the disgraceful things that transpired in that place last Sunday when a party of Plainfield sports visited the place. He said that it was his intention of going to the Muhlenberg Hospital in this city in the afternoon and interviewing Miss Messler. In view of this he said he might have something interesting to say in the evening.

The fact that the minister was going to the hospital became noised around town during the day and a large audience was attracted to his church in the evening. During the course of his sermon Rev. Mr. Shott said that he had visited Miss Messler during the afternoon and that she had told him her story. He said that the statements that she made were very startling to him, but they were of such a nature that he did not dare repeat them in his pulpit till he had had a chance to thoroughly investigate them. During the week he said he would take the pains to investigate what Miss Messler had said to him and if he found them true he would make them public in his pulpit next Sunday. The remarks of the pastor made quite a sensation in the church.

It is known that Miss Messler made a statement to Dr. Long at the hospital in the presence of witnesses, and judging from what is known of this statement Miss Messler did not go to Lawyer Wm. DeMeza's office Friday afternoon to attempt to adjust difficulties alleged to have existed between herself and her father. A Press reporter saw Dr. Long this morning and was informed by the doctor that he understands that there were other matters that called her to the Codington building, but he declined to discuss the statement made by the girl or to give out any facts regarding it. He does not think that this is the proper time for it to be made public.

The latest advices from the hospital are that Miss Messler will recover. It looks now as though she pulled the trigger of the revolver twice, as both the bullets that exploded is one with a dent in the cap, as if made by the sharp point of the trigger. The shell evidently did not go off, and Miss Messler, determined to do the deed, pulled it again.

PRINTER-FARMERS' COLONY THRIVES.

Big 6's Members Happy Workers in the Country.

75 TYPOS ON 60 ACRE FARM.

THE RESULT OF EVERY MAN'S WORK BELONGS TO HIM PERSONALLY.

Organization Exacts Nothing But Good Conduct and Attention to the Crops.—Each Man Assigned a Plot and Given the Proper Tools—Great Rivalry Among the Typos to Have Best Crops.

Reports from Typographical Union No. Six's colony of printer-farmers, show that the scheme of giving congenial work to the unemployed of the organization is an unqualified success. The.e are now about seventy-five men at work on the sixty acre farm, and it is planned to widely extend the scope of the movement this summer.

Each man is assigned a plot and is given seeds to plant and tools with which to work. Big Six also allows each man at least one meal a day. The printer is largely his own master, although J. W. Sullivan, Chairman of the Union Land Committee, has a supervising authority over the whole colony. Naturally, the raising of crops of vegetables is a mystery to the men when they first arrive. Only a few of them, it was found, had ever had any experience in garden truck farming, or, indeed, in any sort of farming.

The "greenhorns" are at once started at work in a practical way, guided by competent instructors, and soon learn all that it is necessary for them to know. Many of the men arrived at the farm broken in spirit and fortunes, and almost ready to give up the fight for existence. Mr. Sullivan says that the healthful outdoor labor, and a knowledge of the fact that they are earning a livelihood, has invariably had a most beneficial effect upon the men, both physically and mentally. They are cheered and comforted in watching the plants and seeds they put into the ground grow and thrive, and there is the greatest rivalry among the workers as to who shall produce the best results.

Everything that the men raise is theirs to do with as they please. The organization exacts nothing from them but good conduct and attention to their crops. The first farm of the union was in Pelham Bay Park, in the Bronx. A grant for 321 acres was obtained from the Park Board in the spring of last year, the idea of employing the idle in farming having been prompted by the potato raising scheme of Governor Pingree, of Michigan, also carried out successfully by the Society for Improving the Condition of the Poor in New York city.

Many vegetables were planted at the park farm, but the novices did better with potatoes than with the other truck. Even with the loss through a failure of a part of the crop the venture was a financial success, and opened up a certain means of relieving distress among the idle men of the craft. A better farm, that now occupied at Bound Brook, was secured for the colony this year, and the number of workers was about doubled.

All kinds of garden truck are being raised this year, and it is sure that the profits will be greater than ever before. It is proposed to gradually extend the ground area, and thus the Union will be enabled to give work to more men. The union has a fund for the support of its needy and unemployed, and at present only a part of those failing upon the charity of the organization are in the farming colony.

WOMEN IN BLACK FACE.

UNIQUE MINSTREL SHOW SEEN IN WASHINGTON HALL.

The Entertainment Given Under the Auspices of Mizpah Lodge, of Odd Ladies, Some of Whom Assumed the Parts.

Mizpah Lodge, No. 1, I. O. O. L., held a strawberry festival and dance Friday in Washington Hall. Before the dancing was begun an entertainment was given by "Jolly Joe's" lady minstrels, a company of local artists. Who the ladies were that took part in the show could not be learned, as they took great pains to keep their identity a secret. Blackened and arrayed in picturesque garb, they amused the audience for an hour or more with jokes and songs.

The entertainers were obliged to cut off a part of the entertainment because a gang of hoodlums in the rear of the hall kept up an incessent yelling and hooting, and so annoyed the performers that they could not go on with the exhibition.

The floor was cleared for dancing about 10 o'clock, and it was kept up until midnight. Professor Guttman furnished the music.

Desperate Act of Alida Messler, of Scotch Plains.

AIMED BULLET FOR HEART.

CORSET STEEL SAVED HER FROM AN INSTANT DEATH.

Girl Had Been in Trouble With Her Father and Visited Lawyer DeMeza's Office—He was Too Busy to Hear Her and She Went Into Hallway and Shot Herself—Chances for Her Recovery.

At an hour Friday afternoon when the streets were filled with shoppers, and the merchants experiencing their heaviest work, a tragedy occurred in the hallway of the Codington building, on Park avenue, that caused a momentary lull in the business of the hour. Miss Alida Messler, of Scotch Plains, the twenty-year-old daughter of Charles Messler, of that place, attempted to end her life with a bullet, and may accomplish her object. Time only can tell.

No reason can be assigned for the desperate act, except that the young woman has had trouble at home over the attentions of a young man of her village, who her father did not approve of. She is reticent as to the motive for the action, and will give no information in regard to herself.

It was about 5 o'clock when William G. DeMeza, who has offices in the Codington building, was called upon by Miss Messler. What her business with him was she did not have time to tell. Mr. DeMeza had to catch a train for Dover, N. J., and told her to call again today at 2 o'clock when he would have leisure to listen to her.

She is said to have remarked, "No, I wont come tomorrow; I'll shoot myself first," and with this she turned to go out. Mr. DeMeza thought it a strange remark, but let her go without any more words. Hardly had the door closed on her than he was startled by a pistol shot, and hurrying into the hall found Miss Messler leaning against the wall with blood streaming from a wound in her breast.

H. C. VanEmburgh, who has an office across the hall from Mr. DeMeza, also heard the shot and was on the spot simultaneously with Mr. DeMeza. Together they supported the girl until help arrived. "I've shot myself," she said, and retained her nerve all the time.

Mr. VanEmburgh telephoned at once for the police, and was answered by Roundeman Flynn and later by Chief Grant. The ambulance was called and the unfortunate girl was conveyed to the hospital. There the physicians found that a thirty-two calibre bullet had penetrated her side, and was lodged somewhere in her back. The bullet had struck a corset steel, been diverted from its course, and circled around the heart.

When questioned as to who she was and why she had done the deed, Miss Messler refused to say a word. In the meantime word had reached Mrs. Radin, of North avenue, the girl's aunt, and she reached the hospital as soon as the ambulance. At the sight of her relative the girl admitted her identity, but still refused to say why she had done it.

Mrs. Radin, in a conversation with a Press reporter, said that the only reason she could assign for the act was domestic troubles which Miss Messler had had at home.

Some time last month Harry Ball, of Westfield, to whom Miss Messler had been keeping company, had a dispute with Mr. Messler, which ended in blows. Ball was not agreeable to the elder Messler as a suitor for his daughter, and finding him there one evening, it is said he threw him bodily out of the house.

This led to a complaint being made before Justice Clark, of Scotch Plains, by Ball against Messler, charging him with assault and battery. Messler pleaded guilty to the charge, and was held in $100 bail to appear before the Grand Jury.

But things became so unpleasant for Alida at home, it is alleged, because *she still continued to receive the at*tentions of Ball, that she left her father's roof and sought employment at Walpole's Hotel, where she was living until yesterday.

She came to this city some time during the afternoon, and was seen by several people whom she knows. They spoke to her, and was answered pleasantly by her. To Tony Lusardi, of North avenue, she gave a laughing greeting as she passed, and continued on her way up Park avenue. It is supposed that she went directly to DeMeza's office.

The doctors who attended her at the hospital were much impressed by her pluck. Although suffering intense pain, and with the chances against her recovery, she was conscious all the while, even while she lay on the operating table and allowed the physicians to probe for the bullet.

The news of Miss Messler's attempt on her life soon reached her parents, and they came to the hospital at once. Landlord Walpole, for whom she worked, says that she threatened to take her life there, but he gave the remarks no thought. When he heard of her act she searched for his revolver and found she had taken it.

This is not the first time Miss Messler has tried to take her life. A year ago she took a dose of laudanum while employed at a hotel in Bound Brook. It is said that trouble over a man was at the bottom of her actions then.

WEDDED IN THE RECTORY

NUPTIALS OF MISS ALAMEN AND W. J. PRIDE CELEBRATED.

Ceremony Performed by Rev. Father Smyth—On a Wedding Trip to Philadelphia—Bride a Native of Peru.

May 18th at 8:30 o'clock p. m. in the rectory of St. Mary's R. C. church there took place the marriage of Miss Ernestina Alamen, of Peru, and W. J. Pride, of this city. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Smyth, rector of the church. The bride was gowned in a pretty dress of white trimmed with lace and ribbons, and was attended by Miss Fanny Olden, of this city. The groomsman was R. J. Pride, of Newark, brother of the groom.

Mr. and Mrs. Pride received a number of useful and handsome presents from friends, who wish them a happy and prosperous journey through life.

After the wedding the couple returned to Mr. Pride's home, and today they left for Philadelphia to remain for a few days. On their return they will board for a time, after which they will take up their residence on East Third street in a cottage.

Mrs. Pride, as stated is a native of Peru, and has only been a resident of this country about three years. The family with whom she has been living brought her to Plainfield from Peru. She is a graduate of one of the largest universities at her native home and is very highly educated.

The groom is a native of Virginia, and is employed at Ed. Maynard's tonsorial parlors, where he is very popular. He has a host of friends in Plainfield and they extend congratulations to both him and his wife.

A TREAT FOR ENDEAVORERS.

Yale Missionaries to Conduct a Meeting in This City

To the Y. P. S. C. E. of Plainfield and vicinity:

The missionary department of the Plainfield Christian Endeavor Union has been preparing a treat for the Endeavorers of Plainfield and vicinity and are now ready to make it known.

The union has been exceedingly fortunate in being able to secure several members of the Yale Missionary Band of Student Volunteers who will give their valuable assistance in meeting to be held in the First Baptist church, Friday evening, May 26th, at 8 o'clock.

The members of the Yale Missionary Band are graduates of the class of '98, who have given themselves to the work of Foreign Missions.

During the past year they have conducted missionary campaigns in the larger cities, and the results have been most gratifying. They have aroused great enthusiasm, and in many instances have created marked interest which failed to exist before their visit. They are men full of the Holy Ghost and endured with power from on high, and so are able to command the attention of the largest audiences. The missionary department of our union is exceedingly anxious that the Endeavorers of Plainfield show their appreciation of the Yale Band by supporting the meeting by their presence and by extending the invitation to their friends and urging them to help spread the good news. Let us be untiring in our efforts to secure a large attendance.

A special feature of the meeting will be a conference conducted by a member of the band, and a grand opportunity will be given to receive answers to difficult questions. There seems to be no reason why this conference should not be one of the best ever held in Plainfield. Above all let us remember this occasion in prayer continually, believing that God is waiting to bless us, and will manifest His presence in our midst. Please set aside Friday evening, May 26th, for this special occasion, and please do not permit any other engagement to interfere with your attendance.

Alice S. Runyon,
Supt. Miss. Dept.

REED ASPIRES FOR SENATORSHIP AGAIN.

He Doesn't Propose to Be Downed By Thompson.

ALVAH CLARK INTERESTED.

CONTEST ATTRACTING ATTENTION ALL OVER THE STATE.

New York Herald Devotes a Column Story to a Review of the Situation in Somerset County—Alvah Clark Involved and an Attempt to Get Gov. Voorhees Mixed Up in the Affair.

The contest between Senator Reed and Chancery Clerk Thompson for the control of Republican politics in Somerset county has become so bitter that it is attracting attention in political circles throughout the State. The New York Herald Saturday contains the following about the fight:

It looks as if there were going to be hot times in Somerset county over the Senatorial nomination this fall. Chas. A. Reed, the presentre presentative of the county in the State Senate, achieved the presidency of the Senate last winter on the understanding that he was not to seek a re-election.

Courtesy to a retiring Senator who was not expected to have another chance for the distinction induced his fellow Senators to place the gavel in his hands. Current rumor was that he was to hold himself in reserve as an aspirant for Congressional honors, and then it was said he might seek one of the vice-chancellorships under the Republican who is to succeed Chancellor McGill.

It was gratifying news to "Lew" Thompson, the Clerk of the Court of Chancery, that Reed was not to enter the race for renomination to the Senate. Thompson is a Republican "boss" in Somerset. He does not like an iron gray hair in Senator Reed's head. He had made public announcement that Reed was withdrawing because he knew the nomination would not be given to him. That seems to have piqued Reed, and of late he has allowed it to be understood that he is willing to lead the battle for the Republicans again. That has not pleased Thompson quite as much as the rumor of Reed's decision to abstain from running pleased him, and he has started out for Reed's scalp with the fiercest tomahawk he has in his collection of political weapons.

The fight is on with a vigor that has already embroiled Alvah A. Clark and that attempted to embroil Governor Voorhees as well. Clark is a Democratic boss in the county. He enjoys the distinction, too, of being Senator Reed's father-in-law. His interest in Reed is so deep that, it is said, Mr. Clark forgot he was a Democrat when Reed ran for Senator three years ago, and the politicians insist that Mr. Clark went out of his way to get Democratic votes for his son-in-law. Thompson insists that Senator Reed's Republicanism is quite as thin where his father in-law is concerned.

Mr. Clark used to be a Representative in Congress. Just now he is Postmaster at Somerville. His term is on the edge of expiration, and there is great trouble between the factions for the selection of his successor. Representative Howell, in whose Congressional district Somerville is, has selected Assemblyman Cooper for the position. The Thompsonites say that through a little deal between the Democratic father-in-law and his Republican son-in-law they were euchred out of their innings in the game of selection.

Mr. Clark, so their charge is, placed his resignation in Senator Reed's hands and he in turn put it in his pocket and kept it there till Cooper's name had been forwarded to the White House. The Thompsonites say that as they did not know that Clark had resigned they had no opportunity to say a word as to who should succeed him. They have succeeded in having the nomination "held up" for the present. They hope to induce the interested officials to keep it held up till after the fall elections.

Meanwhile they are exerting all of their energies to induce Representative Howell and Senator Sewell to have a name more acceptable to them substituted for Cooper's, and in that line they waited upon Gov. Voorhees recently. They want the Governor to see Gen. Sewell and have him prevent the selection of Cooper by preventing Cooper's confirmation. The conference was a long one. It was a particularly interesting one, too, because Thompson is a bitter foe of the Gov*ernor, and it was odd at least to see* Thompson seeking for the Governor's favor. The Governor is said to have decided that it is a controversy in which he had better take no hand.

The postmastership at Somerville may not be an important political factor in itself, but it is a big enough bone for the two factions to quarrel over, and for the successful one to crow over.

Disorderly places may be "wide open" in New York, but that does not prevent the police officials shutting up about it.

WORK OF BABY CAMP IS NOW BEFORE THEM.

The Matter Considered by City Union of King's Daughters.

MUST BEGIN ANEW AGAIN.

FIRE ON THE MOUNTAINS DESTROYING THEIR PROPERTY.

A Good Sum of Money in the Treasury to Start the Work With But the Union is in Serious Need of Liberal Support—Addresses by Rev. G. Kennedy Newell—The Officers That Were Chosen.

The annual spring meeting of the City Union of the King's Daughters was held Friday afternoon in Trinity Reformed church. The election of new officers resulted in the choice of Miss Florella Blish for president; Mrs. Charles A. Reed for vice president; Miss Linda Butler for treasurer; Miss Lillian A. Force for recording secretary, and Mrs. DeGraff for corresponding secretary.

The report of the secretary was read and a brief account of the work of the city nurses for the past year. Five-hundred cases were treated during the year, which is a creditable showing. In addition to the report of the secretary of the union, the secretaries of the individual circles made reports, showing what they have been doing.

Rev. G. Kennedy Newell delivered an address in which he laid special emphasis upon the co-operation of the circles, and the heartiness with which they all combine to make the work of the nurse and the life at the camp possible.

The union will begin the erection of another camp just as soon as the money has been secured. The old camp, it will be remembered, was destroyed by fire a few weeks ago, with all its contents. The camp cost $300 to build.

Although it answered its purpose a larger one would be appreciated and if enough money can be secured a larger one will be erected. The treasurer's report showed that over $800 has been donated last year, all of which has been expended except $35. This and the $50 given them from the proceeds from "Diplomacy" is all they have to start on. Miss Butler will gladly receive any contributions for this purpose.

When furniture is needed to equip the camp when built, Miss Little, chairman of the camp committee, will receive these articles. A new location has been offered the union, that is nearer the Mountain Park Inn than the former one, and therefore more suitable to their needs.

Before the meeting adjourned a vote of thanks was given to Mrs. Pierre Mali for allowing the union to have the baby camp on her property for three years. Eleven circles responded to the roll call.

The new city nurse is Miss Setzer, a graduate of St. John's Hospital, New York, and has served on the field as an army nurse.

A Smoking Image.

When the committee of seven from No. 2 Engine Company returned from Princeton a few nights ago they brought with them a present which they prize very much. It is an image representing some ancient god, inside of which there is place for machinery. By winding the machinery the heathen is made to smoke a cigar, pipe or cigarette. The present will be placed in some convenient corner, where it can entertain the boys when necessary.

NURSERY FABLES SEEN IN REAL LIFE.

Mother Goose Sale of Church of Redeemer a Success.

MANY UNIQUE FEATURES.

A WILLOW AVENUE HOUSE DEVOTED TO THE AFFAIR.

Mrs. A. E. Faber Chairman of the Sale—Booths Look Rustic and Are Filled With Articles That Are Designed to Divert Cash From Sightseers' Pockets Into Church Treasury.

One of the most successful events of the season is the Mother Goose sale which opened Friday afternoon in the house at 20 Willow avenue, Washington Park, under the auspices of the Church of the Redeemer. It was continued Saturday noon and evening. The affair is notable for the many novelties introduced that represented well-known characters in nursery fables.

Under the direct supervision of Mrs. A. E. Faber, Jr., who is chairman of the sale, those in charge made a decided hit in their arrangement of so many unique designs. Every booth had a rustic appearance and together with a rich display of bunting, roses, etc., the best effect is obtained. In every room the quaint and remarkable sayings of Mother Goose and her family are to be seen in printed form.

There is the fancy booth where Mother Goose, in the person of Mrs. Samuel J. Townsend, holds forth, and a portion of her family consists of Mrs. Geo. P. Dupee, Mrs. W. M. Downey, Mrs. Chas. Matthews, Mrs. Thos. Burr, Mrs. E. C. Perkins, Miss Josephine Brock, Mrs. Moore and Miss Crocker. These women also act as a reception committee.

In one of the main rooms is stationed "Little Miss Muffett, who sat on a tuffett, etc." Mrs. Frank S. Brown, has special charge of this booth where all kinds of pretty sofa pillows are on sale. In the same room there is to be found the "Maid in the Garden," where a booth is devoted to small linens and fancy articles. Miss Florence Stevens is in charge, assisted by some of the other young women.

On the opposite side of the hall in another room there is "Ding-dong bell," where for a moderate price one can purchase the finest lemonade. This is in charge of Mrs. Gilbert T. Rhoads, assisted by several young women.

One of the best attractions at the sale, and surely one of rare beauty, is the flower and candy booth. One whole room is devoted to this department. It is under the direction of Miss Minnie Wilson. The rarest flowers are exhibited and arranged in the most artistic style. The room devoted to candy is also a thing of beauty, and a number of "pretty maids all in a row" are in charge to serve the many customers.

Old Mother Hubbard is much in evidence at the grocery booth, and those assisting her are Miss Phillips and Miss Barlow.

A place that is crowded continually during the sale is the dining room. There is everything on the list from 5c up to tea and coffee. The King and Queen, represented by Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Stevens, are found in the dining room, where the King looks after the money and the Queen attends to the serving of the dinner, assisted by several women of the church.

Mrs. Frank Bowley represents the old woman in the shoe and has a wonderful assortment of dolls. W. W. Moore has a room all to himself, where he entertains visitors with phonographic selections, and on the top floor there is a shooting gallery where Young America has plenty of chance to knock out the Filipinos. Messrs. Faber and Townsend are in charge here. In the main hallway there is a fishing pond in charge of Mrs Conkey.

The women who form the executive committee of the affair and to whom a great deal of credit is due are as follows: Mrs. A. E. Faber, Jr., chairman; Mrs. W. M. Downey, Mrs. Geo. P. Dupee, Mrs. H. R. Phillips, Mrs. Chas. Matthews, Mrs. J. O. Stevens, together with the chairmen of the various booths.

A Sociable at Trinity.

Under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society of Trinity Reformed church a very pleasant sociable was held in the lecture room of the church May 18th. There was a very good attendance of young people and all joined in playing various kinds of games, which was the feature of the affair. During the evening re*freshments were served by the social* committee, consisting of Miss Cora Laire, Miss Edith DuBois, Miss Corrine Young and Miss Lottie Wilson.

Want a New Bridge.

The representatives of South River and Sayreville townships have asked Middlesex Freeholders for an appro*priation of $10,000 for a bridge over* the South river at Sayreville. This was refused. Later the request was modified to $6,000, and this will probably be granted.

SPEED CONTESTS OF A NOVEL CHARACTER

Trotting to See Who Could Come Nearest to 2:50.

VAIL WON FIRST PRIZE.

TWO HEATS TROTTED AND TIME AVERAGED TO GET RESULTS.

There Was a High Wind, But Good Time Was Made by the Horses in the Other Contests—Silver Prizes for the Winners—"Myrtle Twig" Won the Race in the 2:23 Class—A Racing Dog on Hand.

Saturday afternoon witnessed several exciting contests in speed at the Plainfield Driving Park. The weather was hardly fit for fast trotting, but despite the high wind some pretty fast time was made.

The most interesting event of the day was the trial of speed to see who could drive nearest to a 2:50 clip. This seemed easy to experienced horsemen, but many of them were fooled badly by the gaits of their horses and made the mile in several seconds more or less than the requisite 2:50.

The horsemen were allowed to go in any rig or vehicle they chose, alone or in groups. They were not to carry watches or be prompted by any one along the track. Two heats were trotted and an average struck, which decided who was entitled to the cup.

A. C. Vail, with his bay horse "Bud Onward," succeeded in winning the first prize, a silver cup, and Robert Fairbairn took the silver soup ladle as second. George Tobin was fortunate enough to win the silver spoon as third.

Mr. Vail trotted his first heat in 2:38½, and the second in 2:41½. Averaged these records made 2:50 exactly.

Mr. Fairbairn's two heats were trotted in 2:35 and 2:40, making him 5 seconds out of the way. Mr. Tobin made the first mile in 2:51½ and the second in 2:54, making him 5½ seconds out of the way.

Other contestants were C. L. Wright, 3:05 and 2:45; Henry Hays, 3:00 and 2:53½; John Mantz, 2:35½ and 3:20; Horace Martin, 2:55 and 2:57½; W. A. Coddinton, 2:43 and 3:06½; J. W. Johnson, 2:51 and 2:56.

Two races were trotted, in two heats each, which broke up the monotony of the other sport.

The first was between W. A. Coddington's bay mare, Mayor Smalley's bay horse and David Smalley's bay horse. The first heat was won by Mayor Smalley in 2:35½, with Coddington second and David Smalley third.

The second heat was won by David Smalley in 2:29½, with Coddington second and Mayor Smalley third.

The second race was of the 2:35 class. The entries were Osborne's "Illinois," from the Woodbrook Farm; Darby's "Sunday," and Brantingham's "Myrtle Twig." The two heats were won by Osborne, with Brantingham second and Darby third. Time, 2:29 and 2:26¾.

An amusing feature of this last race was a large dog of the greyhound breed, who started with the horses and kept up with the leader until the three-quarter post had been passed, when he gave out. The dog did not seem to annoy the horses at all, although Darby's "Sunday" faltered a little when he came up with the animal.

ART AT A SOCIABLE

Unique Affair Arranged by First Presbyterian Endeavorers.

A successful sociable was given May 18th by the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Presbyterian church in the parlors of the church. The social committee had prepared a choice exhibit of works of art for the entertainment of their friends, and one room was devoted to this purpose. Catalogues giving a list of one hundred pictures were given to the guests. This was quite necessary as without a catalogue the visitors would have been at a loss to know the name of the work of art at which they were looking.

Though the art gallery plan is not new, this one was well planned and executed, and caused much amusement. Another form of entertainment which was more of a novelty and was also much enjoyed, was the guessing of nameless advertisements. Piano duets by Mrs. LeRoy H. Gates and Miss Lettie Remsen, and piano solos by Miss Lilian Torrey Glen, were given during the evening, and ice cream and cake were served.

The social committee in charge of the affair included the following: Miss Helen Bolce, chairman; Miss Lillian Remsen, Miss Mildred Ulrich, Miss Beatrice Miner, Miss Clara Dunham, Mrs. W. L. Remsen, Miss Lizzie Bittenbender and LeRoy H. Gates.

Need Two More Horses.

When all the changes are completed in the fire department it will be necessary for the city to purchase a couple of new horses to handle all the apparatus now owned by the city. No definite plans have thus far been decided upon.

BRILLIANT MUSICALE AT THE "CHESTNUTS"

Correct and Spirited Expression of Miss May's Pupils.

AN APPRECIATIVE AUDIENCE

TEACHERS AND PUPILS MEMORIZED EACH SELECTION.

The Event Was Given in Study Hall of the Seminary Saturday Afternoon—Showed Great Proficiency on the Part of the Pupils and Appreciation by the Audience—Those Who Took Part.

Blooming branches of dogwood in profusion made an artistic background for Study Hall at the Plainfield Seminary on Seventh street, where a musicale was given Saturday afternoon that showed great proficiency on the part of the performers and thorough appreciation by a large audience.

Expression in musical technique counts for as much as expression in elocution or oratory, and this musicale, given by Miss May's pupils, was characterized by correct and spirited expression. The following programme was rendered with accuracy, taste and skill, that in some cases reached brilliant performance:

Hungary—From "The Nations"...Mosskowski
Miss Emily Grovesteen and Miss Ruth Dudley.
Evening Song.....Thalion
Serenade.....Kirchner
William Schoemaker.
Arietta.....Grieg
Il Penseroso.....Heller
Miss Katherine Gold.
Song.....Miss Agnes Anderson.
Song Without Words.....Mendelssohn
Brooklet.....Heller
Miss Jane Allen.
Tarantella.....Piesonka
Miss Helen Bushnell.
Knight of the Hobby Horse.....Schumann
Catch Me If You Can.....Meyer-Helmund
Miss Ruth Dudley.
Prelude and Fugue.....Bach
Shadow Dance.....MacDowell
Miss Mary Wadsworth.
Song.....Miss Anderson
The Flatterer.....Chaminade
Miss Emily Grovesteen.
Impromptu.....Schubert
In Springtime.....Grieg
Miss Ruby Kleb.

The audience showed especial appreciation of Miss Jane Allen's performance of the "Brooklet" with its waves and ripples of music; Miss Helen Bushnell's brilliant rendering of the "Tarantella," full of sprightly and swaying measures; Miss Ruth Dudley's varied selections; Miss Mary Wadsworth's "Prelude Fugue" and "Shadow Dance," which was quite masterly in its execution; Miss Emily Grovesteen's ability in the "Flatterer" and Miss Ruby Kelb's skillful rendering of Schubert's "Impromptu" and Greig's "In Springtime."

Miss Agnes Anderson from New York charmed the audience with songs given in a rich, clear voice, combining sweetness with compass and a distinct enunciation that left no doubt of her meaning. The song "Mayflower" elicited an encore, "The discontented Duckling." The second song "Bonnie Dundee" with the call to arms of two hundred and fifty years ago was followed with "The Meadow-talk" for an encore. Miss Anderson's concluding number was a "Bed-time Song" by Robert Louis Stevenson, set to music.

A pleasing feature of the entertainment, not on the programme, was the exquisite music of Miss May, who, in response to an unwritten demand, performed two selections with rare ability, taste and feeling. A noticeable method of Miss May's and her pupils is the absence of notes, herself and pupils memorizing each selection, when learned. They need never excuse themselves from playing with the tiresome plea, "I haven't my notes."

The walls of Study Hall were decorated with water colors and the drawings in black and white of the pupils of the Seminary under the teacher, Miss Etlitta, of New York. Miss Harriet Etner Strong was awarded the prize for superiority in drawing.

Teachers to be Taught.

The Somerset County Teachers' Association will meet at Raritan Saturday, May 27th. Prof. W. J. Wightman, of the borough public schools, will make an address on the subject "Recent Advances in Teaching." Officers for the ensuing year will be elected at the meeting.

Collector James A. Martin, whose duty it is to receive taxes, is at present having little trouble in collecting taxes under the Martin Act. Those who have received the proper notice are beginning to realize that it is better to settle and thus avoid further trouble.

The estate of Judge Thomas F. McCormick, of Elizabeth, has, on application of his widow, been ordered sold to pay the debts, amounting, it is said, to $20,000. The sale will be subject to the widow's right of dower.

THE COUNCIL'S ADIEU.

RESOLUTIONS PRAISING WORK OF THE VOLUNTEER FIREMEN.

City Recognizes and Appreciates the Activity and Excellent Work of the Volunteers During Their Service.

The following is the copy of the resolutions offered at the last meeting of the Common Council by Councilman Coriell, of the fire and water committee, in relation to the introduction of the new fire department system, in which the Councilmanic committee pays a farewell tribute to the old-time volunteers:

WHEREAS, After due and careful consideration, the Common Council of the city of Plainfield has decided that owing to the increasing needs of the city in the matter of protection from fires, it is advisable to substitute the call in place of the volunteer system in the fire department.

Resolved, That the Mayor having nominated and the Council having confirmed the officers and men to serve as the officers of fire department under the call system, the chief engineer notify each of the present companies that their duties as members of the volunteer fire department will cease on May 17th, inst., at 12 o'clock m., and that any property of the department that they may have in their possession as such companies shall be turned over to the chief of the new department at that date; and

WHEREAS, It is the opinion of the Council that public recognition of the valuable and effective work of the volunteer department should be made.

Resolved, That we, the members of the Common Council of the city of Plainfield, speaking not only for ourselves but for the citizens at large of Plainfield, whom we as public servants represent, extend our most hearty thanks for the ability, faithfulness and efficiency of the volunteer department in the past. We recognize that they have been quick to respond to any and every call, and to their efforts is due the small proportion of disastrous fires that have occurred in our city for years past, and we recognize especially those who already long exempt from active duty continue in the most praiseworthy manner to aid in the protection of our city; and be it further

Resolved, That we, the Council, and especially the committee on fire and buildings, will always be ready to receive counsel and advice from the members of the Exempt Association, and will welcome their practical assistance in the hour of need, and be it further

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread at large on the minutes of the Council.

NO FURTHER CONTEST.

BOROUGH WATCHUNG AVENUE ASSESSMENTS TO STAND.

Judge McCarter, Representing Mrs. Durlach, Writes Senator Reed That They Will Stop Litigation as It Stands.

Judge Thomas N. McCarter, of Newark, has written to Senator Reed that he has abandoned the idea of further contesting the Watchung avenue assessments.

Judge McCarter represented in the contest before the Supreme Court, *Mrs. Hannah Durlach, who was as*sessed for benefits about $1,200 on two small lots next to the brook. They claimed that the assessments were more than the lots are worth. These lots were assessed higher in proportion than any others.

They talked of appealing from the decision of the Supreme Court, but have concluded that it will be wiser to stop litigation and pay now.

FOR DR. FRENCH MEMORIAL.

Junior Endeavorers Made $14 for a Worthy Object.

The Junior Christian Endeavorers of Trinity Reformed church held a cake and candy sale Saturday afternoon in the Primary Department room. The tables were very attractive and tastefully arranged with flowers and pink trimmings. The cake table was in charge of Miss Bessie Leighton, Miss Lizzie Trimmer, Miss Mary Bell and Miss Mabel Vanderhoof. The candy tables were superintendened by Miss Ada VanDoren, assisted by Morris Brokaw, Alice Puch and Anna Randall. Mrs. C. Schenck, superintendent of the Junior society of the church, was present during the sale and by her presence and advice the young people were very materially assisted.

The society feel very thankful for the liberal patronage of their friends, every thing being disposed of and about $14 realized for the object, the memorial fund to the memory of the late Dr. French.

Children Needing Homes.

The New Jersey Children's Home Society on April 11th had on hand seventeen children needing homes, ranging in age from two weeks to twelve years. The larger part of them are boys. During the past four weeks the society has received twenty six children and has found homes for twenty. This is the largest month's work in the history of the organization. Families wishing children should write immediately to the Superintendent of the Society, Rev. M. T. Lamb, Trenton. The society closes its fifth year this month. Contributions for the work will be especially appreciated at this time, inasmuch as the increase in the number of children handled has laid additional burdens upon the management.

Interment of Mrs. Cushing.

The remains of Mrs. Cushing, wife of Milton F. Cushing, for many years editor of "The Plainfield Union," this city, were interred in the family plot of the North Plainfield Cemetery on Saturday, beside her husband, who died February 8th, 1875.

KEAN'S ROAD WILL BE BUILT IN A HURRY

Planned to Have It in Operation By August.

MAKING THE SURVEY NOW.

NOT DECIDED WHERE THE POWER WILL COME FROM.

Senator Kean's Purpose is to Make the Road Popular—The Latest and Best Style of Rolling Stock Will be Secured—Two Plans for Obtaining the Power—What Cranford May Do.

The "Green Line," from Staten Island ferry to the city line at Westfield and Morris avenues, will be in operation as an electric railroad before the summer is over. Engineer Louis Quien is engaged in making the survey, and has completed a drawing of the section of the road from East Grand street through the west arch on Broad street into Morris avenue.

It is the intention to push the work of construction on through to Plainfield, and to complete the entire route this fall if possible. The officers of the company believe that the people of Cranford will realize the great convenience of this road over its rival on the south side, and through the township authorities will give to the company the right to extend it to the Westfield line.

In this connection an officer of the company said that in 1893 John D. Crimmins, with a view of extending the "Green Line" from Elizabeth to Plainfield, went over the route by way of the county roads and returned by way of the south side. On his arrival at Elizabeth he said that he would not take a premium and construct a road from Elizabeth to Plainfield if he had to build it on the south side, for the reason that it is isolated, cannot be reached along most of its length except by clambering over a railroad embankment, and in seasons of the year to get to the cars at many points the patrons of the road would have to wear rubber boots or go on stilts.

It is the purpose of Senator Kean's company to do everything it can to make its road popular. The cars will be all new, the construction of the road modern, and the service will be in the interest, and for the accomodation and convenience of the traveling public.

There are two plans before the company in regard to power for running its cars. One is to build a powerhouse, which is advocated by an engineering firm of New York city, who allege that the company would thus secure great advantages in the way of latest inventions in electrical apparatus, and superior to the systems in use by the trolley companies. On the other hand the Consumers Heat and Power Company has offered to make very favorable arrangements with the company to furnish power from its extensive plant in this city (the Suburban Electric Company). The Consumers company has facilities for supplying power for all trolley companies in and around Elizabeth.

Since the franchise was granted, the company's representative said, the North Jersey Traction Company has not attempted to put anything in the way of its rival, either to obstruct in its construction or to prevent its getting material. The traction company owners are largely interested in the Consumers Heat and Power Company, and will be benefited by the new company in taking its power from that corporation.

There is a general expression of *satisfaction all through the city and ex*tending to Plainfield over the granting of the franchise, and the people are awaiting with great interest the progress of the road's construction.

Ocean Trip to California.

Mr. and Mrs. Maze Edwards sailed Friday for California, by Steamship Finance, of the Panama Railroad Company, via Panama and Pacific Mail Steamers, to San Francisco. The voyage will take about one month, and after they leave Panama they will make several stops at various Central American and Mexican ports up the Pacific coast. Mr. and Mrs. Edwards are taking the trip for their health and to visit Mr. Edward's mother, whom he has not seen in twenty years, and whose eightieth birthday she hopes to celebrate in July. Mr. Edwards expects to return to Plainfield about August 10th, in time to open Music Hall for the season.

Successful Church Sale.

The Church of the Redeemer sale held Friday and Saturday at the house, 20 Willow avenue, came to a close Saturday evening and was eminently successful, socially and financially. It is estimated that the sum of $158 will be cleared above all expenses. The attendance Saturday afternoon and evening was larger than the most sanguine anticipated, and everything was disposed of.

Miss Helen F. Wagner, of West Fourth street, is detained at home by illness.

ENDEAVOR CELEBRATION

ELEVENTH ANNIVERSARY OF WARREN CHAPEL SOCIETY.

Secretary's Report Showed the Society to be in a Healthy Condition—Address by Rev. J. W. Richardson.

The Warren Mission Christian Endeavor Society celebrated its eleventh anniversary May 18th with an informal entertainment and sociable to which were invited the societies of the Local Union. The chapel was well filled with visitors and home members.

The chapel looked pretty with its decorations of black and orange streamers, the State colors, and green and white, the colors of the Local Union. A mass of blossoms in front added to the attractive features.

After Scripture reading by Fred Bach and prayer by J. W. Richardson, a short programme of music, etc., was presented. There were piano solos by Miss Dewey, a vocal solo by E. C. Martin, a duet by Mrs. Kline and Mrs. Stiglitz, and selections by the choir and recitations by A. A. Lake, of Dunellen.

The secretary's report, which was read by Miss K. Delke, showed the society to be in a healthy condition. Ten names have been dropped from the roll during the past year, and five have been added, so the society is not so large as last year. But they feel that the earnest members are all left, and a good work can be expected from them.

Mrs. Eley, who read the treasurer's report, reported that about $48 had been received during the year, and all but about $7 had been paid out. The Junior Society came in for a share of the attention, and the report made out by Mrs. J. O. McKelvey, was read by Miss Nora Schenck. The Juniors are five years old. During the year they have given $23 for foreign missions and $50 to home missions. They number fifty members.

Miss Florence G. Hawkins, president of the Local Union, was here introduced and spoke for a while upon "A New Opportunity." Her words were appreciated, and if the advice she gave the society, now starting upon its twelfth year, is heeded, the Christian Endeavor Society of Warren chapel will be a bulwark for good in the borough.

The address of the evening was made by Rev. J. W. Richardson. He spoke of the value of earnest, aggressive committee work to the society. He said the society will become what the committees make it, and that the real work was not done in the prayer meeting, but in the committee conference.

Refreshments closed the evening. The anniversary committee consisted of Mrs. W. A. Wilson, chairman; Mrs. Sutton and Mr. Herman.

The ushers were Mrs. Kurzhals, Miss A. Searing and Miss Vail.

Fred Bach and Miss D. Bolsterli formed the social committee, and Miss Jennie Martin and Henry Seader looked after the decorations. Although Fred Bach, the present president, occupied a seat upon the platform, Theodore Martin, a former president, took charge of the services.

"DIPLOMACY" NETTED $382.45.

Several Charitable Institutions Receive $50 a Piece.

The managers of "Diplomacy," which was performed in Music Hall April 29th last, announce that the net profits amounted to $382.45, which is being disposed of to worthy Plainfield charities.

Two hundred dollars have been distributed as follows: Organized Aid Association, $50; Relief Association, $50; Children's Home, $50; Children's Fresh Air Fund, $50. The balance will be disbursed later.

Surprised His Parents.

J. D. Brown, of Alliance, Neb., who has been seriously ill for some time past, surprised his parents last Saturday by arriving at their home. Mr. Brown has of late been detained at the Presbyterian Hospital, Chicago, but the physicians thought it best for him to come east for awhile, and he will stay with his parents on East Fourth street. Mr. Brown was formerly a resident of this city, but has been a resident of the west for several years.

Want Pay for Bicycles.

The Eldridge Bicycle Company have begun suit against several of their customers who purchased wheels from them while they were in business here. The amounts vary from $5 to $25. These suits are in tort and Murphy & Blatz represent the Eldridge Co. The suits are brought against Jacob King, Robert Yetman, Charles W. Hurst, F. H. Beekman, William H. Day and Lambert Edmund.

Mr. Fuk is President.

At a meeting of the Jefferson Hotel and Land Company which owns and operates the Waumbek and cottages at Jefferson, in the White Mountains, held at Lakewood Wednesday last, Charles J. Fisk, of this city, was elected a director and president of the company.

John Shepard, of Brooklyn, spent Sunday with relatives in the borough.

BURLY HIGHWAYMEN TOOK SMITH'S $14.

Anticipated Their Holdup and Hid His Gold Watch.

ROBBED NEAR "EIGHT ROW."

ON HIS WAY FROM NEW MARKET TO PLAINFIELD AT 3 A. M.

William Smith, of New Market, Was the Victim, and He Was on His Way to Plainfield to Get Supply of Bread for His Routes—Come up Now With What You've Got," He Heard.

Dunellen, May 22—A daring holdup occured here early Saturday morning, near the "Eight Row," on West Front street. Two highwaymen successfully attacked William Smith, of New Market, and took from him the sum of $14 in money, but were prov nted from getting any more booty by a trick he played on them.

Smith has a bread route, and was out at the early hour going to Plainfield after the day's supply of bread. When near Rock avenue Smith noticed two men in the road ahead of him, who seemed to be loitering along. As the horse came abreast of them one of the men seized the animal by the bridle, saying in a low voice, "Come up now with what you've got."

At the same time the second highwayman ran up to the wagon and ordered Smith to hand over his money. Smith, who was suplcious the minute he saw the men, had quickly unloosened his watch chain and dropped his gold watch into one of the bread boxes, before they had time to reach him.

He had a pocketbook containing about $14 in his pocket, and this he handed out without a word. To his surprise the men left him as soon as they got the money.

Smith continued his drive to Plainfield and got his supply of bread. Later in the day, when the story of the holdup had become noised about the borough, George Pizie came forward with Smith's wallet, which he had found along the road where it had been thrown by the men. As Smith is unable to describe the men, no clue to them can be secured.

STRAW ON FIRE TWICE.

BOTH BLAZES IN THE BOROUGH DISCOVERED IN TIME

First Fire Was in the Stables in the Rear of a Feed Store on Somerset Street—Another Blaze in Somerset Hotel Barns.

Last Saturday afternoon about 4 o'clock Mr. Lunger, manager for Simonson & Co., of Somerset street, dealers in feed, hay and straw, went to the stables in the rear of the building to get a horse. Approaching the stables he smelled smoke and a hasty examination disclosed the fact that there was a quantity of straw on fire in one of the stalls. The fire had gained little headway, and Mr. Lunger was able to quickly extinguish it. Boys are supposed to have been responsible for the fire.

About 7 o'clock Saturday evening a fire was discovered by Wm. Debele in the rear of Dreyer's Hotel, corner of Lincoln avenue and Somerset street, where recently the barns and sheds were partially destroyed by fire. The fire was in a quanity of straw stowed away in the lower part of one of the barns. An alarm was sent in from Box 143 by Will VanWinkle, of Somerset street, and the firemen responded at once. Several lengths of hose were laid and a considerable quantity of water was used to extinguish the flames. In a few minutes the fire would have had strong headway, and would have endangered adjoining property. The supposition is that boys are responsible for this fire.

They were assisted by Miss Schroeder, Miss Lulu Talmadge, Mrs. Eugene Moore, Mrs. Louis G. Tim*pson and Miss Ida Stewart. The draw*ing room was beautifully decorated Decoration, while the decorations in the dining room were of pink roses.

Hook and Ladder Truck in West End.

The old hook and ladder truck now in the possession of the fire department and which is stationed in the West Second street house, will at the proper time be located in the new engine house in the West End where it will do duty.

"COUNT" VAN NESS MAY STOP TROLLEY.

Doesn't Want the Tracks to Make a Bend on His Land.

MAY GET OUT INJUNCTION.

HE SIGNED THE RIGHT OF WAY FOR STRAIGHT LINE.

When the Survey Was Made, However, it Was Found That the Route Makes a Curve on His Property and He Does Not Like It—Weird Stories Have Been Circulated Around Town.

Just as the Scotch Plains extension of the Plainfield Street Railroad Company is about to be finished, after two years of agitation concerning the terms of the franchise, the company is threatened with trouble by one of the property owners over whose land the extension is to run. The man who threatens trouble is "Count" J. K. VanNess, of East Front street. The route of the company crosses a piece of property owned by VanNess, he having signed off the right of way several months ago when the company selected that route.

When he did this it was understood, so Mr. VanNess claims, that the line was to run straight across his property, but when the survey was made and the road staked out it was found that quite a bend in the road was planned for that point. The curve also takes in part of the land donated by Cole, and now it is stated that both Cole and VanNess are opposed to the tracks crossing their property unless they run in a straight line. They believe it will be a great detriment to their property in the event of their desiring to cut their property up into building lots.

Mr. VanNess now threatens, it is said, to apply for an injunction against the Street Railway Company crossing his property unless they do it on a straight line. There has been considerable talk about the matter within the last few days, and in connection with the trouble there has been some weird stories told of men being stationed with shotguns on the property to prevent the railway employes from breaking ground on the property. These stories, however, are false.

If an injunction should be secured it would mean a delay that would be costly for the Street Railway Company, and it is expected that if they anticipate serious trouble they will take heroic steps to get across the property before an injunction can be secured.

NEW JERSEY SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Interesting Statistics on the Work Done During the Coming Year.

The year book of the New Jersey Sunday School Association is just out, and shows an interesting compilation of facts and figures in the cause of Sunday-school work in the state. According to Secretary Ferguson's report there are in the state 2,338 Sunday-schools and 1,979 reported this year.

During the year 9,664 scholars joined the church, and 12,488 scholars have signed the temperance pledge. The contributions for all purposes amounted to $242,562.38.

KILLED ON THE TRACKS.

Former Plainfield Boy Met a Sad Fate at Dover.

Elmer S. Ball, aged 21 years, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Ball, formerly of Plainfield, now residing at Dover, Morris county, was instantly killed early Friday morning by an express train while walking on the railroad track near his home. The young man was always of an absentminded turn of mind and probably was in that mood while walking on the track Friday morning. The engineer of the locomotive blew his whistle, but he apparently did not hear it. The funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon last at 2:30 o'clock in the Second Reformed church, Somerville.

Miss Scribner Surprised.

The surprise was an agreeable one to the hostess, and she entertained her guests royally. Music and games took up the evening. Several handsome presents were received by Miss Scribner.

BOARD OF TRADE GETS UP FROM ITS SLEEP

An Attempt Made to Inject New Life Into It

MANY THINGS TALKED OF.

PRESIDENT LOUNSBURY'S RESIGNATION WAS NOT ACCEPTED

Mr. Lounsbury Decided That He Would Retire if That Would Benefit the Board to Any Extent, but the Members Wanted Him to Remain as Its Head—Trolley Out Arlington Avenue.

The Board of Trade started out to take on a new lease of life at their meeting Monday evening. There was a quorum present and President Lounsbury was in the chair. After the resignation of Elston M. French was received and accepted, the president arose and stated his position to the Board. He said that for some time past he was fully cognizant of the fact that there was a lack of interest, and he had been investigating matters to some extent. He said that there was no trouble to get a quorum out when the building ordinance was under discussion, or when action relative to the Martin Act was being considered. He had heard, however, that some were dissatisfied with the president of the Board, thinking that some other person, possibly a merchant, ought to hold the position. In view of these facts, Mr. Lounsbury stated that he occupied the position as president simply because he is interested in the city and its welfare. He thought that good work had been accomplished by the Board. He said that he had no axe to grind, no ambition other than that the city might benefit as a result of the Board's existence. It had been remarked within his hearing that "Lounsbury wanted the honor of being president, but was not willing to do any work." In connection with this remark he did not believe that it is the duty of the president to go about the streets with a sign on his back or to even distribute circulars.

After making these few remarks Mr. Lounsbury tendered his resignation as president, and asked J. C. Pope, vice-president, to take the chair, after which he retired from the room while the resignation was under discussion.

Mr. Schwed moved that the resignation be not accepted, and this motion was seconded. This brought forth remarks from L. B. Woolston, who said that he did not believe that it was the duty of the Board of Trade to father real estate schemes. He believed that Plainfield is one of the finest cities in the world. He then spoke of cheap railroad fares, and said that other suburbs of New York were receiving benefit from cheap fares, while Plainfield suffered. He believed the Board should remain in existence, even with a membership of twenty-five.

R. A. Meeker stated that he believed that the Board of Trade had been turned into a real estate exchange to boom pet schemes, now that such a real estate exchange had been started by some other citizens he was convinced that the Board could return to the transaction of business for which it was organized. He did not favor cheaper fares as the retail merchant is bound to suffer. He thought the Board was not dead and they should not accept Mr. Lounsbury's resignation.

At this time Mr. Pope stated the reason Mr. Lounsbury offered his resignation was on account of reports that he had used the Board for political purposes in the last campaign in the city. Rather than be a clog in the wheel of progress, he resigned.

These things were all pronounced untrue and finally by a unanimous vote it was decided to retain Mr. Lounsbury in office. The president thanked all for the vote of confidence. Following this J. C. Pope's resignation was taken up, but the president destroyed it by consent and it did not come before the meeting.

The balance of the meeting was devoted to discussing trolley matters, and it was agreed that strong efforts be made to secure a trolley out Arlington avenue to Metuchen. If the Plainfield company do not intend to build it was suggested and decided that overtures be made to the Brunswick Traction Company. Chas. W. Runyon was made a committee of one to see Superintendent Radel and Secretary Runyon was appointed a committee to learn what the Plainfield company will do.

Another matter discussed was the rate of trolley fare between this city, Dunellen and Bound Brook, and this matter will be attended with a view to securing a five-cent fare both ways.

In conclusion Chas. W. Runyon and J. D. Runyon were elected members of the Board of Management, and J. C. Pope gave notice that he would make a motion at the next meeting to have the quorum reduced from eleven to seven members. The meeting then adjourned.

CALLED SWINDLERS BY THE GRAND JURY.

Foreign Building and Loan Associations Censured.

IMPOSING ON ILLITERATE.

AGENTS ACCUSED OF QUESTIONABLE PRACTICES.

The Grand Inquest Has Investigated the Matter and Finds That Certain Associations Are Imposing Upon the Ignorant Classes of the Community—Stringent Laws Are Recommended.

Elizabeth, May 23—The following is the wording of the presentment made by the Union County Grand Jury against foreign building and loan associations doing business under the laws of adjoining States:

The grand inquest of the body of the county of Union presents to the court:

"That it has been brought to the attention of said grand inquest that certain associations, purporting to be building and loan associations, incorporated and doing business under the laws of adjoining States, are imposing upon the ignorant and illiterate classes of this community to such an extent that the grand inquest deems it its duty to call the attention of this court and the public to the deception practiced by the agents of many of such associations.

"The practice of such agents (whose compensation depends upon the amount of business procured) is to visit the homes of the working classes, and servant girls at the residences of their employers, and to those particularly who have not the time to investigate the truth of the statements made, or the provisions of the constitution and by-laws of such associations, by promising large profits on money invested, and an early maturity of the shares purchased, and extremely liberal terms to those wishing to borrow, to inveigle large numbers of our citizens into investing in the shares of such association, to the inevitable disappointment of and loss to such investing shareholders, who finally become aware that the profits are not so large as promised, that the shares instead of maturing in eight or nine years will, if the association lasts so long, mature in about eleven or twelve years, and that the money when wanted by would-be borrowers has been used in the payment of salaries and commissions to the solicitors of new business. The grand inquest recommends to the public in the Legislature of this State, that stringent laws be enacted for the protection of the people against these foreign building and loan associations and that heavy penalties attach to the violation of the provisions of such laws."

FOR A GLORIOUS FOURTH

CELEBRATION COMMITTEE OF RED MEN TAKE INITIATIVE.

The Hearty Co-operation of all the Societies of the City is to be Sought to Make Celebration a Great Success.

William Newcorn, William Westphal and Howard Wilson, who comprise the Independence Day committee of Miantonomoh Tribe of Red Men, held their first meeting last night in Mr. Newcorn's office and began the arrangements for the celebration.

It was decided to follow the same plan that was pursued four years ago, and ask for the hearty co-operation of all the societies and organizations in the city, both civil and fraternal. A circular letter or invitation will be mailed to them, asking them to appoint a committee from their number to meet the committee from Miantonomoh Tribe in Red Men's hall June 6th.

It is hoped that the societies will anticipate their invitation a little and hold their meeting and appoint their committee this week. In this way the work of the committees will be lessened.

To Put Up a Sounding Board

A sounding board is much needed in the Park Avenue Baptist church, and the Ladies' Aid Society have promised to provide one. There has always been an echo there, at first making it extremely difficult for the congregation to hear the speaker. Wires were stretched across the church from end to end, and this somewhat helped the speakers, by throwing their voices downwards, thus enabling the people to hear more distinctly. But the trouble has not been entirely removed, and the only preventative for the echo is a sounding board. It is said that one will cost $200.

To Confer With Prospective Members.

Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, pastor of the Crescent Avenue church, who has been abroad with the Honeyman party, expects to be home Thursday afternoon and evening of this week to meet any who wish to confer with him in relation to uniting with the church.

QUEEN OF THE TURF

A KENTUCKY WOMAN WHO PERSONALLY MANAGES A STOCK FARM.

Races Her Horses and Has Saved Her Husband From Financial Ruin—Her Methods in Training—Names All the Youngsters and Makes Large Winnings.

Mrs. Ella Offutt Pepper, of Lexington, Ky., is the most noted woman on the American turf. Every one interested in horses, and a great many who are not, knows the story of her picturesque career. The following interview with her, therefore, will attract widespread interest and attention:

Mrs. Pepper is the wife of Col. James E. Pepper, the well-known distiller and turfman. She tells the story of her experience with thoroughbreds in these words:

"I went into the thoroughbred business," said Mrs. Pepper, "by force of circumstances. We had this fine farm here. We had up at a great deal of money in fitting it up. Col. Pepper was very busy with the business affairs of his distillery, and I told him that I would take the thoroughbreds off his hands, and attend to them. The Colonel has spent fortunes in trying to turn money with horses on the turf. He would become too much in love with his horses and would often place them where they did not belong, thus destroying their chances of winning. I believe in estimating a horse that belongs to me as if he belonged to some one else. If my horse is a selling plater I can see it as readily as if he belonged to another, and I tell my trainer to keep him out of stake races in which horses of class are entered.

"As you know, we breed all the horses we race, something few establishments do these days. Science has taught, and it confirms the fact, that water is the first necessity of life. As each horse requires about eight gallons of water a day, I naturally regarded the purity of the water as of vital consequence. I found that the average stock water at our farm came from surface drainage and was, therefore, more or less impregnated with organic matter. I argued that horses to be healthy should have just as good and just as pure water as human beings, so I decided to drill an artesian well.

"At a depth of 200 feet we struck an abundant supply of the finest kind of water. I have had it analyzed and it shows the presence of lime, magnesia and iron—three constituents essential to the building up of bone and healthy muscle and tissue. I believe this excellent water had a great deal to do with the high class shown by my colts and fillies last year, and in the stable I send out this year keeps up the reputation of Meadowthorpe. I will be positive that the water did it. Another thing which, I think, has much to do with the quality of our horses is the way we handle them. We do not do any forcing.

"When we finish the morning work of the two-year-olds we allow them to cool out carefully and then we turn them out on the long grass. They run and jump and seem to enjoy the freedom of the pastures. Before I adopted this natural mode of caring for young horses our veterinary bill was enormous. Some one of the colts was sick all the time. The young things had dampers, fevers, and everything else. Since I adopted the natural method, as I call it, we have had practically no sickness among the foals, and they seem to be much healthier, and capable of standing all kinds of weather without injury.

"I name all my own colts and fillies. I try to give them names suitable to their breeding, although I do not believe in stretching a point in order to combine the name of sire or dam.

Mrs. Pepper's winnings last year were about $50,000 in stakes and purses, and she sold her horses in training for $32,000.

Care of the Teeth.

A well-shaped mouth is often marred if the teeth are not in harmony. The proper care of the teeth is very important; for, if neglected, indigestion results, and this leads to pimples, wrinkles and the general spoilation of the complexion. Use a moderately hard toothbrush, and every morning after breakfast and before going to bed thoroughly cleanse them on each side and inside with soft water and a good powder. Rinse the mouth out also after every meal. Do not use dentifrices that contain acids, as they quickly destroy the enamel. Charcoal powder is good and acts as a tonic for the gums as well as whitening the teeth; moreover, it cleans them out injuring the enamel. The following is an excellent recipe which would be well to have made up, for it not only cleanses the teeth, but takes away any offensive taste or smell in the mouth: Two ounces of areca nuts (gum), one ounce of prepared areca nuts' charcoal. Perfume with a few drops of essence of violets or any other scent you prefer. The soft inner bone only of the cuttle-fish bone should be used, as the hard, fleshy shell removes the enamel.

An Odd Mistake.

There is not a house in any civilized community that can be compared to the one built in Washington by Justice Gray as the supreme court. He designed it himself and it was built according to his plans and specifications. When he came to move in it was learned that the structure did not contain a single closet.

STUDENT TAILORS AT YALE

Two Wide-Awake and Enterprising "Theologs" Startle "Old Ely."

EARNING THEIR WAY.

William Lysander Burbank Collins and Robert Stuart Young are the Men of the Tailoring Firm.

West Into Business Simply as a Means of Earning Their Passage Through the Divinity School—Will No Doubt Be as Successful Saving Souls as Selling Suits.

Two wide-awake and enterprising young theologs in the Yale Divinity school have startled old Elli and the world at large by hanging a tailor's sign on the door in the dormitory known on the Campus as "West Divinity Hall."

William Lysander Burbank Collins, the head of *the firm of tailoring di*vines, who will not write "D. D." after his name for some time, is an ideal theological student in appearance. Tall, spare, almost bony in his leanness, with sloping and stooping shoulders, a full face, close-clipped close, which is less expensive than a shaved face, and eyeglasses that denote the burning of midnight oil.

He is thirty years old, and hails from Keene, N. H., Denman Thompson's native town, and before he was twenty-one built and paid for a home for his parents. Then he set out for an education and was graduated from Amherst.

Room 25, West Divinity, presents a curious mixture of the tailor shop, study and young gentlemen's den.

The tables is heaped with text books and learned treatises on theology, mixed hopelessly with sample books and sample cards, showing the latest patterns for fancy vestings, the swellest thing worn in New York, price $7 to $15," as one announcement of the "student tailors" says seductively.

Student Collins, in reply to a question said:

"Tailoring? Yes sir; why not? Isn't it an honest calling? Isn't it honorable? Isn't it especially so?

"We're doing a smashing business, too. We've got to live, and my partner's got a wife and baby to look out for, too.

"My partner, Robert S. Young, is only twenty-four years old. He's from Pequot, Kankakee, or somewhere in Illinois.

"To tell the truth, the idea is his. He did tailoring at the college and sold $1,000 worth of goods last year. We began in November and we've sold over fifty suits, over $800 worth already, but we've only just begun to advertise, and that's the real training."

At this moment a customer came. He was a fellow-divinity student. He wanted a serge suit.

"Now, I've got a lot of new samples, old man, and I want to show 'em to you," began the Rev. Dr. Collins, blankly, as he opened the sample bundles. This is a line from one of the largest houses in Chicago, and I'll make you a special price on 'em."

The salesman was running over a large book of tailor's samples with the deftness of an expert.

"My partner handled them last year at his college, and I'm telling you they are daisies. I want to get a sample order, and so I will let you have 'em at dollar. Here's the most popular blue serge at $15—I'll let you have 'em at $14.

"Well, they have got a serge down at one of the stores for $10 that looks just like your $15 suit," faltered the customer.

"A ten-dollar suit is always better made; the button-holes don't break out, the buttons don't come off, the trimmings are of better material; you can always tell a good suit and they always fit better," the tailor-salesman divinity student rattled. "Besides blue is the most expensive die used; it is color-fastened."

"The sun will oxidize the color in these cheap serges and turn them brown. They can't sell any of these serges ready-made downtown any cheaper than I'll make 'em to order.

If the Rev. William Lysander Burbank Collins throws himself into the struggle for the salvation of souls as he does into the sale of a fourteen-dollar suit of clothes, there will be a great awakening in the neighborhood of his ministry.

The firm have gone into the business of clothing their fellow students simply as a means of earning their passage through the divinity school and their preparation for that greater work of clothing the souls with the raiment of righteousness.

Apparently they will not have to wait on table at some summer resort hotel during next vacation. Just may themselves luxuriate on the verandas at Newport, Saratoga or in the Catskills—provided shocked conversation doesn't break up their business.

White House Clocks.

There are clocks innumerable—historical and commonplace—in the home of the president of the United States. But one of the clocks is of American make. It was bought by James Monroe and has been retained in the green room. It keeps just as good time as its foreign contemporaries, though in the early days America did not take as a successful clockmaking country.

The clock in the blue parlor was once owned by Napoleon Bonaparte, who gave it to Hortense Beauharnais, who in turn bestowed it upon Washington. It has a frame of alabaster and gilt bronze, and is wound but once a month. It keeps time to-day as accurately as when it was new.

The Lincoln clock is in the red room and is made of ebony and gold. It strikes the halves and quarters as well as the hours.

In the room now occupied by Mrs. McKinley is a clock which has been ticking away for thirty years. The clock with which the public is most familiar is on the stairs leading to the President's office, and many a weary and anxious waiter has watched its hands creep relentlessly across the face. It is an unloved and commonplace. The private secretary has a clock with a cathedral gong which is a good timekeeper.

SALOON QUESTION IN THE WEST END.

One Man Who Thinks a Licensed Place Would be Best.

LOTS OF ILLEGAL SELLING.

QUESTIONS POLICY OF COMMON COUNCIL'S ACTION.

John Dickson Says That the Present Condition of Affairs in the West End Fosters "Cider Joints" and Like, Which Are Far More Objectionable to the Residents Than a Licensed Saloon Would Be.

There is no denying the fact that there are a number of residents in the West End who honestly believe that a saloon below Grant avenue would be a good thing, inasmuch as it would tend to put a stop to illegal selling that is evidently going on now. In view of these facts a resident of the West End, John Dickson, has communicated with The Daily Press and gives some pointed truths concerning the license question in his section of the city.

Upon learning that a recent application for a license in the West End was either thrown out or laid over at a meeting of the Council, Mr. Dickson says, that while he never advocated licensing the liquor traffic it seems to him that there is as unfair distribution of licenses in the West End, as they are all located on West Third street, where between Liberty street and Plainfield avenue there are three, while there are none below Plainfield avenue. Mr. Dickson cites the fact that several applications have been presented for licenses during the past few years and all have been refused, and he wonders whether the persistent refusal is productive of much good to the community. He does not believe that people can be made sober by laws or decree, and if people are denied the privilege of entering a respectable saloon they will defy the law and encourage illegal selling.

Still further, Mr. Dickson says, that if those who oppose the granting of a license on Grant avenue lived in that vicinity they would be convinced from observation, especially Sundays, that two evils choose the least," and would grant a license to someone and thus end a disgraceful condition of affairs. He says that he fully believes that there is more drink illegally sold, "not a hundred miles from Grant avenue," one day in the week than there is in some of the licensed saloons in the centre of the city for a whole week. He believes that the Council is simply voting for illegal selling, illegal buying, drunkenness and immorality in its worst form.

THE YALE MISSION BAND

EFFORT TO BE MADE TO STIR UP UNION COUNTY.

Members of the Band to Visit Several Places in This Vicinity — Meeting in the First Baptist Church Here.

The Yale Student Volunteer Band, who have aroused so much enthusiasm among the young people of large cities, will conduct a missionary campaign in Union county Friday evening of this week, members of the Band visiting Plainfield, Westfield, Elizabeth and Rahway and holding mass meetings in the interest of missions.

The churches and young people's societies of all religious denominations are expected to join in the movement and great results are hoped for in an increased interest in missions.

The meeting in Plainfield, which will be held in the First Baptist church, will be one of special interest. Addresses will be made by members of the Band whose names will be published later and the programme which has been carefully arranged by the committee in charge contains features which will be of unusual interest to those who attend.

It is believed that a large and appreciative audience will greet the Yale men in the First Baptist church, and all who come will receive a hearty welcome.

Special attention is called to the fact that there will be no collection taken at the meeting.

Had His Toes Crushed.

The work of laying the rails will commence at once. There are eight car loads at Westfield and six at Cranford.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthropist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital Formula, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be in charge head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of a friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $5 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who especially objected to their giving a testimonial which should publish her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other women that like me, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the selling manager will notice that a permanent customer is made in some other person similarly afflicted to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, however, still objected, but glad about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

THE HERO DEAD WERE HONORED BY VETERANS

Elaborate Memorial Day Exercises in Plainfield.

GRAVES WERE DECORATED.

PATRIOTIC SERVICES IN MUSIC HALL IN THE AFTERNOON.

Young and Old Veterans, Their Sons, and School Children Visited Cemeteries in the Morning—A Patriotic Address by Rev. George C. Wilding, of Elizabeth—Soldiers Monument Spoken of.

For the first time in two or three years the Memorial Day parade was not interfered with by rain or threatened weather. Forming on East Front street, the long lines of scared veterans, their sons, a group of young men who volunteered their services to their country during the last war and many school children went over the line of march, decorating the graves of the dead heroes as they went.

The parade started promptly at 9:30 o'clock. It formed as follows: Platoon of police, marshal and aids, Queen City band, platoon of Winfield Scott Post, school children, Sons of Veterans, school children, soldiers of the late war, school children, platoon of Winfield Scott post, school children, with another platoon of the post, armed, bringing up the rear.

I. L. McVoy was marshal of the day. The first cemetery visited was the Presbyterian cemetery in North Plainfield. This and the Evergreen cemetery was decorated by the post. Details of G. A. R. men in command of comrades visited other cemeteries in this vicinity and did likewise.

S. V. Commander Andrew Cox took charge of the detail to decorate the graves in the Seventh Day and Hillside cemeteries; J. V. Commander W. W. Conklin detail to decorate the graves in the Friends, Catholic and Scotch Plains cemeteries; Comrade Robert Milligan took charge of the detail that went to Westfield, and the graves at New Market, South Plainfield and Samptown were looked after by those living in their vicinity.

There were two graves for the soldiers of the late war to decorate, and their company was divided into two platoons, under command of Comrades Peterson and Bolstedt. Stages were provided for those who went to Scotch Plains, Hillside and Westfield.

At 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon the exercises in Music Hall began, the building being crowded. The stage was decorated with stacked rifles and flowers, and in the center was the representation of a grave, the headstone marked "To Our Unknown." The members of the Grand Army and a number of clergymen occupied the stage. Commander Charles B. Stevens presided.

After patriotic selections by the Queen City Band, Rev. W. C. O'Donnell offered prayer. R. C. McGue read the G. A. R. general orders and President Lincoln's Gettysburg address, the post took part in brief opening exercises, and Chaplain John Goodwin offered prayer. A quartette from the Sons of Veterans sang "The Blue and the Gray," then the speaker of the occasion, Rev. George C. Wilding, of the St. James Methodist church, Elizabeth, was introduced.

Mr. Wilding spoke first of his personal experiences at the beginning of the war of '61. He lived just by Mason and Dixon's line, and the war feeling was very strong in the town. Many of his mates joined the army, and he himself went so far as to enlist, but was refused by the examiners on account of his small stature. His father was engaged in sanitary commission work, and the boy helped work for the soldiers whenever opportunity offered. He described vividly scenes on the drilling ground, the intense sympathy with the army which pervaded the town, and the gloom which settled over it when two of the older boys were left dead on the battlefields of Cedar Creek, and others came home crippled or to die of their wounds. After these personal reminiscences Mr. Wilding spoke of the good which results from the observation of Memorial Day. He said that it stirs and keeps alive the finest feelings of the heart; teaches bravery, sacrifice, gratitude and patriotism. He referred with strong commendation to the custom of keeping the holiday in the public schools, saying that love of country should be taught next to love of God.

Rev. William C. O'Donnell made a strong plea for the co-operation of the whole city in the work of raising a soldiers' monument, patriotic selections were given by the band and by a choir of young girls dressed in white

VISITED SEWAGE BEDS.

THE STATE SEWERAGE COMMISSION COMES TO PLAINFIELD.

Commissioners Went to the Beds in Company With Mayor Rockfellow and Street Commissioner Andrew J. Gavett.

Last Monday afternoon Plainfield was visited by the State Sewerage Commission, a commission that was created by an act passed last winter by the Legislature, and it has entirely to do with sewage matters. The commission is made up as follows: Wm. T. Hunt, of Newark, chairman; John Hinchcliffe, treasurer; Col. Chas. W. Fuller, Chas. F. Harrington, David L. Wallace, and Boyd McLean, secretary.

The commissioners were met at the North Avenue station by Mayor Geo. W. Rockfellow and Street Commissioner A. J. Gavett, and were taken in a wagonette about the city and to the sewage beds, the principle object of interest, for which the commission visited Plainfield. The Mayor handled the reins and escorted the visitors about in his usual affable manner, while Mr. Gavett furnished the details.

Down at the sewage farm two beds were found to be dry and they were harrowed, and two other beds were in a state of being dried. The remaining fifteen beds were completely covered with water, owing to the severe soaking they have received since last winter. As a matter of fact since last December there has been 250,000,000 gallons of water emptied on the beds, and it will take some little time for them to dry out.

An invitation was extended to the commission to visit the beds in July, and they signified their intention of so doing. While they were here they asked innumerable questions, and thoroughly posted themselves on everything connected with their mission. They did not express themselves in favor or against the system or as to what they saw. The commission seemed to be well pleased with the city and its surroundings.

Why Women Are Nervous.

(British Medical News.)

The frequent cases of nervous prostration or utter collapse of the nervous system under which women "go all to pieces," as the saying is, have caused much thought and investigation on the part of physicians.

Certain inorganic substances are well-known to cause various forms of nervous diseases which are readily traced to the poisons producing them. Further research leads to the belief that alum is a prevailing cause of so-called nervous prostration, for the symptoms it produces on the nervous system after its absorption into the blood are very remarkable indeed. Experiments physiologically made upon animals by Orfila, Professors Hans Mayer, Paul Selm and others, show that alum frequently produces no visible symtoms for many days after its introduction into the body. Then follow loss of appetite and other alimentary disturbances, and finally a serious prostration of the whole nervous system. The most prominent physicians now believe that "nervous prostration" and many affections of the nerves from which both men and women suffer are caused by the countinued absorption of alum into the system.

It is probable that many medical men are unawares of the extent to which salts of alumina may be introduced into the body, being under the impression that the use of alum in bread is prohibited. Alum, however, is still used surreptitiously to some extent to whiten bread, and very largely in making cheap kinds of baking powder. In families where baking powder is generally used great care should be exercised to procure only those brands made from cream of tartar. The alum powders may generally be distinguished by the lower price at which they are sold.

Cutting Bicycle Tires.

Persons who own bicycles want to exercise a little more care as to where they leave their wheels in the future. Of late there has been someone about cutting tires with a penknife, and several have suffered in consequence. A few nights ago wheels owned by Warren Marsh, C. E. Hepburn and Lawyer W. S. Angleman have been subjected to treatment, while standing near their places of business. In each case a long incision was made in the tire making repair difficult and in some cases hopeless.

MANY PLAYERS ON GOLF CLUB GROUNDS

Match Play at Both Hillside and Park Clubs.

CONTEST FOR CHAPMAN CUP

MISS SAIDEE HOWELL DISTINGUISHED HERSELF ON PARK LINKS.

Both Clubs Were Visited by a Large Number of People—Social Features Enjoyed in the Clubhouses—Parker Mason and C. W. Fisk Made the Best Scores for the Chapman Cup.

With every condition favorable for golf there was an unusually large crowd of players and interested spectators on the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club grounds yesterday. During the day there were over one hundred players on the course, and the sight was one long to be remembered by all present. The clubhouse was a delightful rendezvous for those who did not care to go on the course, as the social features throughout the day were very pleasant.

The event of the morning was the first round play for the Chapman cup. There were eight contestants and the scores were rather close. H. B. Stockton beat Frank Talmage by 1 up and 19 holes; C. W. Fisk beat Lester Glenny by 2 up; Parker W. Mason beat Augustus Fisk by 3 up and 1 to go, and Morris Dumont beat George Van Boskerck by 5 up and 4 to go.

The semi-finals were played in the afternoon when there were some surprises. C. W. Fisk beat H. B. Stockton by 3 up and 2 to go, and Parker W. Mason beat Morris Dumont by 5 up and 3 to go. Next Saturday the finals will be played between Parker W. Mason and C. W. Fisk, and a lively contest is expected.

The beautiful grounds of the Park Golf Club were sought yesterday by an unusually large number of golfers and persons interested in the game. The interest was equally divided between the morning and afternoon, when a lively contest was held for two cups, offered by the club, for the low net net scores made by lady and gentleman members, eighteen holes, continuously, medal play.

There were very few women who entered the contest, but a large number of gentlemen. Miss Saidee Howell won the ladies' cup by a net score of 136, and Miss A. G. Ball won second place with a score of 143. Through a misunderstanding Miss Daisy Elsberg only played one round, and at a late hour she decided to go the second. She did not, however, beat Miss Howell's score.

G. W. Cooley won the cup for the Gentlemen with a net score of 84, but the play of Aubrey Crowe was especially noteworthy, he making a score of 86 with a handicap of 4. The detailed scores are as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
G. W. Cooley	114	30	84

DEATH OF MRS. KIELY.

Wife of Police Sergeant Passed Away Last Night.

The death of Mrs. Lizzie Kiely, wife of Police Sergeant Patrick Kiely, occurred at her late residence on West Fourth street last night at midnight. She had been a sufferer for two years with an aggravated tumor near the brain, and although six operations were performed, and the best of medical care given the patient by Drs. Endicott and Boone, of this city, and Professor Powell, of New York, recovery was impossible.

Mrs. Kiely leaves two little children, a girl of eight and a boy of four years of age. Born in Queenstown, Ireland, she early in life came to this country. The funeral services will be held Friday morning from St. Mary's Roman Catholic church. Interment will be in St. Mary's cemetery.

Early Excursion to Seashore.

There is considerable rivalry existing as regards the arrangements for the first excursion out of Plainfield for the seashore. The First Baptist church set their date early in July and felt sure they would be the first. Announcement is now made that the Crescent Avenue church and its missions will go June 8th, and this will undoubtedly be the first excursion out of town.

HIGH SCHOOL BOYS WON

RUTGERS PREPS DEFEATED BY A SCORE OF 10 TO 5.

Principal Feature Was a Two Bagger by Claude Edwards—High School Has Won Two Out of Three Games With Preps.

In a well fought game the Plainfield High School baseball nine defeated Rutgers Preps Tuesday afternoon at the Crescent Oval by a score of 10 to 5. As the High School has now won two out of the three games played with this nine Plainfield stands at the head.

The game was well played from start to finish. No brilliant plays were noticed, the only feature being a two bagger by Claude Edwards. The runs came in by ones and twos except in the fifth inning, when the Plainfield men brought in four.

The High School lined up as follows: Edwards, p.; Squires, c.; Morgan, 1st b.; Mason, 2d b.; Craig, 3d b.; Fisher, s. s.; Millar, r. f.; Dreil, c. f.; Randford, l. f.

The score by innings:

Rutgers	0	1	2	0	0	1	1	0	0	1—5
High School	2	0	1	0	4	0	2	1	0	—10

This is the next to the last game that the High School will play this year. Saturday afternoon they cross bats with the nine from the Bachelor's Club on the oval, and after that will disband for the summer.

Pond's Team Victorious.

The Pond's baseball club crossed bats Tuesday with the Dunellen team and gave them a defeat which they will not soon forget. Dunellen had her strongest team in the field, but it did not figure in the result. Squires, Pond's pitcher, tangled them all up in their sweaters and left him. If it had not been for a few costly runs they would not have scored at all. The game was witnessed by a crowd of rooters, who whooped 'em up for both sides. Dixon made two fine catches at his life, and Martin's wonderful catching won much applause. Dodd made a four-base hit, but the umpire called it a foul. Derfinger played a strong game in right field. The teams lined up as follows:

POND.		DUNELLEN.
Squires	c.	Mumford
Martin	p.	Fetcher
Derfinger	1b.	Hartley
Dodd	2b.	Tenney
Dixon	ss.	Chalf
Pond	3b.	Taylor
Morgan	lf.	Smalley

Squires	rf.	Cushing

SCORE BY INNINGS.

Pond	2	3	0	2	5	1	0	0	0	—13
Dunellen	0	0	0	1	4	0	0	0	0	—5

Other Games.

About two hundred people witnessed the game of baseball Tuesday on the Y. M. C. A. field between the Black Diamonds of Morristown and the team from St. Mary's school. The contest was lively from start to finish. The home team won the game in the eighth inning when they scored four runs. The score was 8 to 6.

A nine calling themselves the "Unknown" defeated the law students in a game Tuesday morning by a score of 20 to 11. Moore, Hand, R. Schoonmaker, W. Schoonmaker, Conan, De-Camp, Drake and Rosebury, were the "Unknowns." The students who played were Nash, Henry, Clark, Quinn, Pope, Guides, Linbarger, Baker and Denton.

At Westfield Tuesday, the Orients of this city defeated the Yellow Jackets of Westfield, by a score of 17 to 12. The game was played on the South Broad street diamond. A. Conway and F. McClurg were the battery for the Orients, and Drainard and Jackson for the Westfields.

A team from Elizabeth was defeated by the Woodsides of this city on the golf grounds Tuesday by a score of 12 to 10.

The Plainfield N. A. A. played a team at Somerville Tuesday and won by a score of 27 to 11.

CALVARY BAPTISTS RECOGNIZED.

The New Colored Society Accepted in Afro-American Association.

A number of colored pastors, representing the Afro-American Association, gathered at the Calvary Baptist church Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock and officially recognized that congregation as a regular Baptist church. Rev. Wm. Mill, of Newark, was elected moderator, and Rev. J. A. Harris was chosen clerk. After the investigation into the cause of organization, doctrine and practice, it was unanimously agreed to recognize the church.

In the evening Rev. E. E. Jackson, pastor of the Mt. Olive Baptist church, by request, preached the sermon on the subject of "A Holy Ghost Succession of the Church."

Fred Bowden in the Cavalry.

Chas E. Bowden, of Spooner avenue, spent Saturday visiting his brother, Fred Bowden, formerly of this city, but now of the Second U. S. Cavalry. He will leave today for Cuba. The Cavalry has been stationed at Bedloe's Island.

PASTOR SHOTT GOES ON WITH REFORM WORK

Arousing His Parishioners by Holding Cottage Meeting.

OLD TIMERS DON'T LIKE IT.

BUT THEY ARE UNABLE TO MEET THE MINISTER IN ARGUMENT.

A Few of the Old Residents Have Had Personal Interviews With the Parson, but the Latter Has Disconcerted Them by His Rapid Fire Talk About the Poor Morals That Prevail.

Scotch Plains, May 31.—In pursuance of his announced purpose of starting a reform movement in Scotch Plains to elevate the plane of morals prevailing there, Rev. G. M. Shott, pastor of the Baptist church, has already commenced holding cottage prayer meetings to discuss the subject of town morals, and out of which he believes the reform movement will grow.

Last night a cottage prayer meeting was held at the home of Mrs. John Robison, wife of Freeholder Robison, which was well attended by the members of the church. Similar meetings will be held frequently and in this way Rev. Mr. Shott thinks he will be able to learn how much support he may secure from the townspeople in conducting his crusade against sin and iniquity in the place.

The agitation of Rev. Mr. Shott has not proven popular in some circles, however, as some of the old-timers are considerably wrought up by the disclosures which the reverend gentleman's remarks have brought up. Some of the old residents, who are inclined to favor the hotels for the business that they bring to the town, have taken it upon themselves to call upon the minister personally and tell him that he was there to preach the gospel and not meddle in the affairs of the place as he is doing now. It is said that in such interviews the minister has argued with such force and frequency that the protestors have been at a loss to meet the parson's arraignment of the town's morals and have been compelled to retire in embarrassment, but not a little disgruntled.

OPENING OF THE HUNTERSTON.

Major Coleman Will be Ready for Business Tomorrow.

The Hotel Hunterston, under the management of Major Coleman, long and favorably known in the hotel world, will be opened and ready for business today. Major Coleman, assisted by Mrs. Coleman, who is a thorough-going business woman, has been at the Hunterston for sometime getting things in readiness for the season, and they have made numerous changes and improvements that will add to the pleasure and convenience of those who will be their guests this summer.

The house will open with a considerable number of guests, and already Mr. Coleman has a large number of distinguished people booked for the season. By July it is expected that the hotel will be filled with guests who will bring a return of the brilliant and successful days of the hotel when first opened a number of years ago.

In the course of a couple of weeks Major Coleman will give a reception and ball to Plainfielders to introduce his management, as it is his intention to make the Hunterston a pleasant place for Plainfielders to visit at any and all times.

FOR RESIDENTIAL PROPERTY.

S. D. Drake Obtains Control of the Denton Property.

S. D. Drake Wednesday consummated a deal whereby he is to secure control of thirty acres of land owned by the Dentons at Netherwood Heights. The first papers have been signed for the delivery into the possession of Mr. Drake, and he will immediately commence the work of putting the property in condition for development for residential purposes.

It is his intention to have streets surveyed and building lots cut out within a few weeks. Mr. Drake purposes to boom this property for high-class residences to the best of his ability. He has not yet settled upon a name for the section.

A Surprise Party.

MISS JACKSON'S RECITAL

YOUNG PEOPLE DO FINELY IN PHYSICAL CULTURE AND RENDERING.

The Reception Held in the Casino, Which Was Crowded With Admiring Friends—Programme Carried Out Smoothly.

The annual reception of Miss Addie Parker Jackson's classes in physical culture and rendering was given in the Casino of the Union County Country Club Monday evening and was a very enjoyable affair. The room was filled to its utmost capacity, many guests standing through the whole programme. The ushers were Miss Katherine Wolcott Dwight, Miss Saidee Mae Howell, Miss Frances Phillips and Miss Helen Phillips.

The programme opened with a paper on Physical Culture, written by Miss Jackson and read by Miss Marie Newman. The paper described the need and value of physical culture, and the best methods. After a description of the hygienic exercises favored by the Emerson system, selected members of the class, little children, gave representative movements as an illustration. The esthetic exercises were then described, after which six older girls, gowned in white, went through a drill including many of the movements for teaching grace.

"Sackcloth and Ashes," a very bright dialogue between Miss Elizabeth Macanesy and Miss Marion Beardsley, was the next number, after which a number of individual recitations were given. These were as follows: "The Women of Mumbles Head," Miss Elie Harold Serrell; "What Happened in Church," Miss Helen Adams; "The Chase of the Ginger-bread Man," Jerry Manning; "The Fifer and Drummer of Solitude," Miss Jean Dunham; "The Duel," Chauncey Runyon; "The Scarlet Hood," Miss Lillian Macfay; "Saved Four Hundred," Miss Alice Conant.

Miss Stephanie Krom then gave an amusing monologue, "A Telephone Romance," then came other recitations: Dorothy, "Miss Jennie Darrow; "A Twilight Pastoral," Miss Edith DeLong; "Riding Down," Miss Laura VanCampen; and "What Ailed the Pudding," Miss Margaret Abbott. A recitation to music, "The Quaker," by Miss Wilhelmina Patton, introducing a very graceful dance; and a costume recitation, "The Seasons," in which Miss Laura VanCampen appeared as Spring, Miss Margaret Townsend as Summer, Miss Lizzie Budlong as Autumn, and Miss Norma Northrop as Winter, closed the programme. Miss Mabel Maxson acted as accompanist.

The entire programme was carried out with perfect smoothness, the young students all taking their respective parts very creditably. The physical culture drills were pretty and graceful, the young women in the dialogue and monologue acted with ease and naturalness, and all those who recited appeared thoroughly to enter into the spirit of the stories they were to tell. Some of the pupils who appeared in the recital of last year, showed a remarkable improvement, and those that time and even the youngest children showed an unexpected command of voice of power of understanding.

Miss Jackson and all the performers received beautiful gifts of flowers. Hearty applause all through the evening showed the appreciation of the audience, and at the close congratulations were showered on the students and their successful teacher.

NOT HELD FOR KIDNAPPING.

Elsie Tier Frightened in Court and Italian Was Dismissed.

Michael Pianzo, the Italian ragpicker who was arrested Monday noon because it was thought then that he was attempting to kidnap Elsie Tier, could not be held on that charge when tried before City Judge Runyon in the afternoon, because of insufficient evidence. Little Elsie was so frightened when facing the crowd of spectators in the court room that she could not tell what had happened.

But when he was arrested the police found a big pistol in his pocket. For carrying concealed weapons he was fined $5, which he paid. Michael stoutly denied the charge of trying to induce the little girl to follow him.

Bayonne Firemen Burned Out.

The fire department house occupied by Protective Company, No. 5, of Bayonne, was totally destroyed by fire Tuesday. The members succeeded in saving a few of their belongings, however. Among them was the pedestal which Engine Company No. 2, of this city, presented to the Bayonne firemen.

Memorial for Late Aaron M. Powell.

At the yearly meeting of the Friends' Society in New York Tuesday night a memorial service for the late Aaron M. Powell, of this city, who died in Philadelphia two weeks ago, was held.

BUT ONE EPISCOPAL CHURCH FOR BOROUGH

Rev. W. Montgomery Downey Will Be the Rector.

HOLY CROSS DECIDED IT.

MOTHER CHURCH ACCEPTED PROPOSITION OF CHURCH OF REDEEMER.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy Presented the Matter in a Letter Read at a Meeting of the Vestry Monday Night and Favored the Proposition Made by the Committee From the Church of the Redeemer.

A great change was effected in Episcopal church circles last Monday evening when the Church of the Holy Cross and the Church of the Redeemer were united, after being apart for a period of nearly five years. The trouble and the separation of the two churches has been one of the most notable in this State. To it will be remembered that the trouble arose over difficulty that Rev. T. Logan Murphy had with Mr. Miner, who was organist of the Church of the Holy Cross, and which resulted in the latter being discharged. A division in the membership followed and thus the Church of the Redeemer was formed.

The reverses in the condition of affairs was a source of worriment to Rector Murphy, who had served the church so long and faithfully, and finally his health broke down. Then followed his resignation. At once rumors of consolidation were current, and, as a result, it was decided Monday evening at a meeting of the vestry and choir of the Church of the Holy Cross, by a vote of 16 to 5, to accept the proposition made by the Church of the Redeemer. The principal point in the proposition is that Rev. Wm. M. Downey, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, is to remain in his position in the consolidated church.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy presided at the meeting and he presented the following communication, in which is incorporated the proposition made by the Church of the Redeemer and accepted by the mother church:

May 29, 1899.

Dear Parishioners:—A most important matter which deeply concerns the interests and future welfare of this parish is to be submitted to you tonight for your rejection or approval, namely:

Whether two separate parishes, the Church of the Holy Cross and the Church of the Redeemer, shall be united as one parish, under the name of the Holy Cross.

This matter is of vital importance to the Protestant Episcopal Church in this borough. For it determines whether the church shall be united or divided against itself. There can be but one proper answer to this question, namely, that the church should be united and not divided. I have always held this view and the members of this church have also.

During this month of May the rector, wardens and vestrymen of this church received a communication from the like body of the Church of the Redeemer as follows:

"At a regular meeting of the Church of the Redeemer, held on the first day of May, 1899, it was resolved that a committee of three be appointed to take such steps as they shall deem advisable to secure a conference with a similar committee from the vestry of the Church of the Holy Cross, upon the subject of a consolidation of the two churches. That such committee report to the vestry at a special meeting to be called and held after such conference. The rector appointed Messrs. Alexander, Dupee and Perkins as such committee.

A. E. Faber, Jr.,
Clerk of the Vestry."

This letter was presented at a regular meeting of our vestry, held May 4th, when a like committee of three, consisting of Messrs. Carman, Barker and Gallup, was appointed to confer with them upon the subject of consolidation of the two parishes.

A conference was held and our committee reported that the members of the Church of the Redeemer desired to consolidate their parish with this church, under the name of the Church of the Holy Cross, and that they were willing that the consolidated church should assume and pay the debts and obligations of both churches; that four out of seven vestrymen of the consolidated church should be selected from the present members of the Church of the Holy Cross, and that they would retain our present organist and sexton, provided that their rector, Rev. William M. Downey, was accepted as rector of the consolidated church, for they were legally bound to

SWALLOWS AT SUNSET.

With gleaming bow-ms lifted high,
And poised on st-ong exultant wings,
They circle down the sunset sky
To happy twitter'ings.

With every facile turn and wheel
The rose-gleams paint their amber throats,
And flash a hundred glints of steel
Back from their burnished coats.

Now, in a span that balks the sight,
They sweep o'er hill and marsh and main,
Then, with their swift and joyous flight,
Lo! they are here again!

Or low or high it little recks,
Or far or near it is the same,
Their rapid undulation flecks
The world with hints of flame.

O fair and tireless ones, my thought
Both chafe within its fleshly bond;
I too would rise, impeded not,
To the serene beyond.

A RASCAL FOILED.

Judge William Richards was putting away his papers one winter afternoon, preparatory to leaving the office for the day, when he was interrupted by the entrance of a tall, well dressed young man, who said he wished to consult him on a very important matter. It was the holiday season, and the judge was the last one left in the large office building, but he acceded to his visitor's request and courteously offered him a chair.

The stranger took a cigar from his pocket and lighted it, glancing sharply about the room meanwhile and spoke in a brisk, business-like manner.

"Judge Richards," he said, "before telling you my name and business I wish to mention a few incidents in your past life and also to touch on your circumstances at present. I see you are surprised, but I wish you to see that I know a good deal about your affairs; then my business with you will be more readily understood."

The judge nodded, wondering.

"At the age of 21," the stranger continued, "you commenced practicing law in this city. A year later you disappeared out west and were gone two years. Almost immediately after you came back you made a great 'hit' with a brilliant speech, and business began to come your way. You settled down, worked hard, and your success was great. You have a big practice, are an ex-circuit judge, and 18 months ago you missed an election to Congress by only a few hundred votes. Another election will occur in about six months, and you are sure of winning. Mining investments you made out in Colorado have yielded enormous returns, and you are reported to be worth between $200,000 and $300,000. Your social position is high, and—pardon me—in ten days you will be married to Miss Holt, the only daughter of Senator Holt, the most distinguished and aristocratic man of this section of the country. I am right so far, I believe?"

"Yes," replied the lawyer, "right enough, but I must say I fail to see how my private history can affect any legal business you may have with me."

The stranger laughed easily.

"Perhaps when you hear my business you may not call it strictly legal, Judge Richards"—he paused to relight his cigar—"I am a little hard up at present, and so I came to you. I want $10,000."

"Oh, you do?" ejaculated the astonished judge.

"Exactly—$10,000. The day before yesterday you deposited $15,000 in the First National Bank. Most of it, I believe, was to go for a certain ornament you are to give to a certain young lady, but I want $10,000 of it and must have it. Blackmail you understand."

"Well, I'll be d——d!" said the judge faintly.

"Yes," laughed his visitor. "You certainly will be, socially and politically, if you do not provide for my necessities."

"Well, you certainly are a cool one," ejaculated the judge, slowly recovering from his astonishment, "but before I turn over the trifling sum to you, perhaps you will kindly enlighten me as to the obligation I am paying off with it."

The judge had recovered enough to be ironical, but hardly very angry as yet.

"That's only fair. Hear one part of my story that I omitted a moment ago. While out west you met a certain May Robbins. Remember her?"

The lawyer made no reply.

"Well, I had a talk with her some time ago, and she says that she is your wife. What do you think of that?"

"Think of it? I think that it is an unmitigated lie."

"Oh, indeed! Well, what do you think of this?" And he took from his pocketbook a folded sheet of note paper, and handed it to the judge.

He read slowly:

"My Darling May:—I got to the Point all safe in the night and leave for the coast early in the morning. I will send for you and the little one in a few weeks. The sheriff managed to wing me, but it is nothing serious.

Your affectionate husband,

W. H. R."

The judge looked keenly at his visitor. "Well?"

"This is your writing I believe?"

The judge nodded.

"And the initials of your name form the signature. Now what do you suppose would happen if I showed that note to Senator Holt?"

For reply the lawyer tore it into small bits and tossed them into the fire.

"Oh, that's all right!" said the other cheerfully. "You surely don't suppose I was a big enough fool to give you the original, do you? That was a copy—tracing paper, you know. Now, judge"—and he dropped his bantering tone—"come down to business. You don't want Senator Holt to see that note. Give me $10,000, and in 24 hours the note shall be in your possession, and I will be out of the way."

"Pshaw—bosh!" said the lawyer contemptuously, "don't be a fool! Don't you suppose that a note like that can be explained away? If your woman—what's her name, May Robbins—has any documents, bring them out and I may talk to you. In the meantime what I intend to see that you work out your term in the penitentiary."

"But you acknowledge your writing?" asked the stranger, ignoring the threat.

"Yes, I wrote that note, but if you know anything about it at all you know that I wrote it for that gentlemanly thief and all around scoundrel, Harry Roberts, after the Sheriff had shot him through the hand and he could not write a bridge."

His visitor lighted a fresh cigar and gazed calmly up to the ceiling.

"Judge," he said, "I hardly expected you to give in just because of that note, but I thought I might as well try it at first, especially as a favor, you might say. Now listen to me. We are alone here. No one is around to listen. I never like to bluff when I hold a good hand. So I am going to make honest confession, and if my hand don't profit by it, maybe my pocket will. I know as well as you do that that woman is not your wife, but I must have money, and I would not hesitate to swear that she is. Harry Roberts, who afterward married her, saved your life on one time. I first came out to that country a 'tenderfoot.' So when he got in trouble and had to skip out to open up your cabin on the Point with his hand all smashed to flinders, and you felt called upon to protect him, I was his wife for him and to help him out of the country. He was caught however, and hung afterward, so he is out of the way.

"Now the case stands this way: I am a tolerably well educated man myself, and it was no great trouble for me to take May's marriage certificate and make William Henry Roberts read William Herndon Richards. If you remember May, she is unscrupulous. I had a friend in the county office, and I managed to get in there and change the license the same way. So you see we have documents a-plenty. You'll give me the $10,000 before noon tomorrow or I will show your note to Senator Holt. I can commence legal proceedings to compel you to provide support for your wife, nee Robbins."

The judge was mad clear through now, and he rose up and started for his visitor with blood in his eye. The stranger sprang behind the table.

"Sit down, sir!" he cried, "or I'll let you have it through the pocket." And the lawyer saw that he was grasping a pistol in the side pocket of his coat. He was by no means a coward, but he did not care to run against a pistol bullet. And so he took his seat again.

"That's better," commented the stranger. "There is no need of violence in this matter, I hope. I don't want to hurt you. Just cool down a little and consider my proposition for a few minutes; then tell me what you think of it."

"I don't have to consider to tell you that you are the most unmitigated liar and scoundrel unhung," said the judge, keeping his temper with difficulty. "But I don't suppose that a man who is so shameless as to confess himself the lying blackguard that you have to me can be affected by anything I can say, so I will spare myself the trouble of expressing my opinion of you. But you are as great a fool as liar. Admitting that you have the license and certificate—which I have no proof of except the word of a confessed liar—don't you know that it would be the easiest thing in the world for me to prove by dozens of people in Red Gulch that Harry Roberts and this woman were living together as man and wife and that I lived by myself? Don't you know?—

"Now judge," interrupted the stranger in a pained tone, "I don't try any bluff on you, but up and tell the whole truth like an honest man, and yet here you are a-bluffing already. Nobody knew whether this woman was married to Roberts or not, and nobody cared. The miners and others who lived in a mining town like that was not usually overparticular as to their morals. Besides, Red Gulch is a dead town now, and has been dead for five years. Where would you go to find a single man whom you knew there seven years ago? Now listen to me. Suppose you don't give me the $10,000? What happens? I go to the senator with my proofs; the senator puts his foot down on a certain marriage; you may call it a blackmailing lie; the senator says my evidence looks pretty strong; that you must prove it a lie. Then you have a nice job on your hands. You have got to hunt up a lot of people that you have not heard from in years, and you should happen to find some of them not one would be able to swear that the Robbin woman was married to Roberts or was not married to you. All of that would ok me and money and accomplish nothing in the end.

"On the other hand, give me the money—and $10,000 is cheap, too, I tell you—and in 24 hours all the documents are in your possession, and I am out of the way. If you don't, think what a little story to the senator means for you."

The judge obediently thought, and it was not pleasant thinking. He did not believe that the woman could win the case with her forged documents, but this fellow was just the kind of a daredevil to go to the senator with his story and then to law. The senator would certainly postpone the wedding, and there would be a long delay. Even though his daughter did not believe the story, she would suffer. Of course there would be endless talk and gossip. The story would be in the papers, old pranks of his younger days would be raked up, and even though he cleared himself finally there would be a bitter sting left. There would be many to say that where there was so much smoke there must be some fire. Then his political aspirations! The election was to come off in six months. Nice campaign material the scandal would make for his opponents!

These thoughts and many more flashed through the judge's mind, and he glared at his visitor savagely. He hadn't a doubt that he meant every word that he said. Through his light bantering tone there ran a vein of earnestness and confidence that was more dangerous than any loud blustering would have been. He was confident that he had a "good thing" when he called up the judge.

The judge's good thing seemed to lie between paying out $10,000 in cash or having a big scandal on his hands.

Suddenly a smile flashed across his face, and then the lips were compressed tightly, as if determined not to let the change of expression.

"Well," said the judge, "I must confess that this is a pretty tight place. Maybe we could discuss it better over a drop of liquor."

He arose and opened a handsome mahogany cabinet that fitted snugly over the low mantel. In another minute whisky, water, sugar and glasses were placed hospitably on the table.

"Fill your glass," said the lawyer, graciously. "Ten thousand dollars is enough money to deserve some consideration before being parted with. Bring your chair around in front of the table. It must be cold back there."

He pulled his chair close up to the fire and the stranger did likewise, so that they were sitting right in front of the grate, with their faces not four feet from the smouldering flames.

Anyone looking in would have thought that they were two old friends taking an evening toddy together.

"Now, then, sir, your scheme is simply to blackmail me out of $10,000, I believe?"

"Exactly so, judge."

"And you think you have a pretty good thing of it?"

"Sure of it."

"If I understand you rightly, you say I must give you this money, or you will go to Senator Holt and tell him that I have a wife living out west, and then you will go to law to force me to give money to this woman, but if I give you the $10,000 you promise to turn over the proofs to me and leave the country?"

"Yes, that's just it."

"At the same time you admit that all these documents of yours are forgeries and that the letter you have of mine was written for another man who happened to have my initials?"

"Oh, of course that note was written for me, but if you let it go to law I wouldn't hesitate to swear just the opposite, and I defy you to prove that I am lying."

"Well, you certainly are candid. Aren't you a little afraid to acknowledge all this so boldly?"

"Not a bit of it."

"Maybe you are right," muttered the judge. "Just wait a minute."

He stepped over to the big desk in the corner, and when he turned he was grasping a pistol.

"Now my young friend," said he, pointing it at the visitor's head, "you sit where you are and listen."

He reached in the cabinet over the mantel and touched a spring. There was a phonograph concealed in the back of the cabinet, and he started it when he got out the brandy. Now he reversed it and attached a funnel-shaped device, and the whole of the conversation came out in tones that could be heard all over the room. The judge sat facing the stranger, holding his pistol and smiling pleasantly.

The stranger's face was a study. Surprise, rage, fear came and went, and were finally succeeded by a look of comical disgust.

When the last word was finished the lawyer could hold in no longer, and burst into a hearty laugh. The stranger glanced up in surprise, and his look of cool impudence returned.

"Judge, I tell you what we'll do. Give me $100 and we'll call it square."

"Cool as ever, are you, my cheerful liar?" laughed the other. "Now maybe you will tell me why I should not send you to the penitentiary?"

"Oh, you don't want to do that. You are going to be married next week, you know, and you would not like to think that your marriage meant the beginning of a long term of suffering to one of your fellow mortals."

"The judge was pleased at getting out of what a little while before was a sticker a tight place that he laughed again.

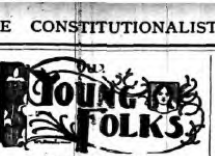
"Well," said he, "you come back here to-morrow at 9 o'clock and bring all your little documents with you, and we will see what is to be done. In the meantime you need not try to slip out of town, for I am going to put the police to watching you right away, and, my boy, before you try this kind of bluffing again let me advise you to study up all the latest appliances for thief catching," and they walked down the stairs together.

Just as they reached the street a handsome double seated sleigh dashed by, and the stranger cried:

"Oh, Will, Will, have been looking for you! Come and take tea with us, won't you?"

"Thanks! Delighted!" And the judge threw away his cigar and climbed in.

His late visitor plunged his hands in his pockets and stood looking after him blankly and said, "Just my final luck!"



SOME PIE AND Q'S.

Pray, little lads and lasses gay,
One lesson do not lose,
As through the world you wend your way
Oh, mind your p's and q's.

For while P stands for pears and plums,
For pleasantness and plays,
For patience and for promptitude,
For peace, politeness, praise;

Yet, lackaday! it leads in pert,
In pinches, pique and pain,
Perverse and petulant and pry,
And also in profane!

Q stands for Quaker quietness,
For quinces, quality,
For quickness and for queenliness,
For quaint and quittance free.

But then, it holds quake and quail,
And querulousness indeed,
All quibbles, quarrels, quips and quirks,
And quacks it serves at need.

Then watch them, little maids and men;
For folks will soon excuse
Full many a fault and foible, when
You mind your p's and q's.

WHAT JOE DID KNOW.

Joe Covell was just beginning to have a really good time with the Centerville boys. He was supposed to be paying a visit to his Uncle Frank and Aunt Emmeline, but he really put in the day finding out how different Centerville was from New York, and how like boys are the world over. The boys in Centerville went barefoot and he didn't have to tease Aunt Emmeline at all to let him do so. But, of course, when it comes to getting in the shade of the Carmichael barn and bragging there could be no doubt that New York exceeded Centerville, and Joe kept Will and Alexander Carmichael and "Hooky" Gibbs and Fred Myers and Hen Thomas as much entranced as Marco Polo did the people of his day and time with his stories about the far east.

Hen Thomas wasn't at all pleased. It may be because he was the biggest and was just about the age when he thought he was the smartest. He had been undisguisedly admired by the other boys till Covell came.

"Ye-es," sneered Hen, "I've heard you make your lyings here before. Whadda you think, fellers? He says that in New York the houses is so close together 'at they tech each other!"

"They do so!" protested Joe.

"Geddout!" scorned all the boys together.

Joe had his blood up, and there would have been a regular quarrel then and there if "Monkey" Reynolds had not come along at that moment and held up his hands. Now, when Monkey knows means, "I'd a go swimmin'."

They all trooped off, forgetting the dispute. Joe was as glad as anybody that they were going swimming. That was a sport in which he was not to be beaten. He was at the head of the class there. He knew tricks in swimming that none of the boys in Centerville knew. As a diver none of them could come up to him, and he could do "the steamboat" and "tread water," and all the regulation acts, besides being a wife and enduring swimmer with the sailor stroke.

Joe got to telling about the surf at Long Branch and the undertow and the tides and all, when Hen Thomas, who loved to torment smaller boys, slipped up behind him and pushed him under water in the middle of a wave. Joe came up gasping and choking and full of wrath. He shot water with his hollow palm into Hen's face.

The big fellow gasped for breath, but he dragged Joe down deeper and held him under until Joe's head rung and his ribs nearly burst in the effort not to breathe. There was something like jealousy growing in Hen Thomas' heart and a wild sense of wrong raging in Joe's.

He and the others made for the bank where their clothes were.

"Let's go away and leave him," said Will Carmichael. "I know a place down by the copperas banks, a little further down stream. They're only as deep as this. We'll walk across where the little island is and go swimming on the other side."

They started off, all but "Hooky" Gibbs. Either he didn't want to come with them, or he was afraid of Hen Thomas.

They had crossed the river from the side Hen Thomas was on and trotted on homeward, meaning to cross by the covered bridge. They followed the narrow path, winding in and out among the bushes on the banks, and as they chattered along Will Carmichael called out: "Cheese it, fellows! What's that hallowing?"

"Help! Help! He's drowning! Drowning!" It was "Hooky" Gibbs' shrill voice.

They ran up stream toward the Sycamore swimming hole. Gibbs was out in the stream up to his waist pointing to the deep hole and shrieking.

Joe saw Hen Thomas' head of his clothes, and as they got opposite where Gibbs stood shivering and crying, he dashed in, swimming his swiftest stroke.

"He's down there about," moaned Gibbs. "He said he had a cramp." Joe dived down, but fetched nothing. Again and again he came up, shook the water out of his eyes and nostrils, took a good long breath and fought his way to the bottom against the buoyant waters. They roared and thundered in his ears and made the red sparks come in his eyes as he strove to see in the dull current. His foot slipped on something soft. It felt like flesh. Instantly he stooped and slipped his hand under the body and strove to lift it to the surface.

But Thomas was caught in some weed or was clutching it, Joe never knew which. It took a wrench to dislodge him, and when it seemed he could stand it no longer the body came up, scarcely any heavier than the water, and Joe got the breath he was dying for.

Joe clutched Thomas' long foretop, and swam for the side of the river nearest where the other boys were. Fred Myers and Sandy Carmichael stripped and plunged in to give a hand when they saw him rise to the surface.

"Reynolds!" gasped Joe, between breaths, "light—a fire—quick!"

Reynolds and Will Carmichael began frantically to gather up dried leaves and dead grass and last year's corn into a bonfire, that sent up its first wreath and crackling blaze as the loud splashing of the boys' feet in the shallows announced that they had brought their burden to land.

"O, Joe, he's dead!" whimpered Reynolds, when he saw how stark and ghastly the white figure looked.

"He will be if you don't do something!" said Joe. "Make that fire burn fast, and you, Will, you're as big as your two fists in there to heat."

Reynolds had got the stones in the fire and was alternately fanning the blaze and piling on the fuel a handful at a time, so as not to smother it out.

"We want something to cover him with," said Joe. "Now, you don't you let go his tongue. Will, you rub his hands. Sandy, you take his feet. O, harder! Harder! Rub harder! Reynolds, as soon as you get those stones hot let me know." In the meantime Joe was kneeling over the prostrate body. He pressed both hands on the floating ribs till the air gushed out of the throat. Then relaxing the pressure, he let the elastic ribs spring back and the air rush in. Again and again, and yet again, with regular movements, as if one were inhaling and exhaling deeply. He listened for the heart beat. No sound.

"They're hot!" cried Reynolds.

"Roll 'em over here," answered Joe. Reynolds and Sandy, and partly by tonging them and partly by pushing them, got two hot stones at Thomas' feet. "Wrap 'em up in something, so they won't lose their heat too fast. Keep his feet covered up. Now, get two more up here by his armpits. And tell Gibbs not to come to stop crying and go for the doctor!"

Reynolds shouted across the darkening river to the scared boy to run for Dr. McDowell, and to be sure and tell him to come over by the covered bridge.

"I'm not going to give it up for a whole hour yet," promised Joe. "I've heard of people working longer than that and still rescuing drowned persons. I've heard of them working four hours. Get some more hot stones" Put 'em to," he was going to say "better to burn him than to let him die."

Joe steadily pumped air into the lungs of Thomas, pressure—rest; relax—rest. In the quiet evening air they heard the thunder of a horse's hoofs trotting in the covered bridge at the farther end, buggy wheels striking the gravel of the road outside.

A feeble flutter made itself felt under the fingers of Joe's right hand.

"Hooray!" shrilled Joe, and the others joined in the chorus as they chafed at the flesh, now beginning to lose a little of its chill.

Just then there came a crashing through the underbrush, and Dr. McDowell ran down to where the excited boys were.

"Good! Good!" he cried when he saw what had been done. "You are boys after my own heart. There's mighty little left for me to do."

"Dress him the best way you can, now."

They were getting him into his clothes when Henry's eyes opened, closed again, then opened again. He saw Joe Covell. It seemed to anger him. He snarled, "You think you're smart, don't you?"

"Don't you mind him," said Dr. McDowell. "You boys know how to make a saddle by crossing your wrists. That's right. Now carry him right through there and I'll take him home in my buggy. Don't you mind him, my boy," he said, putting his arm around Joe. "He'll be all right when he knows what you've done for him."

And so he was. There was nothing Henry Thomas would not do for Joe Covell, and the very next day Mr. Thomas himself brought Joe a beautiful poney and said: "This is yours. I and Henry thought more. I hope you'll put it to as good use as what you do know."

A Novel Craft.

Two mechanics of East Oakland, Cal., have constructed and patented a novel craft designed for use on the Yukon River, and which they claim can travel as speedily on ice and snow. The boat consists of two long tubes of aluminum, provided with a rudder and double runners for use when the boat is propelled over the ice or snow-covered ground. The motive power is the same as on a bicycle, scoop-formed pedals working in water, and the canoe can also be used on the ice and snow-covered ground in addition to rubber-tired wheels.

WOMAN'S WEAPON.

"What is a woman's weapon?"
I asked a charming girl.
She dropped her lashes shyly
And stroked a vagrant curl.
Then consciously she murmured
This rosebud newly out—
"I have a strong suspicion
Her weapon is a pout."

"What is a woman's weapon?"
I asked a lover true.
He turned him to a maiden
With eyes of heavenly blue.
Her velvet lips were parted,
All innocent of guile,
And eagerly he answered:
"Her weapon is a smile."

"What is a woman's weapon?"
I asked a poet then.
With sudden inspiration
He seized upon his pen.
"Oh, I could name a thousand!"
But woman's surest weapon,
I grant you, is a tear."

TO-MORROW AT NOON

For hours before the Chicago express entered the Grand Central Station a passenger in the sleeping-car Arcadia was in a state bordering on frenzy.

He had smoked so many cigars that the porter regarded him with apprehension. He had stamped up and down the aisle so fiercely that a baby had shrieked in fright whenever he appeared. He had cursed so horribly that the ancient spinster in the section next his had been on the point of swooning several times.

He was a big, athletic fellow, with a ruddy complexion, determined lips, and eyes like gray velvet, with black lashes and brows. His face would have been noticeable at any time, but now, crowned with an enormous silver-embroidered sombrero and distorted with impatience, it was doubly conspicuous.

"That cowboy must be getting ready to kill somebody," said the commercial man from Omaha to the railroad man from Buffalo.

"Either that or he's going to see his girl," replied the other.

The railroad man was a keen judge of human nature. Tom Weir, ranchman from the Valley of the River of Lost Souls, Col., was on his way to New York to find he's sweetheart.

As he sat moodily biting an unlighted cigar and counting the mile-posts he recalled, as in a dream, his meeting with the exquisite creature he was seeking. It was in the heart of that clear, bright morning when he rode jingling and clattering into Durango, just as the train from Alamosa was pulling up to the station; how he threw himself off his mustang and joined the crowd of "cowboys, miners and ranchmen" on the station platform to see the passengers alight.

He heard again the murmur of admiration as she stepped from the train and walked through the throng with the air of a prince.

His heart bounded gladly as he recalled the massive, red gold hair, the luscious lips, the eyes of most unholy blue—the blue of the mountain sapphires—and the graceful svelte form.

His thoughts shifted to the afternoon when he was introduced to her at the ranch adjoining his own. She had come to visit her school friend, the wife of his neighbor. He remembered her wonderful pink gown with clouds and billows of lace, the tiny fan she wielded so coquettishly, the rings on her white fingers. She looked like an angel to the big, clumsy, bashful, unmannerly ranchman—a pink and white angel with a halo of dazzling blonde hair.

Poor Tom Weir then and there lay his great, unsullied, honest heart at her tiny feet. From the first moment she spoke to him he was her prisoner.

Now he thought of those heavenly days that followed; the long walks and rides in that glorious air that mounted to their heads like champagne; the nights when the great red moon swung over the snow-covered mountain peaks; the first and last kiss, the tender confession, the sweet surrender and the solemn betrothal.

And now he was going to see her!

Two years had gone by since the girl of his dreams had left Rocky by to him; since he had held her on his brawny breast and with swimming eyes and husky voice had begged her not to forget him.

She had written him often sweet, kind, tender letters, letters he had kissed and cried over and put under his pillow at night. She had kept her word. She had not forgotten him—that radiant creature. O, where was a man so madly happy as he? And O, now was done for him.

And so he was. There was nothing Henry Thomas would not do for Joe Covell, and the very next day Mr. Thomas himself brought Joe a beautiful poney and said: "This is yours. I and Henry thought more. I hope you'll put it to as good use as what you do know."

Servia's Drum.

In the Servian army the big drum is fixed on a two-wheeled cart, which is drawn by a large trained dog. The drummer walks behind the cart.

"Cannot see her this evening!" he demanded imperiously.

"Why, no," she said, with astonished eyes, " of course not. No one ever sees her in the evening!

"When can see her?" he felt himself going hot and cold by turns.

"You might possibly see her at noon to-morrow," snapped the maid. "She's never up before noon." Then she shut the door with a decided bang.

Tom was furious, hurt, angry, suspicious. What did it mean? Art, a carriage, living in luxury. Never up before noon. Suddenly he stopped and cursed himself for a mean, pitiful cur that he should suspect her of anything but the good and pure and womanly. To-morrow—to-morrow at noon, he would see her. Everything would be explained, and on his knees he would beg her to forgive him for his unworthy suspicions.

As he entered his hotel he ran into a man from Denver whom he knew. They shook hands and adjourned to the bar. Tom was honestly glad to see him. To tell the truth, the ranchman was lonely and a bit homesick.

"Got the dumps?" laughed the man from Denver. "Come, brace up! Go to the theater and amuse yourself. Let's see. Go to the Gotham. There's a great show there. Out of sight. Say, but there's a girl there that's a beauty. The town has gone wild over her. She is on only for a few performances, then leaves an impression. 'I'll see you to-morrow about noon. Good-night—in a —— of a hurry," and he was gone before Tom could tell him that to-morrow at noon he had an engagement.

The theater was crowded. The stage was peopled by bona fide pretty girls with brazen smiles and alluring eyes. There was plenty of fun and music and dancing and laughter.

But Tom was not interested. Perhaps his lonely life had not fitted him to enjoy such a thing of frivolity. Perhaps the heart that had always reverenced womanhood despised the dubious jest, the offensive innuendoes. He wondered as he looked about how nice women could bear to listen to such stuff.

At times he lost sight of the stage. "To-morrow at noon," ran in his mind. It throbbed through the melody of the orchestra, it resounded in the strains of song. The violins breathed and whispered and sobbed the refrain over and over, "To-morrow — to-morrow at noon."

At last the stage was darkened. He heard some people next him talking about the beautiful woman who was to pose as a statue. He leaned forward. The theater was crowded. The curtain stood a woman with masses of clustering hair falling over her white shoulders. Her superb form stood out like marble against the somber background.

What was it the men were calling out as the carriages rolled up to the door of the theater? Oh, yes, how stupid of him! "To-morrow, at noon," of course. And what did all those blazing letters read in the glittering arch along the crowded thoroughfare, "To-morrow at noon—to-morrow at noon."

He went to his room. He laughed as he flung himself upon his bed. "To-morrow—to-morrow at noon."

The man from Denver knocked on his door and rattled and shook it. "Wake up Weir!" he shouted, "wake up. It's Darling of Denver. Come, you lazy beggar, I want you to go to luncheon with me."

There was no answer.

"Wake up, Weir!" he called again, banging the door with his fist.

But no answer returned from the silent room, where the brawny form lay stretched upon the bed and where the blood was slowly trickling down from the white forehead in which the ranchman's sure bullet was buried.

Fine Churches in Manila.

By far the most striking characteristic of Manila is the number, size and splendor of the religious edifices. Though the walled area is only about 250 acres in extent, within these limits are half a dozen churches, including a cathedral. The spires and bell towers of these massive structures form the most picturesque characteristic feature of the city. The oldest of the existing churches, that of St. Augustine, was founded more than 300 years ago. That it has withstood the typhoons and earthquakes of three centuries is proof of its solidity and also of the ability of its architect, a nephew of the builder of the Escurial at Madrid.

WOMEN'S REALM

A PRETTY EVENING DRESS.

Black and White Spotted Mousseline de Soie Over Pale Blue.

The engraving gives a good idea of a pretty costume for dinner or a small evening party, with effects produced by the blending of tulles one over the other. It is made of black mousseline de soie, with white silk spots embroidered on it in relief rather close together.

It is made up over a skirt of white satin, veiled with pale blue mousseline de soie which produces the effect of a shot material. The satin skirt is skin tight, the fulness increasing from about half-way down to about forty centimetres from the bottom, at which point it widens very considerably down to the ground. The two lighter materials are slightly supported around the waist, and follow the movement of the satin with a little more fulness. The skirt is trimmed around the bottom with six rows of black velvet No. 3, running all around the skirt and about their own width apart. The lowest row forms an edging.

The corsage is of the same material as the skirt. It is cut very low and square, all around it is gathered in the waist and widens "en corbeille" in the upper part. The edge is ornamented with a braid of blue and white shot, embroidered with a pompadour garland of small roses and foliage in their natural colors. The waistband is made of three rows of black velvet, showing the material of the corsage between them. It is wider at the sides than in front or behind and fastens in the centre in front with a long oxaille buckle in gold in two tones. The sleeves are long, with nothing between them and the arm. The material is slightly gathered in the upper part along the inner seam, so as to form a slight drapery. The lower part is ornamented with bands of black velvet running around in the style of the skirt. The cuffs are frilled and gathered and fall over the hand.

The headdress is composed of a tuft of pale blue feathers and a black aigrette placed in the centre of the hair rather far back.

Brushing Hair Backwards.

Have you tried brushing your hair the wrong way? I know a little woman whose hair had long been thin and scraggy. She was in despair, having used a host of different tonics without benefit, when a French maid suggested brushing the hair the wrong way, assuring her mistress that in Paris this is a favorite way of grooming the hair.

The American woman decided to try the experiment. Her maid carefully divided the hair into many small parts and then, with a huge and very stiff brush, began her work. Holding the extreme end of the strand to be brushed in her left hand, she started at the bottom of it and brushed upward toward the head. After each strand had gone through this process the maid smoothed each hair back into its original position.

Now the woman brushes her hair in this manner each night and morning. She declares it has proved more beneficial than an expensive tonic.

Eternal Youth in Skirts.

That is what this skirt shows. A dress will outlast its linings many times over. Especially that part of the lining which swings against the feet in walking. Cut the lining off as far up as it is worn, with a pointed edge. Then sew a band of fancy silk, different from the rest of the skirt lining, all around the bottom of the skirt, joining the pointed upper edge to the old lining with a row of braiding. Bind the skirt with one of those famous bindings warranted to tear up paving stones before wearing out, and the skirt will be as fresh and prettier than ever.

HOW TO DRESS THE HAIR

Pretty Coiffures That Are Becoming to Any Style of Beauty.

There are various ways of wearing the hair, but they all founded upon one way—the loose coil at the middle of the back of the head, with an enwirroning puff all around. The variety is achieved by having the coil low or high; by parting or pompadouring the front hair, and, lastly, by wide range in fancy pins and head-dresses that is offered just now. There is nothing of more consequence in coiffures than

how the back of the hair looks. It gets by far the largest share of the hairdresser's attention, and all appreciative women themselves fully realize the new importance which this always important detail has attained. In the first cut we have a rear view of the conventional coiffure of the hour. Instead of the three puffs, a less complicated coil is often seen, but the crimped all-around pompadour effect, the Empire comb thrust just below the puffs and the small tuck comb above the nape of the neck are typical of nine out of every ten heads one meets everywhere.

A PARTED POMPADOUR.

What sounds like an anomaly, but which is really a very pretty style of wearing the hair, is parted pompadour, is shown in the second cut. The hair is elaborately waved and rolled back as in the regulation pompadour. The puff is at the back of the rather wide, however, for directly in the middle there is a deliberate part. A few short curls on the forehead add to the unusualness of this coiffure. In the back the hair is twisted quite low near the nape of the neck.

GENERALLY BECOMING.

A generally becoming way of wearing the hair is that represented in the Laird illustration. It is a happy compromise between the aggressive pompadour and the straight brushed-back style. The hair is crimped slightly and thrown back from the forehead in a graceful fluffy puff that has nothing artificial about it, in appearance at least. There are a few tiny ringlets upon the forehead. The back hair is coiled quite high and is supported by an Empire comb.

A Coat That Cost $1,000,000.

The most expensive coat in the world, worth $1,000,000, is owned by Lady Brassey, of London. She recently sent it to a charity bazar to place on exhibition, after insuring it for $500,000.

Outside the fact of the fabulous price attached to this remarkable coat it is a work of art. The foundation is of the hemp grown in the Sandwich Islands, and to it are sewn with fine thread the perfect feathers of birds found only in the Hawaiian Isles. The feathers are arranged as smooth and as thick as they grow on the breast of birds.

Around the magnificent cape runs a border of crescent shaped figures made of crimson and gold feathers. The yellow plumage is of priceless value, as it is plucked from only one bird, found on the island. Black feathers from the back and head of the same bird enter largely into the composition of this wonderful cloak, which was twenty years in making.

The great skill with which the feathers are attached to the hemp foundation, and the vast amount of labor required to complete it, make it the most marvelous piece of feather work in the world. The market value of the feathers determines the price of the cloak, and in that way it has been adjudged worth $1,000,000.

Get Plenty of Sleep.

Sleep starvation is a common fault, especially of the young. Dancing all night two or three times a week is possible for a time, but there is harm in it. In general, it may be said that any one who has to be alarm-clocked out of bed every morning isn't getting enough sleep. The evil effects may not at once be felt, but they exist. A person should feel perfectly rested upon arising in the morning.

TRAINING THE VOICE

DEVELOPMENT OF THE VOCAL CORDS A MATTER OF GYMNASTICS.

Instructions Which If Followed Will Ensure Good Results—Too Much Work Is Injurious—Something to be Avoided—When and How to study.

The training of the voice is a question of gymnastics—even of pathology, says a well-known singer. The development of the vocal cords is as much a matter of gymnastics as the development of the arm or the leg or any muscle of the body. It would be impossible to give in detail a method that would fit all cases. You might as well try to train a painter by correspondence or expect a great doctor to treat and cure an illness without having ever seen the patient. The method of training must be modified in its application to each case. It must be adapted to special conformations in the individual.

But there are certainly true and important principles that must be observed in the training of the voice. I have seen them tried since my childhood in my mother's case. Through them I have heard small voices increased ugly voices made agreeable, broken voices saved, fine voices made marvellous and all trained to sing forever—unless some great illness rendered the singer entirely incapable.

What are the main rules that must be observed? First there is the emission of the sound. This must be by a precise but not shocked way of closing the vocal cords—what we call the attack. There is single pure sound must be definite, but not abrupt in its utterance.

In the second place there must be diaphragmatic breathing. The girl must breathe from the diaphragm. There is breathing from the upper part of the lungs, there is lateral breathing and there is diaphragmatic breathing. In the last method a full breath is taken, the diaphragm is pressed down and all parts of the lungs are inflated and the air is emitted in a full, firm column. The proper method of breathing is one of the very first things a girl must master.

A third important point is the training of the three registers in a woman's voice except in the case of contraltos, in which the third or upper register sometimes has not to be employed at all.

Nasal sounds must be avoided in singing. So must guttural sounds as well.

A girl must never practice one register or some notes separately. This does not give uniform and proper development. She must never work quickly, but all work must be done slowly and with a full voice. The exercise in this respect must be exactly like every other muscular exercise no effort. The thing desired is to get a happy medium.

The singer must not work much at a time. She must at first work by minutes, gradually increasing the time, but never singing more than half an hour at a time without rest. Everything that can be done to improve can be done in half an hour's practice. Any more is overwork, nerves, and a tired muscle never improves.

Always work with a full voice. Never hum and never shout.

The physical part of the work should be with the brain only. Never study a piece of music with the voice. Study it with the mind only until you know it thoroughly, then apply the voice, and always the full voice.

Remember that the voice is not a wooden box, like a piano, but a marvellous instrument, made up of our own flesh and blood, of the essence of our brain and heart, and that with it we can best give expression to the feelings of the soul.

Trousseau in a Wishbone.

Probably the brightest idea of the holiday season was a brownie duster or wiper of a new type. The idea came clear from Wisconsin, where it was found at a raffle fair.

The foundation for this novelty was a wishbone from a hen. A little black wax was added to the slides of the top of the wishbone, and a bead put on each end of the bone to make it stand level. A ballet skirt was then adjusted, hanging straight down from the neck and embroidered around the edge. A poked hat of the same material, edged with beads, was fastened to the head, two beads stuck into the wax for eyes, and the whole bone painted black.

The appearance of this wishbone

WISHBONE TROSSEAU.

brownie is then of a hen in the face, and a broad white binding ribbon bow or necktie finishes it off nicely. The young woman who conceived the idea added mugs to its popular sale by pasting this little verse on the front as a sort of breastplate:—

Once I was a wishbone
And grew upon a hen;
Now I am a little slave
And made to wipe your pen.

She put about half a dozen of these upon the market about two weeks before Christmas, and there were so many demands for them she had to get help, and finally sold more than a thousand of them right to herself. The girl with the bright idea made enough money to buy herself a trousseau.

Household Hints

To Make Bathrooms Attractive.

No matter how small a bathroom is, it can always be made fresh, dainty and comfortable, if properly fitted up with the many labor saving and comfort giving appliances that are now obtainable.

It is well to have the walls and floor match if possible. Should tiles or hardwood be too expensive, there are many attractive designs in tile paper that look well on the walls, and by treating the floor with linoleum in a corresponding design a charming effect is produced. Many of the tubs are of porcelain, but if this is not the case they can be made to resemble porcelain by painting them white. In front of a tub nothing is prettier than the fresh-looking white bath mat. The sponges can be kept sweet and clean by placing them in open racks suspended over the tub. These racks come in nickle and are most desirable, but those made of the twisted wire answer the purpose exactly as well and are less expensive for the time being. When enamelled to match the tub or the prevailing tone of the room.

Two or three shelves placed conveniently are not too many, and when enamelled with white they give an air of freshness to the room. The china mugs toothbrush holders, soap dishes, etc., are more dainty than those of silver and much easier to keep clean. Of course, there is almost an unlimited number of bathroom conveniences, but with a few dollars and a small outlay of thought bathrooms can be made much more attractive and convenient than they are generally.

two purposes in having a table top on the back that can be turned up for use at a moment's notice.

Children's Courtesies.

It is significant to observe how some men fail to know how to treat their wives and sisters when they meet them. It seems to them quite unnecessary to lift their hats or to give their nearest and dearest a courtesy they would freely render to any woman outside of the domestic circle. This should not be, and the sooner a revolution is accomplished the better. The habit and most persuasive treatise in the etiquette of the home will not be able by itself to work the change, although it would be helpful toward that end. What is needed is the right training of boys and girls. Courteous behavior should be enforced by parents in the same way as other good qualities are taught.

One of the most successful instructors of the young in our day bears this testimony: "From my comparison of the way children behave and lay the blame of their behavior on the day school, but if they would only make the children do the things they are required to do in school, matters would be different. They laugh at the child when he lifts his hat or says 'Please' or 'Thank you,' forgetting that others are trying to make up for their neglect of duty." This word in season should stir up parents to a sense of the importance of correcting by precept and example the requirements of domestic etiquette.

Ages of French Brides.

The Hachette Agmanac for the current year gives some very interesting statistics in the age of brides in France. Only 13 out of 100 young women marry between the ages of fifteen and twenty. From twenty to twenty-five years the average is 60 out of 100. The further from her twenty-fifth year the maid travels the slimmer are her chances of matrimony. Up to thirty years the nuptial chimes ring out for 22 out of 100.

Maids from thirty to thirty-five years old have 6 out of each 100; from thirty-five to forty years, 6, and from forty to forty-five years only 5 in 100 There is only one lucky female in 100 who marries when between forty-five and fifty years old.

It must not be supposed, however, that after fifty oblivion covers the feasts of Cupid's kindness. Even when between the years of sixty and sixty-five there is a chance for one maid among 200.

The strongest competitors maids have to encounter are the widows, for they marry with equal if not better chances than their sisters.

A Notion About Pressing.

Do not press the sleeve or dress waist seam on a flat surface. Keep a board for the purpose made from a rolling pin sawed in half lengthwise, so that it will rest firmly on a table beneath the weight of the iron, and then adjust it as you would an ironing board. It supplies just what is needed, a curved smooth surface.

THE MONEY QUESTION

IESPONSIBLE FOR WOMAN'S RELUCTANCE TO MARRY.

A Man Should Carefully Instruct His Wife Regarding the Value and Proper Use of Money—A Trusted Woman Is Proud of Her Husband's Prosperity.

However advanced the world may be said to be, however quickly we may grasp and adopt new fads, fancies and notions, and however much we may think we have improved upon old times and former usages, there are yet a great many things that are susceptible of decided betterment.

Among these the management of household affairs stands out prominently, especially that phase of it that involves the financial understanding between the husband and the wife.

For a great many years it was thought the women were not capable of managing their domestic concerns as far as money matters went. There was, to an extent, some show of reason in this idea, and in some instances there is yet, but, as a rule, the existing state of things is just about as bad as civilized people are capable of making it. A little analysis of the situation will readily discover why this is so.

A man of more or less mature years, who has made or is making a competence or a good living, marries a young woman, sometimes scarcely more than a child. She has been in school almost all her life, and has never accepted any responsibility in money matters other than to be expected to make her allowance buy candy and other petty luxuries. If the money were all gone she went without confectionery and trinkets until next time, and it was just as well, perhaps better. This constituted her limit of financial experience. Her bills were paid, her necessities provided for, incidentals were looked after and shortage was made up. Whatever she wanted in excess of this she coaxed or cried for until she got it, or maybe was sulky, sullen or disobliging until the coveted article was forthcoming as the easiest way out of the unpleasant state of affairs.

Fairly launched upon the sea of married life, that condition in which young people feel at liberty to do as they like, her natural inclinations, untrained and unguided in the bud, blossom out into extravagant and unreasonable demands, and feeling perfect right and fault for whatever she desires trouble comes sometimes suddenly and without warning. It is safe to say that money matters are responsible for more domestic infelicities than all other causes combined. The man is not long in discovering that his wife manages badly, and he tightens the purse-strings. Instead of carefully instructing her in the use of this necessity of life, he becomes arbitrary and often unreasonably penurious in many cases, that all articles shall be bought on credit and the bills sent to him to overlook.

There are few things in the world more annoying than a systematic espionage of this sort. It is humiliating and puts the mistress of the house on the level of an irresponsible child. How much better it would be to arrange at the outset some fixed method in which forbearance on both sides forms an important part. Honorable, straightforward business methods have very little reason to fear the knowledge what their wives may have of their business. It is only when illegitimate pleasures and indulgences are to be provided for that there is any occasion for such secrecy.

A woman who is confided in and trusted will, as a rule, feel quite as much pride in and interest in her husband's prosperity as he himself does, and if a financial crisis, or, when business is depressed, for a well-informed woman to curtail expenses and suit her demands to the exigencies of the situation. But where there is no understanding or confidence, where money is literally doled out and that too in the most grudging manner, a feeling of resentment sometimes arises, and the idea prevails that there must be just so much contention anyway in order to get what is required. Under such circumstances it is no wonder if the demands are excessive and infelicities follow fast upon one another's heels.

The money question, more than any other, is responsible for the reluctance of women to marry and their ambition to provide a competence for themselves.—By N. S. Shwell.

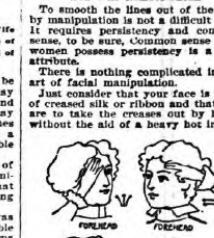
ABOUT FACE WRINKLES

Common Sense and Persistent Manipulation Will Remove Them.

To smooth the lines out of the face by manipulation is not a difficult task. It requires persistency and common sense, to be sure, Common sense most women possess persistency is a rare attribute.

There is nothing complicated in the art of facial manipulation.

Just consider that your face is a bit of creased silk or ribbon and that you are to take the creases out by hand, without the aid of a heavy hot iron.



Instead of dampening with water, as we would to remove creases from silk, apply a little good skin food to the surface to be manipulated to soften the texture and cause it to more quickly respond

Begin with the forehead and press gently but firmly, making the movement that would take the creases out of silk.

That is to say, the movement the reverse of the formation of the lines.

Next the lines under the eyes should be gently ironed with the fingers.

Then the cheeks, and here the movement should always be an upward one, as drooping lines are very far from becoming.

There are two cheek movements—one direction toward the lines near the mouth and the other toward restoring the flaccid muscles that give the sunken appearance just below the cheeks.

The neck movement should be from the centre of the throat under the chin to the back of the neck.

Take Seats on the Floor.

It is the custom of nearly every young girl to sit on the floor while putting on her shoes. Indeed, many women keep up the habit until middle age, though full-fledged womanhood not infrequently displays such embonnet as would make such a course difficult. Even in the case of a stout woman, according to the statement of an English physician, sitting on the floor is advisable as giving exercise such as those of portly dimensions and the lower part running down to the bottom of the skirt. The fur trimming down the sides of the apron continued around the sides and back of the skirt. The waistband is of white satin, quite narrow, and is fastened in the centre, in front, by a large enamel buckle in the Byzantine style.

The Art of Crying.

"Very few women know how to cry properly," said a cold-blooded observer, "but if they realised how potent tears are as a weapon they would be less apt to waste or squander them gracefully. As a rule brunettes cry much better than blondes. I call to mind, for instance, a very pretty girl who was a litigant in court some years ago, and who wept when a certain portion of the testimony was reached. As the orderly proceedings went on the tears began to swim. They seemed to grow larger and darker, and they took on a wistful and appealing look that made a man like the jury look fast as if he wanted to climb right out and hit the plaintiff with a club. Her eyes were perfect fountains, and two great tears rolled softly down her cheeks. That settled it. I was foreman of the jury, and we were out exactly a minute and a half in giving her a verdict. Now, if that had happened to some other woman, equally worthy, but of lighter complexion, the chances are her eyes would have turned pink and her eyes would have assumed a slightly inflamed appearance that would have been—er—very damaging to her cause. And a man, as he usually do, I can't say what the result might have been. A woman who can cry artistically can have anything she wants. I'm surprised it isn't taught, like Delsarte movements."

WOMEN'S REALM

WHITE SATIN TEA GOWN

Full Explanation of This Pretty and Effective Indoor Dress.

The indoor dress shown herewith is of white Liberty satin. It is made in the princess style. The corsage is cut low and round, and is slightly draped on each side over a front of white mousseline, de soie, across which is a St. Andrew's cross in English application insertion. Down the sides of the front run bands of bison fur, which are continued round the shoulders and down the skirt to the ground. The edge of the decollete is ornamented with English application insertion, bordered with scalloped ruches of white mousseline de soie. The sleeves are full length, and descend very low over the hands; they fit tightly and are ornamented at the shoulders with a sort of epaulette, forming jockeys, which are cut by the fur trimming.

They are trimmed round the wrists with insertion and with gathered lace undersleeves, which fall over the hands. The skirt is long all round and has a short train. It fits very closely in the upper part round the sides and back, the front being quite flat. It increases gradually to about half way down, and then falls more into godets, extending to the bottom. The satin is ornamented with four rows of English application or equal width, which run round the sides in a downward direction, coming closer together at the back. The satin skirt opens over a broad gathered apron of white mousseline de soie over satin of the same color, which is ornamented with a St. Andrew's cross like that of the corsage, with the upper part prolonged into a square and the lower part running down to the bottom of the skirt. The fur trimming down the sides of the apron continued round the sides and back of the skirt. The waistband is of white satin, quite narrow, and is fastened in the centre, in front, by a large enamel buckle in the Byzantine style.

The Art of Crying.

"Very few women know how to cry properly," said a cold-blooded observer, "but if they realised how potent tears are as a weapon they would be less apt to waste or squander them gracefully. As a rule brunettes cry much better than blondes. I call to mind, for instance, a very pretty girl who was a litigant in court some years ago, and who wept when a certain portion of the testimony was reached. As the orderly proceedings went on the tears began to swim. They seemed to grow larger and darker, and they took on a wistful and appealing look that made a man like the jury look fast as if he wanted to climb right out and hit the plaintiff with a club. Her eyes were perfect fountains, and two great tears rolled softly down her cheeks. That settled it. I was foreman of the jury, and we were out exactly a minute and a half in giving her a verdict. Now, if that had happened to some other woman, equally worthy, but of lighter complexion, the chances are her eyes would have turned pink and her eyes would have assumed a slightly inflamed appearance that would have been—er—very damaging to her cause. And a man, as he usually do, I can't say what the result might have been. A woman who can cry artistically can have anything she wants. I'm surprised it isn't taught, like Delsarte movements."

A Candidate for Senator.

The bitter factional fight that exists in Somerset county Republican ranks between Chancery Clerk Thompson and Senator Reed's respective supporters gives an encouraging outlook for the Democrats in the approaching fall election. For the last few years, as the election results show, the Democrats of the county have not been pulling together in a manner to bring victory to themselves. But the Republican fight seems to be tending to stir the Democrats more, and realizing that at no time is the county overwhelmingly favorable to either party they feel that with a long pull and strong pull together they are likely to capture some of the offices to be filled at the next election. Of course, the most important consideration among the elective offices in the county is the Senatorship now filled by Mr. Reed.

Among the Democrats there are several candidates who are mentioned in connection with the nomination for senator. One whose name has been suggested as an available candidate for Senator is Assessor Elston M. French, of North Plainfield. We understand that Mr. French has consented to enter the race, and his friends are already bestirring themselves in an effort to secure favorable consideration for him in the county convention when it is held.

It is felt by his friends that Mr. French has certain elements of strength that would make him a strong candidate in Somerset. Within the last few years Mr. French has taken an active part in the affairs of his party, and has come to be recognized as a healthy influence in its councils. He is young, active and aggressive, and in this respect appeals to a great many Democrats who have the interests of the party at heart and who would like to see a man chosen for the principal legislative office that would be alert to advance the party's interest whenever occasion offered; or, better still, who would aim to bring about such conditions with success.

His friends point out that beyond the party view of his nomination and election, however, is the view in respect to the public service he would give to the county. As is well known Mr. French is especially well-informed on the taxation question, both theoretically and practically. His recent selection as chairman of the Somerset County Board of Assessors evidences the esteem and consideration in which his colleagues hold him. The matter of taxation offers a fertile field for endeavor in the Legislature, and if Mr. French should be honored with an election to the Senate he would doubtless improve every opportunity to bring about some needed reforms in New Jersey. He is also conversant in a through manner with insurance matters and might well be expected to give the public exceptionally good service in this respect.

Scotch Plains Waking up.

Scotch Plains has been one of those places that can truly be said to have pursued the even tenor of its way for half a century or more, but from what has transpired within the last few days in the historic and picturesque community, nestling serenely under the brow of the stately Watchung range of mountains, it seems to be shaking off its lethargic spirit and rousing up to a sense of where it is at in some respects.

Rev. James Shott, pastor of the Baptist church in Scotch Plains, is doing his share in the rousing. The reverend gentleman is practically a new comer to the place, but it seems that he can see things and say things about the town that the oldtimers have heretofore nursed a blind eye and deaf ear to. It is a fact that a live, aggressive minister can do more towards stirring a community to a stern, quick realization of what is transpiring in their midst in the way of sin and iniquity than most any other agency, providing he goes at it in the right way. And experience proves that the right way is to be aggressive rather than defensive about the town's moral status. It would appear that the average Scotch Plains citizen has not troubled himself with either one of these qualities since time immemorial. He has been satisfied to let well enough alone.

Rev. Mr. Shott is not of this class however. Already we know that he believes in saying things; and we shall soon see whether he is able to do what he says he will. In the meantime we imagine that he will find it a hard job. As he said of the people of the town yesterday: "The trouble with the people of this town is that they have become calloused about these matters." To get down a tender spot will require a lot of perserverance and not a little diplomacy. But Rev. Mr. Shott seems prepared for whatever may transpire. His agitation, even if it does not accomplish all that is set out to accomplish, will result in some good anyway.

The Jersey City News observes that Chancery Clerk Thompson has two years yet to serve in his position, but there is an unseemly scramble already for appointment as his successor. The News says that "To such proportions has this struggle grown, that Mr. Thompson has taken alarm and is now endeavoring to persuade those same shoes for another five years at $6,000 per year. Judging from the comments of the newspapers which support Mr. Thompson, it appears that the gentleman himself is beginning to fear that the Governor will not reappoint him, and there seems to be some ground for that belief. Among those of the party who are not scrambling for the office, but whose name is mentioned in connection therewith, is Judge Joseph Cross, and a better man could not be named."

The Newark Advertiser argues that if the able-bodied male population of the State and county prisons were turned into the salt meadows adjoining cities and towns in Northern New Jersey, it would be practicable to reclaim the whole of this waste land in a few years, and there would soon be hundreds of factories erected on them to give employment to an army of working people. With proper management the State could probably realize a handsome profit by condemning the land at its present value and selling it when improved, and the labor of prisoners thus employed would not compete with that of free citizens. The obstacle to the improvement of the meadows by paid labor is the cost of the labor, so unless prisoners are employed, it is argued, nothing can be done. The subject is one which deserves consideration.

It is a matter for congratulation in Episcopal church circles in this city that members of the church of the Holy Communion and the Good Redeemer have arrived at an understanding and will come together once again in unity and consolidation. It is an evident fact that the community from which the two churches have been drawing their support is not large enough to afford the two societies the prosperity that a vigorous, successful church organization should have. The fact that the two congregations will unite in the near future, as they were before the unfortunate circumstances arose to divide them and cause the new church to appear, is a propitious prospect for all concerned.

The Trenton True American takes the following view of the question of the Martin Act being constitutional: "The Fidelity Trust Company of Newark has declined to guarantee the title obtained through sales under the Martin Act. There is pending in the State courts a suit which involves the constitutionality of the act under which these sales have been held, and a decision is not expected for some months, with the possibility of its being adverse to the law. Many a community has been looking to the Martin Act to cure wilful discrepancies in the taxation of property and in the sale of land for taxes, and if that need shall be broken there will be no end of trouble in collecting the back taxes."

Councilman D. F. Collins, of Elizabeth, has been honored with an election as major of the Second New Jersey Regiment. Mr Jor Collins was one of the captains in the old National Guard, being in charge of Company E, of Elizabeth. Several Plainfield boys served under him during the early days of the Spanish War and are able to attest to the fact that he is a good military man. The new position with these under his command. His selection as a major is a deserved honor.

The idea of holding a Democratic political picnic strikes a responsive chord among many members of that party in Plainfield and North Plainfield who would like to see it obtain some influence in the councils of its own clan.

It is not an epigram now to say that Scotch Plains people are receiving hot Shott from the pulpit.

VIOLET ALL THE RAGE.

The Perfume of the Season—Many Have Their Own Formula.

Violet is the perfume of the season. From the tips of her fingers to the heel of her kid boot the well groomed woman suggests this flower's sweetness.

It is quite common for dainty women to have their own individual perfume formulated as they fancy it should be —for there are violets and violets. Some like one combination and others another, so it is easy to take one's perfumer into one's confidence and have a secret formula agreed upon. Ever after that perfume is known by its owner's name and no one else can steal its sweetness.

For the bath, dainty femininity has violet water, and after the bathing a delicately scented violet powder is used, and there is violet in the tonic for the hair. Violet tooth washes are used, and there are even perfumed bon-bons, while a tiny rouge pencil for the lips is violet scented.

From the walls of a woman's wardrobe hang tufted pads breathing blossom whiffs of violets, and every least nook for feminine finery holds a suggestion of violet fragrance. Tiny sachet bags are tacked here and there in frocks, perfumed flannel goes in strips into the tailor made gowns and in hat linings, while violet tablets are tucked into the sleeve and the glove palm and loosely thrown into coat pockets.

Curious Cosmetics.

Even in the unhappy ages when people knew nothing of the bath and its rejuvenating properties, noted beauties found out the secret of preserving their loveliness by abstinence aids. Isabeau of Bavaria heard that chickweed was good for the skin and had enormous decoctions brewed from it, in which she bathed. Diane de Poitiers was another cleanly coquette, and plunged into a tub or rain water every morning.

The eighteenth century beauties likewise believed in bathing; but they put all sorts of odd infusions into the water to improve the skin—such as the brilliant hair dye. Veal had been boiled, water distilled from the honey extracted from roses, a preparation of almonds, melon juice, the milky juices of green beans, linseed distilled with Mexican balm dissolved by the yoke of an egg. These remarkable decoctions were freely used by the ladies at the courts of Louis before the Revolution.

Queen Marie Antoinette made liberal use of the bath, putting into the water wild thyme, laurel leaves, marjory, and a little sea salt.

Marie Czetwertynoska, the Russian beauty who exercised so great an influence over Czar Alexander I., used to bathe in Malaga wine

The Marechal Prince, Princess Eckmuhl, was at eighty-five renowned for her queenly carriage, superb eyes and beautiful color, her skin being so white as to rival the snow of her abundant locks. She had never used anything but pure water on her face, and always kept to a very simple diet, even when her table was loaded with good cheer for her guests

She remained equally attractive to her last hour, although in her youth she had been one of the prettiest women of her time. Her daughter, Mme. de Blocqueville lived to be just such another white-haired beauty and was noted in her old age for dressing with consummate taste and elegance.

Where Care Is Required.

A woman who wished to have an old gown stiffened with hair cloth engaged to do the work a general utility woman who could do anything in the way of sewing. There was nothing she could not do, and do very well. She put in the haircloth, put fresh velveteen on the pockets, and the owner, full of congratulated herself that it was so well done. The haircloth was put in smoothly, the bottom of the skirt was not pulled out of shape, and the velveteen was not drawn in a way to make the skirt gather, faults that incompetent individuals frequently commit. But the after results were not so good. Before long the skirt began to show here and there a black hair on the outside, sometimes a long one, sometimes a short one. It was untidy, and there were pulled out. Then there were more and more which were also pulled out until a good part of the haircloth was gone and at last most of the remaining had curled over and lay in a wrinkled bunch between the lining and the skirt. The dividorh should be put in most carefully and evenly, then stitched or bound, and the whole firmly fastened into place, or there is sure to be trouble in the end, and more than double the work that might have been put in in the first place.

Two Bright California Girls.

California has two shepherdesses—not of the Dresden china variety but clad in overalls, boots and jumpers, with guns instead of crooks. The two are Gertrude and Louise Lahm, aged respectively eighteen and nineteen. They have always lived in Mendocino County. Their father "took up" 10,000 acres of land and started a sheep ranch. He taught his daughters to ride, shoot, tend sheep and perform other arduous pioneer duties. On his death the girls assumed sole charge of the great sheep ranch, now valued at $50,000. Despite their rough life and many hours a day spent in the saddle engaged in ranch work the girls are gentle and thoroughly feminine in manner and are held in the highest respect throughout the whole county.

THE EEL IN WINTER

HOW THE MARKET IS SUPPLIED WITH THE SLIPPERY CREATURES.

Many Are Brought From the Bottoms of Sand Dead Ponds—They Burrow Under the Mud and Are Speared by Thousands—Supply Seems Inexhaustible.

"The thing that a good many folks can't understand," said the fish dealer, "is this: They read that eels hibernate—bury themselves in the mud—as soon as cold weather comes and don't show themselves again until warm weather returns, and yet they see us have eels here by the bushel all winter long, as fat and as kinky and as slippery as any eels are in summer. It is enough to puzzle 'em.

"Behind the sand dunes of the Long Island coast there are many small ponds the water of which is naturally fresh, but has been made salt, or can be made salt, by the cutting of channels to the sea by the combing sand dunes. This brings abundance of shad and other fish from the sea to the ponds, where they fatten and take on better flavor. Native to these ponds is a non-migratory eel—that is, it does not leave those waters and go to the sea in the fall. The eel that comes from the sea to those ponds in the spring. There is no livelier thing in the water during the warm months than the eels in the salt and fresh dune ponds, but it is a creature of thin blood and sensative organism. When the water begins to grow chill as the autumn weather sets in the eel loses its vim and frskiness, and immediately begins to burrow into the muddy bottoms of the ponds, to lie there dormant until the temperature of the water is high enough to be pleasant again.

"These eels bore into the mud a foot or more. Although they are then to pass into a state of lethargy for the time, they must have air. To secure this they turn their heads up toward the top of the mud bed and puncture holes through it with their noses. This would seem to prove that eels have lungs as well as gills and are therefore amphibious, but the eel loses its vim and freskiness, and immediately begins to burrow into the muddy bottoms of the ponds, to lie there dormant until the temperature of the water is high enough to be pleasant again.

"Like the bear and the coon, the eel goes into winter retreat laden with fat, and, like them, he loses none of it while he sleeps. So he is never more fit for the table in his active months of incessant and greedy feeding than he is at any time during the months of his dormant fasting. This is unfortunate for him. If he could only reduce himself to leanness before he stowed himself away in the mud he would rest there undisturbed in his nap—but we would have no winter eels in the markets

"When the frosty days have come and the eels have gone into these burrows the native of the sand dune coast no longer fishes or traps for eels. He waits for the ice and gets just as much pleasure and profit out of them. Armed with a barbed and many-tined spear, he pushes his boat along the edges and over the shallower places of the ponds where the bottom is within easy sight. The holes in the mud betray the burrows of the hibernating eels. The spear is jabbed vigorously down through the mud. Usually, when it is drawn out the spear will have an eel impaled on its barbs, and the patient fisherman is sufficient to restore much of the creature's summer animation, and it squirms and lashes itself furiously over its rude awakening. But whether the spear fetches up an eel or not the eel hunter glances quickly about him on the contiguous surface of the pond, for if he is over a spring eel hole an eddy in the water will appear on the surface and tell him so. If there eels lying within a radius of a few feet from the spot where the spear was thrust into the mud, the thrust will be quickly followed by the appearance of minute bubbles here and there on the water. The shock of the spear plunging into the bottom startles from their slumber the eels that may be lying near, and they immediately eject jets of air from their breathing holes, and these rise to the top of the water, is known in the language of the sand dune eel hunters as "smoking," and by it they know where to launch their spears. A good smoking bed will yield dozens of fat eels.

"When the deeper hollows of the ponds have yielded up all their eels, the hunter digs new channels in the dunes, or deepens old ones. This lets the water from the fresh ponds and opens up the bottom in the deeper parts to the spears. This probing of the muddy bottom of these ponds for eels goes on through the fall and winter, until it would seem that not an eel would be left, but when spring comes the ponds are ready with just as big a supply of eels as they ever were. Scientists talk about the mystery of the eel, but if they want to solve the deepest kind of mystery they should go to the sand dune and clipper out what keeps those little sand dune ponds of the Long Island coast filled with eels year in and year out, with never a sign of their growing less.

FACTS ABOUT FLIES

ADMIRABLY CONSTRUCTED FOR THE PURPOSES OF THEIR CREATION.

Theory of Its Ability to Walk on the Ceiling Explained—Of Great Value to Humanity as a Scavenger—Has Seven Thousand Eyes.

The humble housefly is one of the oldest and always has been one of the most distinguished of insects. He was worshipped by the ancients and placed as a constellation in the heavens. The Philistines sacrificed to Beelzebub as god of flies and the Cyreneans to Achor. The Greeks offered an annual prayer to Jesus Apomyios in honor of the god of flies, and the Romans sacrificed yearly in the temple of Hercules Victor in Rome. The Egyptians, too, tried to appease the troublesome god. The Koran of the Mohametans promised that "all flies shall perish except one, and that is the spider."

Despite their antiquity, flies are still something of a mystery, and it was not until 1884 that Dr. J. E. Rombout of Brooklyn, N. Y., made experiments and advocated the correct theory of how a housefly walks on a ceiling. Dr. Rombout proved that the fly clings to a smooth surface by capillary force, the molecular action between solid and liquid substances. The insects' feet are covered with many thousands of fine hairs, the ends of which terminate in a bulb. Through these hairs runs a thin liquid that seeps through in a tiny drop at the end. When several thousand of these drops have been fastened to a window pane or ceiling there is no difficulty at all for the fly to hang on and no difficulty for him to release himself instantly, when he will.

This is the theory of Rombout, obtained after some fine calculations. A once popular idea was that the feet of the fly, being cup-shaped, enabled him to stick to a surface by adhering to the ceiling. But Blackwell puts flies in a glass vaccum, where they climed the sides as easily as in the open air. Hooker tried to prove that the fluid the feet of the fly sent out was viscous, and held the insect to the surface like mucilage. This theory was exploded by Romhout, who proved that the fluid was not viscous. And if it were, said he, it would be absurd to suppose that a fly, after resting in one position for an hour and giving the thick liquid time to harden, could release himself instantaneously when alarmed.

Then Rombout set about formulating his own theory. He examined the tracks of flies on a window pane, and the idea of capillary force impressed him. He dipped the end of a hair in oil of olives and succeeded in suspending the hair from a clean glass pane. Next he brought the same result with oil of olives. By a series of fine calculations Rombout found that a fly could walk upward on a vertical glass pane supporting an increase over his own weight of ⅛ of a grain. He then weighted the flies with paper attached to their backs and found by experiment that his reckoning was correct.

Rombout, in the course of his experiments, discovered other interesting things about the fly. Each of the two wings of the insect is provided with hair on the edge that serve as a fine brush to clean the feet. When a fly rubs his legs he is not always washing his body, but is often removing the fine particles from the hair in his feet that the fluid can run better. The feet must be kept clean or the fly cannot cling to a surface. He finds it impossible to walk across a pane covered with dust, and oily surfaces cause the liquid from his feet to run together, so that he is apt to slip.

Under the wings of a fly is a pair of balancers, the use of which remains for each in an oval button. When the fly is on the wing these buttons expand and guide the flight. A fly has no lungs, but breathes by valves or breathing pores that lie open all over his body and connect with an intricate system of air tubes. These spiracles are protected from the dust by network of fine, filmy fibers that look something like exquisite lace-work.

The chief value of a fly lies in his scavenging qualities. Indeed some scientists say that without his assistance man would not be able to live in the temperate zone. The fly feeds on both liquids and solids. His mouth is shaped somewhat like a sponge, and he sips perspiration and saliva, his favorite foods, through fine and cunning tubes. Solids he reduces to liquids before he swallows them by a process of secretion. He is a voracious eater, and lives largely on the juices of decaying meat, fruit and vegetables. Linnaeus, the Swede, asserted that three flies with their progeny could devour a dead horse as quickly as a lion could. It has been estimated by scientists that a fly can multiply himself 200 times every twenty-four hours. Each new-born fly becomes full grown in four or five days.

Nature has provided well for the fly in his powers of flight and ability of escaping from danger. He is supplied with 4,000 separate eyes that never sleep and can look either in front or behind. Each eye is separate and of peculiar construction, shaped like a hexagon, and when alarmed the fly leans swiftly from his resting place into the air, detaching his legs with no apparent difficulty. After the first bound he is master of the danger, and resumes his leisurely flight. If he chooses, however, he can fly twenty-five or thirty feet in a second.

Entirely Safe.

A Boston woman selecting a hat at a milliner's asked cautiously, "Is there anything about these feathers that might bring me into trouble with the Audubon Society?" "Oh, no, madam," said the milliner, who was from London; "these feathers, madam, are the feet (!) of a fowl; and the bowl, you know, madam, is more of a cat than a bird."

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

SERMON TO VETERANS

ATRIOTIC DISCOURSE PREACHED BY DR. YERKES.

The Service Attended by Civil War Veterans, Sons and Wives and by the Young Veterans of the Spanish War.

The annual sermon to the G. A. R., the Women's Relief Corps and the Sons of Veterans was preached by Rev Dr. Yerkes at the First Baptist church Sunday. With the old veterans and the young descendants this time were several soldiers and sailors of the late Spanish-American War, to whom Dr. Yerkes also addressed a few remarks.

All four organizations marched to the church in a body and were given seats in the front. Many of the G.A.R. men, the Sons of Veterans and the soldiers and sailors were in full uniform.

The service at the church consisted of a special sermon to the visiting organizations, with special music. Dr. Yerkes took his text from Second Timothy, fourth verse of the second chapter, "Now therefore endure hard ness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."

Dr. Yerkes said that the good soldier must be willing, and therefore the best soldier is the volunteer. He is the man who is willing to make great sacrifices. There were no better soldiers in the world than those who left the shop or farm to fight in the Civil War. They were good soldiers, too, on the other side, the doctor said.

"When an army is made up of volunteers," the speaker said, "it is an invincible army. The men who fought in Cuba and Porto Rico showed what our regular army can do. The mercenary soldier is never a good soldier, for example there was the Hessian soldier who fought for King George against the patriots.

"We who stay at home are too apt to think only of the great achievements of our men, and forget the hardships they went through to accomplish them. To those mothers tonight who have sons in the Philippines fighting, war is a real thing.

"These qualities, willingness, endurance and love for one's leader must be possessed by the soldier of Jesus Christ as well as by the soldier of this earth. We must fight a constant battle in this fight, there are no leaves of absence and no substitutes."

POOR SUSAN IS CRAZY

IMAGINES THAT SHE OWNS A LOT OF HOUSES.

Wanted the Police to Turn Out Tenants of New Street House—Judge Runyon Sent Her to Jail for 5 Months.

Mrs. Susan Harris is a poor demented woman who has been giving the police a great deal of trouble lately by following them around and insisting that they aid her in turning the tenants of certain houses on New street out of the dwellings, as they belong to her.

The officers locked her up Saturday night, and last Monday City Judge Runyon sent her to Elizabeth for five months, in default of a $50 fine. Susan appeared in the courtroom with a great market basket loaded with clothing and food. She disputed with the Judge, the Chief of Police and even with the bystanders at what they had to say about her, and was led back into her cell muttering.

At the passing of sentence, she said that lodging in jail was better than walking around the streets anyway. Steps will be taken to have her placed in the asylum.

him as he had been called as rector.

The vestry then decided to call a parish meeting of the Church of the Holy Cross, to be held May 29th, at 8 p. m., to enable the members of this church to vote upon the question of consolidation of the two parishes.

This is the question that you must pass upon tonight, and I hope that the decision of this meeting will be to consolidate the two churches as one parish according to the terms proposed, for, by so doing, I believe that peace and goodwill and the future welfare of the parish, with God's blessing, will be assured.

Affectionately your rector,

T. Logan Murphy.

After the reading of the above, Wm. L. Saunders said that he desired on behalf of the meeting to express to Pastor Murphy their high appreciation of the letter read to them. It was a clear and lucid expression of most excellent advice, breathing Christian love and goodwill He moved that in addition to its being recorded on the minutes, that it be published in the local papers.

It has been left to the vestry of the two churches to arrange the details for the consolidation which will be effected at once.

Immediately after the meeting a committee, consisting of J. H. Carman, Horsely Barker and A. T. Gallup, was appointed to confer with a like committee from the Church of the Redeemer to prepare consolidation agreements and have them filed in the County Clerk's office. The consolidation will probably take effect July 1st.

At a meeting of the vestry of the Church of the Redeemer held on Monday evening it was decided by a unanimous vote of fifteen to consolidate.

ATTEMPTED KIDNAPPING.

STRANGE ITALIAN TRIED TO COAX ELSIE TIER AWAY.

Offered Her Sweets to Take a Little Walk With Him—She Screamed and Ran Home—Italian Was Locked Up.

An arrest for an attempt to kidnap Elsie, the five-year old daughter of John Tier, Jr., of Bank place, occurred Monday a. m., the prisoner being an Italian. The little girl was sent from her home to J. F. MacDonald's grocery store on Front street, near Watchung avenue, on an errand by her grandmother. On her return she was accosted by a stranger, who told her that if she would take a little walk with him he would give her candy and peanuts. The stranger took hold of the little girl's arm and tried to lead her off, but the little girl screamed and pulled away from the man. The stranger tried to soothe her fright, but was unable and the child ran away from him and hurried home.

When she got home she told her grandfather, John Tier, Sr., a member of the Union County Board of Freeholders, what had happened, he immediately sent a hired man with the little girl to follow the man and identify him if possible. Between Front and Watchung avenues, on Front street, they came across the stranger and the girl pointed him out as the one who had tried to induce her to go away with him. A few minutes after her father came along and after he was told of the attempt to kidnap his daughter he immediately went before City Judge Runyon and swore out a warrant for the arrest of the man.

At noon the suspicious acting stranger was apprehended and locked up in the city jail.

GOLF BALL HIT CADDIE.

Walter Stine Knocked Down by Ball Hitting Him on the Head.

Saturday afternoon on the Park Golf Club links Walter Stine, of Grandview avenue, was badly hurt with a golf ball It was his first experience as a caddie and he had been around once with Carl Brown. The lad must have stood in a wrong position, for when Mr. Brown hit his ball it struck the boy on the back of the head near the right ear.

The blow knocked him down and dazed him for a few minutes. In a short time he was able to get up and walked back to the clubhouse where he reported the accident to some of the members. An examination was made and a large lump, the size of an egg, was discovered on his head. Applications of cold water was made by Richard Cass, the expert at the club, and other members assisted in making the lad as comfortable as possible. Later Mr. Cass took the boy to his home, where proper treatment was continued.

FISK CUP WAS WON BY GEORGE RICHARDS.

Some Exciting Go'f Events on the Hillside Links.

PARK GOLFERS ACTIVE, TOO.

BEAUTIFUL WEATHER BROUGHT OUT MANY PLAYERS SATURDAY.

Preliminary Round for the Chapman Cup Played on Hillside Links—Twenty-five Entries, But Only Eight Qualified—Principal Event on the Park Club Links Was for the McCutch-n Cup.

Saturday was an interesting day on the course of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club. The events of the morning was the final play for the Fisk cup, junior handicap, between George Richards and Parker W. Mason. After a spirited contest Mr. Richards won the cup by 3 up, thus giving him the permanent ownership of the cup.

The largest crowd was present in the afternoon. The day was a trifle warm, but at the course a breeze kept everyone in good spirits and play was a delight to all who indulged. Tea was served in the clubhouse and in the evening many remained for dinner.

The event of the afternoon was the preliminary round for the Chapman cup. There were twenty five entries, and out of that number there were only fifteen who came under the 100 score. The rule is that the best scores made by eight persons shall qualify for play in the other events for the cup. Those who qualified Saturday were Morris Dumont, 91; Geo. T. Vanbokerck, 91; A. R. Fisk, 92; Frank Talmage, 92; C. W. Fisk, 93, Parker W. Mason, 94; E. J. Waring, 95; H. R Stockton, 95.

A noticeable feature Saturday was the presence of so many ladies on the course, and everyone took a great deal of interest in playing the game.

There was a good deal of life on the Park Golf Club course Saturday. The junior scratch tournament started in the morning but there were but few players to take part in this opening event. The contest will continue for three weeks, when some good scores are expected.

In the afternoon there was a much larger attendance at the course, and a number commenced play for the Mrs. C. W. McCutchen cup, eighteen holes, handicap, medal play, to be played for throughout the season. Among the scores turned in Saturday are the following: A. C. Crowe, 93; F. P. Taylor, 100; Augustus Faber, 110; Arthur Peck, 113; C. S. Roome, 116; W. J. R. Thiers, 118; S. S. Squires, 122; M. Townsend, 123; J. H. Howell, 138; Vaughn McGee, 145.

There were a few women who played for the W. J. Buttfield cup, but their scores were not turned in. A large number were on the course learning the game and working in practice to enter some of the contests.

During the afternoon tea was served in the clubhouse by some of the ladies, and the social features were much enjoyed by all who stopped in the reception room.

As Godown attempted to unload some boxes on the rear the team started and ran up North avenue at a fast pace. They threaded their way between carriages and turned the corner and ran into East Third street without an accident. At Richmond street they were stopped. Nothing was injured about the truck or any freight lost.

A warrant has been out for the arrest of Patrick Doyle, of Cottage place, for several weeks, but the police were unable to find him until Sunday. He is wanted for non-support and neglect of his family, the complainant being his wife.

Mrs. Doyle gave the police and the overseer of the poor to understand that she had heard nothing from her husband since he left her weeks ago, but at the examination last Monday she admitted that she had had a letter from him last week, which she did not tell the Overseer about.

Doyle said he had been away looking for work and meant to support his family as long as he could find it, but that Mrs. Doyle heard that Mrs. Doyle had deceived the city officials in regard to hearing from her husband he dismissed the complaint against the man, and after warning him to provide for his family let him go.

Mrs. Blauvelt and two children, accompanied by her parents, were driving past the station when the horse became frightened at the combination of steam cars and trolleys and ran toward the curb. The carriage was upset and the occupants thrown out.

The injured ones were taken into a nearby drug store, and Dr. Fisher was summoned. It is not thought that either of them is fatally hurt, but their escape from death was marvelous. A number of Plainfield people witnessed the accident from the trolley car.

STUDENT VOLUNTEER TALKS OF MISSIONS

Big Meeting Held Under Auspices of Christian Endeavor.

EARNEST ADDRESS HEARD.

C. V. VICKERY, OF NEBRASKA, THE SPEAKER AT THE MEETING.

He Described the Terrible Needs of Missionaries in Foreign Lands—It is the Supreme Duty of the Church to Aid in Evangelizing the World—Urged That Societies Support Workers.

Christian Endeavorers and their friends were present in large numbers last Friday to attend the missionary meeting held in the First Baptist church under the auspices of the Plainfield Local Union. This meeting was one of four arranged for by the Union County Union, and held simultaneously in Plainfield, Westfield, Rahway and Elizabeth. The speakers at all these meetings were members of the Yale University Mission Band of Student Volunteers, who have been arousing so much interest in missions in New York and many other places. Plainfield was the first of the four towns to arrange for a meeting, and it was at first thought that it would be the only one, in which case there would have been five members of the Band present at the one meeting. It was decided to hold the four the speakers were divided among the different meetings, C. V. Vickery, of Nebraska, being the speaker for Plainfield.

During the opening exercises Miss Florence Genevieve Hawkins, president of the Plainfield Union, presided. Frederick H. Andrews conducted a short service of song, Mr. Vickery read a chain of Scripture texts showing the duty of Christians toward missions, and Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes offered prayer.

After the singing of a missionary hymn by a quartette, composed of Horace J. Martin, Charles Hummer, Louis Hummer and Mr. Moore, Miss Alice Spangenberg Runyon, superintendent of the missionary department of the Union, introduced Mr. Vickery, who, during notes of an organ, spoke directly from his heart to the hearts of his hearers. His address was very simple and practical, but exceedingly impressive and earnest, reminding many of the audience of Robert E. Speer.

"Suppose," said Mr. Vickery, "that you had a friend whom you loved better than your life; that you should be in great danger and your friend should save your life, but at the expense of his own. As you said a last farewell to him, bending over him for the last time, he makes a dying request of you, a request that is perfectly reasonable, and fully within your power. If, after he is dead and buried, you allow yourself to be so taken up with other things that you forget all about it, and neglect it year after year, what sort of a friend do you call yourself? And yet, this is but a faint type of the condition of the Christian church for nearly twenty centuries."

Mr. Vickery went on to tell of the terrible need of missionaries in foreign lands, saying that if the United States were supplied with preachers at the same rate as China, it would require fifty towns the size of Plainfield to be entitled to one. The supreme duty of the church should certainly be to obey the last command of its Lord; but it should be regarded as really a privilege, rather than a duty. That it is so regarded by the thousands of young people enrolled under the banner of the Student Volunteers was shown by Mr. Vickery's description of large parties of students pleading with the officers of missionary boards to send them to the field, and going away broken in spirit because there was no money with which to send them. Their watchword is "The Evangelization of the World in Our Generation," and, said the speaker, this would be no impossible thing if the people of this country would give to this great fight half the enthusiasm and help they gave to pushing the Spanish War. "What would have been said," asked he, "if our soldiers could not have gone to Cuba because there was no money for transports? Yet the conflict in which we are engaged is infinitely greater." The army of advance is ready; the speaker pleaded earnestly for an army of support. He urged especially that societies and individuals support workers on the field; $30 supports a native preacher, and many Christians could support more than one. He told of one factory girl that supported seven, and one printer that supported sixteen. In closing, he earnestly begged his audience to become possessed of the spirit that asks not "How much must I give?" but "How much may I give?"

Another song by the quartette, and the formal meeting was closed by a congregational hymn. After this, the Endeavorers assembled in groups according to their churches, and Mr. Vickery conducted a vigorous and practical committee conference on methods of missionary work in the Endeavor Society. He urged systematic giving, the formation of missionary libraries, the appointment of the best possible committee, the use of a missionary prayer cycle, and other equally practical and helpful plans.

DEATH OF MISS COMPTON

A BAPTIST CHURCH WORKER DIED SATURDAY.

Unable to Withstand the Ravages of Consumption—Mrs. Maloy and Mrs. Messerschmidt Succumb to Long Illnesses.

The death of Miss Kate Compton, aged fifty years, occurred last Saturday after a long illness with consumption. The deceased was the daughter of the late Nathaniel R. Compton, who died in this city in 1868, and she was well-known among a large circle of friends. She was a member of the First Baptist church, where she was a faithful and regular attendant when able. One sister, Mrs. George Cornwell, survives her. The funeral services were held from the house, 407 Park avenue, Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

Friday evening Mrs. Sarah Messerschmidt, wife of Nicholas Messerschmidt, of 80 Jackson avenue, passed away after a long illness, the result of a cancer. Mrs. Messerschmidt has been a resident of this place for many years and was well known. Her death was somewhat unexpected, as the seriousness of her illness was not thought of by the relatives. The funeral services were held from the house Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

Mrs. Bridget Malsy, of 553 South Second street, aged 75 years, died last evening after a long illness. Mrs. Malay was born in Ireland and resided in Plainfield for many years, where she was respected by all who knew her. Fifteen years ago her husband died. She is survived by two daughters, one of whom lives in Newark and the other in this city. There is also a son, who resides at Orange and is an engineer on the D. L. & W. Railroad. The funeral services will be held Monday morning next at 8:30 o'clock from the house and at 9 o'clock from St. Mary's church. Interment was in St. Mary's Cemetery.

MISS TAYLOR'S FUNERAL.

Dr. Yerkes Officiated and Paid a Glowing Tribute to Her.

The funeral services of Miss Edith Greene Taylor, daughter of Mrs. Mary J. and the late Morgan S. Taylor, were held Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the family residence, No. 10 Rockview Terrace. Her death occurred Sunday, May 21st at Omaha, Neb., en route for Belmar, where it was hoped she might derive benefit from the sea air. A large number of friends gathered yesterday at the family home on Rockview Terrace, opened for the last sad rites of burial. Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the First Baptist church, of which Miss Taylor became a member when a very young girl, conducted the service. A single sentence gives the pastor's estimate of Miss Taylor's worth. "Beautiful with the adornments of Christian character and sweet with Christian hope."

A quartette from the choir of the First Baptist church, Mrs. Samuel Case, Mrs. Ward, Charles W. McCutchen and Mr. Holmes, sang two selections, "Oh Paradise" and "Abide With Me."

Interment followed the service in the family plot at Hillside Cemetery.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SOCIABLE.

An Annual Event of the First Methodists Much Enjoyed.

The annual sociable and entertainment of the senior members of the Sunday-school of the First M. E. church was held Friday evening in Vincent chapel. J. W. Jackson, superintendent of the Sunday-school, was in charge of the programme, which consisted of several pleasing recitations by Miss Mary Luckey, a cornet solo by Robert Davis and a vocal solo by Harry Messersmith. There was also several vocal solos by Miss Sayles, accompanied by Miss Sharp, which were greatly enjoyed by all. Miss Bessie Valant very kindly gave a piano solo that was a feature of the entertainment.

Toward the close of the evening the committee in charge, under the direction of Harry Gee, served those present with ice cream and cake, and thus an evening of profit and pleasure came to an end.

A Counter Charge.

Joseph Wilson, of Richmond street, who was charged by Michael Recca, before Justice Nash, with assaulting him, went to Justice Mosher Friday and swore out a warrant for Recca's arrest, charging him with the same offense. It seems, from Wilson's story, that Recca was to sell him the barber shop, and when the time came to pass the bill of sale, a dispute arose in which Recca got the worst of it, and went down to the justice and had his clerk arrested. The constable has been unable to arrest Recca, and it is thought he is out of town.

MRS. WALZ DEAD IN SWITZERLAND.

The News Causes a Shock to Her Relatives.

WAS THOUGHT TO BE WELL.

TRAVELING WITH HUSBAND FOR BENEFIT OF HIS HEALTH.

The Untimely End Occured the 25th at Vevay, Switzerland—Her Son, Fred Walz, Did Sail Saturday to Join His Afflicted Relatives—Mrs. Walz Was Active in the Crescent Avenue Church Circles.

The community was shocked Friday morning when the sad news of the sudden death of Mrs. E. L. Walz, of LaGrande avenue, reached this city from Vevay, Switzerland, where she and her husband and daughter were traveling for the benefit of Mr. Walz's health. Death, which occurred Thursday, was due to asthma, from which disease Mrs. Walz had been a great sufferer. The news of death was received late Thursday afternoon by a son, Fred Walz, who informed the relatives and friends. Saturday Mr. Walz will sail for Bremen, where he expects to join his father and sister, who are prostrated by the passing away of Mrs. Walz. The family expect to return home as quickly as possible and the remains will be brought to this city for interment.

The death of Mrs. Walz removes from this city a woman of rare quality and influence in a large circle in which she moved. She was a person greatly devoted to charitable enterprises, and in the Crescent Avenue church, where she was a member, she was deeply interested in every department of the church work. Her sympathies were always with those less fortunate than others, and she was always ready and willing to give to the needy. She was a woman of rare devotion in the home, where she exhibited the greatest possible love for all.

Mrs. Walz's death was very sudden, and although she had suffered from asthma her death was entirely unexpected. In fact, when the news reached Plainfield it was at first thought there was a mistake, for Mr. Walz's health was very poor and it was for that reason the family went abroad. The latter has been in extreme poor health for sometime, and the death of his son, Carl Walz, greatly affected him. As stated last since travelling abroad his condition is not much improved. The death of his wife no doubt will be a severe blow to him, and his relatives fear that he may break down.

Mrs. Walz was 54 years of age. She was formerly a Miss Abbie M. Lewis, daughter of William B. Lewis, of Brooklyn. She was born in Brooklyn, and has been a resident of Plainfield about twenty-five years. A husband, E. L. Walz, a daughter, Miss Gertrude Walz, two sons, Frederick Walz, of this city, and Rev. Louis Walz, a missionary who lives in the south, include the immediate family that survives her. There are also two sisters, Mrs. Frank A. Barnaby, of this city, and Mrs. VanAgled, of Roselle, and a brother, Daniel F. Lewis, of Brooklyn.

Vail, of North avenue, will have a pay-station located at his place of business. This will be a great convenience for those who want to use a telephone and happen to be at the railroad station or nearby, and it will in a small measure make up the loss of the "central" office on North avenue.

DEMOCRATS TO HOLD POLITICAL PICNIC.

An Effort to Stir up Interest for Fall Campaign.

TO ATTRACT STATE LEADERS

OUT OF IT A LOCAL ORGANIZATION MAY BE FORMED.

It Has Been a Good Many Years Since the Democrats of This Section Have Met Together, and This Picnic is Designed to Arouse Interest in the Approaching Fall Campaign.

Quite a good deal of quiet talk is being indulged in by local Democrats about holding a political picnic within a few weeks in order to arouse an interest in party affairs in anticipation of the campaign this fall. Since the fiasco that the Democrats experienced last winter in their endeavor to secure the nomination of a straight party ticket, there has been little interest evidenced in the organization that was started with good prospects, but which was finally dropped when it was stampeded for a citizens' movement by a few men who were anxious to get some sort of an office.

Now, however, some of the members of the late lamented association, as well as others who were not affiliated with it in its short career, are discussing plans for stirring up an interest in the local Democratic ranks so that when the fall campaign comes Plainfield will be in a position to take an active and aggressive part in the political conventions.

It is suggested that one of the best ways to do this is to hold a political picnic sometime next month, or the following month, where the members of the party will take an interest in its affairs can get together for a confab and a good time, out of which, it is thought, a strong organization may be born. Such an affair would undoubtedly be a success. The expense of it would be shared equally among those who attended, tickets being sold for an amount sufficient to cover the aggregate expense.

It has been a good many years since the Democrats of Plainfield have got together so that they could come in touch with the leaders from other sections, and such an affair would probably bring about such a result by an attendance of some of the State and county leaders from other sections. As there are to be many important nominations made this fall, and candidates will be plenty, a gathering of this character would be attractive and interesting in a great many ways from the political standpoint.

Instead of making it a strictly Plainfield affair, in which Union county politics would figure the most conspicuously, it is the thought to arrange it with a view of taking in North Plainfield and Somerset county Democrats, too. This would make a larger crowd, give more importance and make the success greater. Politics is bound to be lively among the Somerset Democrats from now to election time, and a gathering of the political spirits of the section would be a great attraction for the leaders.

It is expected that sometime this week a meeting of those interested in the matter will be held and the project discussed and steps taken to carry it out.

SOFA FRINGE ON FIRE.

Children Hunting for Marbles With Matches Cause Blaze.

About 9:30 o'clock last Friday an alarm of fire was sent in from box No. 142, corner of Somerset street and Manning avenue, by Julius Stahl, in reponse to a request sent from the home of Mrs. E. E. Hann, of Somerset place, at whose house the fire occurred. Her children were playing in one of the rooms with some marbles, when a few of them rolled under a sofa. The children anxious to secure the lost marbles, looked under the sofa with lighted matches. The fringe caught fire and in a few minutes the entire sofa was in a blaze. The fire department responded in time to throw the blazing sofa outdoors, and one extinguisher was used to put the fire out. There was only slight damage otherwise.

Sociability Among Students.

An entertainment and sociable was given Friday evening at the Plainfield Business College, under the direction of the principal, Miss Phelps, and the members of the various classes. During the evening the young men and women enjoyed themselves playing several games, and this was interspersed with musical selections by Mrs. Carson, guitar, and Miss Nelson, banjo. Miss Elizabeth Hoagland also recited one of her best selections, and in conclusion Miss Phelps gave a humorous recitation, assisted by Prof. Roberts.

Call To Metuchen Church.

The vestry of St. Luke's Episcopal church at Metuchen has decided to call Rev. J. Fenton, of Trenton, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Rev. Clarence Dunham. Mr. Dunham leaves in June.

PLAINFIELD NEEDS TO BE ADVERTISED.

Great Benefits May Be Derived From Publicity.

A SCHEME IS PROPOSED.

SECURE $1,000 WORTH OF SUBSCRIPTIONS FROM CITIZENS.

And With That Money Bring the Advantages of Plainfield to the Attention of the World by Photographs, Circulars, Statistical Information on Envelopes and Advertising in Newspapers.

I am deeply interested in the advancement of Plainfield, trust that those who attended the meeting of business men on the evening of May 23d may organize an association that shall have for its purpose the permanent lights, good roads, trolley system, unexcelled schools, churches for almost every sect, creed or faith, hospital, fire departments, banks, department stores, library, etc., and is within easy distance of New York.

The question now is how shall the above facts be advertised so that they will be brought before the outside world? I would offer these suggestions.

In the first place there are about one hundred and fifty merchants and manufacturers and perhaps about fifty professional men in business in this city who use letter heads, etc. The combined correspondence of all these people will probably reach every town and city in this land. If every professional and business man would have printed upon the left hand side of his envelopes a short succinct statement of the advantages to be found in Plainfield, this city would be very thoroughly advertised at a very small cost.

In the second place have six, eight or ten of the pretty locations of this improvement of this city, and that, putting aside petty jealousies, they may evolve some plan which shall accomplish the above object.

It is a well-known fact that the town is at present at a standstill, and the only way to invite prosperity is to infuse new blood into the community by inducing people from other cities to come here and establish their residences.

It is stated as a fact that there are about 800 vacant properties in this place, and we wonder why this is so. The reason lies in this, that all the present inhabitants are provided with abodes, and the vacant properties are untenanted because there is none to occupy them.

A very simple but effective remedy for this condition of affairs is at hand, viz.: advertise.

We have in this city many natural and artificial advantages that will appeal to any outsider if brought to his notice.

Plainfield is so situated on the side of the Watchung range that good climatic conditions and natural drainage are at hand. It has water and sewage systems, gas and electric city photographed and having framed groups of these pictures, place them in the more important stations along the line of the railroad from New York to Philadelphia.

In the third place have a book of small and convenient size prepared, treating of this city, have placed therein if you please copies of the above pictures and place such books or pamphlets in the various stations along the line of railroad.

In the fourth place select on each Sunday a different metropolitan newspaper and place therein an advertisement of the city with a cut of some pretty part of the town.

I have also noticed that the Westfield Board of Trade has placed in the surface cars and elevated systems of New York and Brooklyn, an advertisement of that town. It might be a good plan to adopt this method in conjunction with those above stated.

To advertise as above set forth would probably cost from a thousand to fifteen hundred dollars. This fund could be raised, I believe, by subscription.

If each of the one hundred and fifty merchants and fifty professional men would contribute five dollars each, a fund of one thousand dollars, for advertising purposes would immediately be created.

I feel certain that if a committee were to canvass this city that there are enough public-spirited men outside of the merchants, etc., to contribute another five hundred dollars.

There are perhaps some who will say that this scheme will only aid the real estate men of the town in renting and selling property. It is true that if new people are induced to come to this city by the methods herein above set forth, that the real estate men will be profitted thereby. But after a real estate agent has sold or rented a property to an outsider and collected his commission his work is completed and the new comer is here to spend his money among the local merchants during the period of his residence in this city, and it can be seen that while the real estate dealers as a class may be the first to be benefitted by the said scheme, that in time all classes of trade and industry will be benefitted.

THREE WOMEN FRAUDS.

ORGANIZED AID ASSOCIATION GIVES WARNING.

Pitiable Stories They Tell, but They are Said to be Fictitious and Only Designed to "Work" Soft-hearted People.

The Organized Aid Association has been informed of the presence in Plainfield of three or more women who have become a nuisance to citizens. Public begging is both illegal and unnecessary, as all worthy cases of destitution are assisted through the legitimate channels. The public is therefore notified to be on its guard against a heavily built woman, between forty and fifty years of age, having brown eyes and hair, and generally pleasing face. She asks for money with which to pay her fare to Westfield or Cranford from whence she purposes to proceed to Newark. She has worn recently a dark woolen hood or nubia. He record suggests a habit of pilfering.

The public is warned against encouraging a tall woman of medium build who limps and whose hair is streaked with grey. She asks for money with which to go south, or to buy a sewing machine, or to secure admission to a home. Her age is about fifty. She is charged with obtaining money on false pretenses.

The last beggar to guard against is also a woman of about fifty. She usually dresses in black, has a nervous quick gait, and a bewed form. She is quite a familiar figure on our streets. All these persons have been reported to the police, but so far their movements are quite unstated.

PRETTY HOME WEDDING.

MISS RITIE POLHEMUS WEDDED AN ELIZABETH MAN.

Ceremony Performed by Rev. Cornelius Schenck—Only the Immediate Relatives Were Present—A Great Spread.

A pretty home wedding took place May 24th at the home of Miss Lizzie DuBois, of East Fifth street, when Miss Ritie Polhemus, of Weston, Somerset county, was united in marriage to Frederick Beister, of Elizabeth, in the presence of about twenty-five relatives and friends. Owing to a recent death in the family of the bride the wedding was a quiet one and the invitations were limited.

The bride and groom were attended by Mr. and Mrs. James Pangborn, and by Olive Dunlap, of Weston, as flower girl. The bride wore a gown of white organdie, trimmed with lavender ribbon and fine lace. She also wore a veil and carried a bouquet of bridal roses.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church. After the marriage an informal reception was held and supper was served. The coach that conveyed the happy couple to the railroad station for the 11:26 train for Elizabeth, was richly decorated with satin ribbon, while a large dinner bell was much in evidence. On a satchel carried by the groom was a large sign on which was printed the words "Just Married." This was not discovered until the couple boarded the train.

Mr. and Mrs. Beister will reside in Elizabeth, where the groom has an excellent position at the Singer Sewing Machine Works.

A PIANO RECITAL.

Pupils of Misses Marsh Acquit Themselves Creditably.

The pupils of the Misses Marsh, of Madison avenue, gave a delightful piano recital Friday afternoon. The large audience which attended was enthusiastic over the skillful rendering of the programme. Clearness of touch, combined with freedom and expression, characterized all the numbers.

A very enjoyable feature of the programme was the ensemble playing. An Adagio and Allegro from the first Symphony, by Haydn, and a selection from Cavelleria Rusticana were rendered on two pianos by a class of four young ladies — The Misses Boone, Millar, Chapman and Titsworth.

The other numbers of the programme, which were played from memory, were rendered by Marguerite Lee, Dorothy Fisk, Charlotte T. Finch, Maria L. Finch, Adelaide Carney, John Phillips, Frank F. Simons, Elizabeth E. Phillips, G. Stuart Simons, George L. Babcock, Bessie Miller, Margaret P. Mead, Annie L. Jennings, Virginia Hegeman, Grace Kaufman, Nellie Valiant, Annie Boone, May D. Thompson, Esther S. Thompson, Bessie J. Valiant and Saidee Mae Howell.

Thankful to Their Friends.

The strawberry and ice cream festival in the lecture room of Trinity Reformed church came to a close Friday evening. There was a good attendance, everything was disposed of and the Ladies' Christian Work Society are rejoicing over the fact that about $75 was realized, after paying all expenses.

TODAY, THEIR SABBATH, IS GIVEN UP TO DEVOTION.

Many Routine Matters of Church Work Were Transacted Yesterday Morning and Afternoon, and in the Evening a Sermon Was Preached by the Preacher-Fisherman—More Business.

The sessions of the Seventh-Day Baptist convention continued through Friday afternoon and evening and all today. Important sessions will also be held tomorrow, closing the convention.

The devotional service that opened Friday afternoon's session was led by Rev. O. D. Sherman, of Mystic, Conn. This was followed by a missionary hour conducted by Rev. O.U. Whitford, of Westerly, R. I., who also delivered the first address on "General Needs and Duties of Mission Work." He was followed by Wm. L. Clark, president of the missionary society, of Ashaway, with a talk on "The Origin and Need of Consecration for Work," after which S. H. Davis, of Westerly, explained new plans for raising funds for mission work. D. E. Titsworth, president of the Sabbath Evangelical and Industrial Association, presented the needs of the African Industrial Mission, Rev. O. D. Sherman, of Mystic, Conn., offered prayer, then the sermon of the afternoon was preached by Rev. W. D. Burdick, of Nile, N. Y. His text was "We are laborers together with God." The sermon emphasized the need of consecration, and told of the great achievements possible to those who work consecratedly with God.

The evening service was opened with a service of song conducted by Rev. Martin Sindall, of New Market. Then the meeting was given over to the charge of Rev. A. J. Potter, of Niantic, Conn., who is known as the "Fisherman Preacher." He conducted a praise and conference service.

Rev. Mr. Potter is a peculiar man to be in the pulpit. Brought up as a fisherman, and used the sea all his life, he became converted and studied for the ministry. But he did not give up his occupation. He fished and preached. Even when he was with the pastorate of the Seventh-Day Baptist church at Niantic, which is near New London, he still clung to the sea.

The church is small and does not pay Mr. Potter a very large salary, and much of his support comes from the finny dwellers of the Atlantic. He is a forceable speaker, and his anecdotes used to illustrate his meanings were to the point.

The speaker used the first three verses of the 40th Psalm for his text. In them David thanks the Lord for raising him up out of the bottomless pit. Using them for a heading, the speaker urged his hearers to do as David had done, and if they were in the pit to seek a way out.

The meeting that followed the pastor's remarks was full of interest. Prayers, remarks and exhortations followed each other in quick succession and it was plain to be seen that the words of the "Fisherman Preacher" had sunk deeply into their hearts.

TEACHERS ENGAGED.

Borough Board of Education Secures Instructors for Next Year.

Last Thursday evening there were a special meeting of the Borough Board of Education, at which time all of the present corps of teachers were engaged for another year with the exception of Miss Hatfield, of Dunellen, who taught Grade A, of the Primary Department, and Miss Cora Mooney, who now teaches Grade G. These two teachers have positions elsewhere for another year.

Dr. J. H. Carman was reappointed physician to the schools, to attend to the various duties that are prescribed for that position. While Miss Glass has been principal of the High School by consent, she has never been elected to the position by the Board. This action was taken at the last meeting. The Board also decided upon the time for opening the schools for the fall term which will be Tuesday, September 19th. The balance of the evening was devoted to routine business.

FORTY DAYS IN JAIL.

Result of a Raid Made on a Disorderly House by Police.

Roundsman Frederickson and Patrolman McCarthy raided a disorderly house on Cottage place Friday, and arrested Mary Walker and two men. One was a well-known character known as "Uncle Tom Rowes," and the other a tall lanky individual, who gave the name of Edward Glasgo, of Dunellen. The women was sent to Elizabeth for forty days in lieu of a $60 fine, and sentence was suspended on the men. Mary Walker now owes the city $3 on an unpaid fine.

SHARP SERMONIZING ABOUT 'PLAINS MORALS.

Rev. James Shott Stirs up His Own Congregation.

WANTS TOWN REFORMED.

PROPOSES TO FIND OUT IF HIS CHURCH IS WITH HIM.

Declares That the Devil is on Such Good Terms With Some Scotch Plains People That the Pristles of His Beard Can be Felt—Townspeople Have Been too Easy Going for the Past Forty Years.

Recent events have resulted in making Scotch Plains a much-talked of place, and incidents which terminated in a measure with the attempted suicide of Miss Alida Messler, recently in this city, have produced an effect that is not relished by a number of people in the township. As previously stated, Rev. G. M. Shott, pastor of the Baptist church, at that place, has taken up the subject bearing on the sinfulness of his place of residence, and one week ago he announced his intention of investigating the case of Miss Messler, and if fates in her case were found to be true he would make them public at the service Sunday. In consequence he was greeted by a large congregation at the morning service and a much larger one in the evening, and noticeable were several who dropped in out of curiosity to hear the pastor.

Pastor Shott took for his text the story of David and Goliah, and as he read the Scripture lesson containing the story in the 17th chapter of First Samuel, he made brief extracts and likened many incidents to those recently enacted at Scotch Plains. In stating his determination to get so close to the devil that one could feel the bristles of his beard. He said that it made his blood boil to hear the way he had been cursed, ridiculed, and talked about by different ones for taking a hand in this fight, and if it was any other but the Sabbath day he would be inclined to speak in strong terms.

"It is an awful, shameful fact that with all this wickedness going on nothing has been done to stop it. The devil curled up on a rug is sound to sleep and he will sleep as long as the church does. He only stays as long as the church does, and then he has his emissaries at work. The first thing we want is a moral purification of the church, and without we can do nothing.

"I have organized a system of cottage prayer-meetings and they will be held in the camp of the Philistines, and I want you to invite these Philistines to these meetings. I would not be as circumspect as perhaps you would suggest, for I intend to plunge into the midst of this awful state of affairs. I would not care if these Philistines were present now and looking at my guns, and hearing what I have to say.

"I want to know if you will help me. I have received abundant help outside, but I want the church with me. One of the worst men in this place remarked openly a few days ago 'Shott is all right,' and if I should tell you his name it would be like a thunderbolt striking this congregation. Others have said the same thing.

"Members have said 'don't be in a hurry,' and that is what they have been saying for forty years. I will not hold my message back. There is not enough money in my salary, nor is the town to prevent me from delivering this message to you. Some of you cannot be affected. You are callous, dried up and nothing affects you. I am now speaking for this church, which is two hundred years old. There are young men here at this service that will be forever lost if they do not mend their ways. While the parents go to church their boys go to places of sin within gunshot of the average home. These gambling holes, places of vice and cocking mains that have been carried on in this beautiful village must be stopped. I do not care what these wicked men say, and I look no sleep over their words, but it hurts when I am told that I had better preach to my own people first. That is, however, what I am doing and will do. I could break your hearts with tears if I should tell you of the pleas that I have received from parents. The followers of wickedness jeer and laugh, for they know that the church is not in unison. But I want this church to work together in the suppression of this vice. I would suggest that these places of sin be bought and that the proprietors be asked to leave town and not start again.

"I want your prayers, your influence and money to carry on this movement of reform, and I want to know who will stand by me. Already I have received words of encouragement and the assurance of help, but I want it in black and white. When you asked me to come here you surely did not expect to get a man like a reed-stick that will bend any way to suit, one without a backbone. Send me a letter and say that you are with me. A revival in this church is all that I can expect as a result, but this movement must go on. The value of the property in this town will increase in proportion to the virtue that prevails. If the present condition continues many will sneak and sell their property in a short time.

"When the trolley comes to this place the first car will probably be run Sunday, and you citizens will be invited to a free ride. I beg of you don't you go, don't lend your presence to the affair. Do you expect your property to increase in value while disreputable women are brought here to ruin our boys? I am trying to stand between our boys and girls and vpuchsafe their freedom from these wicked influences, and yet there are people who look down and refuse to help in this cause of reformation."

After the service Pastor Shott met his people, and they gave him a hearty shake of the hand and a Godspeed. Many signed their name, thus saying that they will help in this reform movement.

Rev. Mr. Shott continued his hot shot at the service in the church last evening, and his remarks were aimed chiefly at his congregation. His text was taken from Esther, 4th chapter and 14th verse: "For if thou altogether hold thy peace at this time, thy and thy father's house shall be destroyed."

TITLE OF MARTIN ACT SALES IS DOUBTFUL.

Fidelity Trust Company Will Not Guarantee Them.

IS IT CONSTITUTIONAL?

PRESIDENT OF BOARD OF TRADE ASKS A QUESTION.

Fred C. Lounsbury Writes a Letter to Trust Company About Guaranteeing Titles of Property Bought Under the Martin Act—They Reply That They Will Not Agree to do This.

The following correspondence between Fred C. Lounsbury, president of the Board of Trade, and the Fidelity Trust Company explains itself:

Plainfield, N. J.,
May 23d, 1899.

The Fidelity Trust Co.,
Newark, N. J.

Gentlemen:—

There will be sold in Plainfield in the near future, more or less real estate under the "Martin Act" with which you are doubtless familiar. I would like to know whether your company will guarantee the title of property bought from the city when sold under this act, provided the title is otherwise found to be good and if so, what would be the average cost.

Awaiting the favor of your reply.

Yours very truly,
Fred C. Lounsbury.

Fidelity Trust Company,
Newark, N. J.
May 24th, 1899.

Fred C. Lounsbury, Esq.,
President Crescent Embossing Co.,
Plainfield, N. J.

Dear Sir:—

Yours of the 23d inst., in regard to guaranteeing properties in city of Plainfield, about to be sold under the Martin Act, received, and in reply would state that it has not been the custom of this company to guarantee titles obtained under this act, as there has been a question as to the constitutionality of the law under which said sales are held. There is a suit now pending to establish the validity of the law, and we are of the opinion that it will be several months before a decision is handed down.

We will, therefore, have to decline to guarantee all titles obtained from this source until said decision has been rendered.

Very respectfully yours,
Fidelity Trust Company,
By Edward W. Campbell.

CONSENTS NOT ALL SECURED.

Lawyer Moffett Corrects a Wrong Impression About Trolley Extension.

Lawyer Chas. Moffett informs The Press that all of the consents thus far secured for the extension of the Arlington avenue trolley are locked up in his safe, and that the required number is not yet obtained. The consent to run over property owned by the Hillside Cemetery Association has yet to be secured. The Plainfield Street Railway Company, Mr. Moffett says, is willing and anxious to build the line just as soon as they can secure the required number of consents and that of the Common Council.

A New Paper.

The first issue of the Saturday Tribune, the latest candidate for journalistic honors in the local field, made its appearance Saturday. It is edited and printed by R. M. Keller, of Plainfield avenue. Its contents are selected in a careful and interesting manner and the typographical appearance is excellent.

Fountain to Cost $400.

The members of the Loyal Temperance Legion are now busily engaged in collecting money with which they expect to erect a public drinking fountain that is to cost $400 when completed.

TOUR TO HOLY LAND WAS A PLEASANT ONE

It was Severe at Periods, but Withal Very Enjoyable.

BOOK TO BE WRITTEN ON IT.

EACH MEMBER OF PARTY WILL WRITE A CHAPTER IN IT.

Italian Trip on the Return was Especially Pleasant—Some of the Party Left in Europe—Mr. Honeyman Says the Party was Most Genial One He Ever Arranged—A Fine Ocean Voyage.

The members of the Honeyman party, who arrived home on the 24th, by the steamship Aller, have been kept pretty busy letting their friends know of the incidents of their homeward trip, and summing up their impression of the tour as a whole.

The ocean voyage home was pleasant for the first five days, and exceedingly unpleasant the seven following days, when there were gales, crossseas and rains, and when the Aller constantly pitched and rolled. Some of the more timid expected the ship to go to the bottom, but there was no period of real danger. There were only sixty first and second cabin passengers, and about 805 in the steerage. As a consequence there was plenty of upper deck room and no delay in serving.

The Italian Palestine party consisted of twelve, six having been left in Europe—two in Italy and four in Venice. Of the twelve, two only—two ladies—were seasick. Besides the usual amusements on deck, the party had with them a selected library of books of descriptive travel and history on the lands they had visited, some seventy volumes, and these were read and digested and aided to fix permanently their impressions.

To a Press reporter Mr. Honeyman stated that he had never taken out a party whose personnel was more pleasant or whose social intercourse more delightful than this. There was not a fault found, nor a harsh word spoken by one to another so far as he can recall during the entire trip. Each one found a place in the other's heart, and all were loathe to separate at New York.

The Italian tour on the return was especially pleasant. The weather was fine and Venice and Florence were seen at their best. The archæological lecturer at Rome, Prof. Reynaud, was at their disposal during all their visit there, and few things concerning the Palatine Hill, the Forum, or contiguous historical spots were left unseen or unexplained. The party had the rare good fortune to hear the Pope's bull, proclaiming the year 1900 as a year of Jubilee, read by a Cardinal in the vestibule of St. Peter's—the first bull issued within twenty five years; and saw for the first time in that period the great bronze door opened to mark the Jubilee and walked through them.

The members of the party have divided up the work between them of preparing chapters for a book which will describe the whole trip. Such a book has been usually issued annually after each summer trip. This will relate solely to the '99 Palestine tour. It is to be printed only for private circulation among the party and their friends.

Mr. Honeyman's next tour is June 29th to Europe.

BIDS TO BE REJECTED.

Councilmanic Street Committee Thinks Offers to Macadamize Too High.

After considering the bids for macadamizing West Third and Fourth streets, submitted to the Common Council at a recent meeting, the street committee has decided to recommend that the bids be rejected and that new offers be advertised for at a later date. The committee thinks that the bids are too high.

The high bids are caused by the fact that stone crushers have plenty of work on hand now, and the proprietors are in no mood to accept work at a low price such as prevailed last fall when their business was slack.

In considering the matter of expense the committee looked at it in the light that the property owners along the thoroughfares that are to be improved will have to stand a part of it and they are loath to make it any larger than is necessary. If the improvement is not made till next fall it will result in the cost being put in next year's tax bills.

Wagon Wheel Came Off; Horse Ran Away.

Crosby & Hill's horse and delivery wagon had a lively time of it about 9 o'clock Monday a. m. at the corner of Watchung and North avenues. Just as the rig was turning this corner one of the front wheels of the wagon came off and frightened the horse, who started to run away. He ran as far as Chas. Suhr's barber shop on Watchung avenue, when the wagon upset and the driver was thrown out. Bystanders ran to the assistance of the driver and in a few minutes the upset was straightened out. No one was injured, though it was a lucky escape.

HORSES RACED IN FACE OF STRONG WIND.

Fairly Good Time Made at Driving Park Saturday.

FAST CLIP OF AN AGED PAIR.

DRIVER EIGHTY YEARS OLD AND HORSE TWENTY.

Henry Hayes and "Andy" Got There in Good Shape Despite the Fact That Their Combined Age is Over a Hundred Years — Two Scheduled and Several Scrub Races Were Held.

There was more good racing at the Gentlemen's Driving Park Saturday afternoon. Although there were no prizes offered the sport was as keen as the week before. Four races were trotted and some fast time made.

The track had been thoroughly wet the night before, but the high wind that blew Saturday raised clouds of dust and made it unpleasant for the horses and men. The wind also interfered with the starters and judges, and brought the time down on some of the races two or three seconds.

There were not a large number of horses on the track Saturday. Many of the best ones are entered for the races at New Brunswick tomorrow, and their owners wanted to keep them fresh for those events.

Beside the scheduled races there were one or two other events of interest. A. C. Yail came out on the track with his gay "Keneim" and went a trial mile in 2:36. When three-quarters of the way around "Keneim" lost a shoe, and this retarded him so that he did not make as good time as he would have, barring the accident.

All the races were a mile. The first one was for the 2:45 class. The following are the summaries:

FIRST RACE.

H. J. Martin, b. g., "Dewey"	1	2	3
G. L. Wright, b. m., "Fairmount Maid"	3	4	0
Douglass Darby, b. g., "Bobby"	4	3	2
N. Smalley, b. g., "Fred"	2	1	0

Time—2:46; 2:38; 2:41.

The second race was a match between Phillip Jenner's bay mare, "Nancy," and Henry Hayes' brown gelding "Andy." Only two heats were trotted. "Andy" won the first in 2:53 and "Nancy" the second in 2:45½.

A remarkable fact about Mr. Hayes and "Andy" is, that the age of the horse and owner together make over a hundred years, Mr. Hayes being over eighty, and "Andy" over a score.

The third race was for the 2:30 class. There were three entries, but only two heats were trotted:

W. O. Baldwin, b. m., "Jennie"	1	2
John Martin, b. m., "Chelsea"	2	1
W. A. Coddington, b. g., "Red Davis"	3	3

Time—2:45; 2:38.

The fastest and most exciting event was the fourth race between the brown stallion "Woven Wind," from Woodbrook farm, and Thomas Brantingham's bay mare "Myrtle twig." Two more evenly matched horses than they were Saturday would be hard to find. Every heat in the face of the two, but has been worked out each this year, so is a little fusty. He won two heats out of the three, and "Myrtle-twig" the other. In all three heats the two horses went around the track neck and neck, and the result couldn't be anticipated until they had passed under the wire. Both horses can go better than 2:30, although the best time made Saturday by either of them was 2:30½.

FOURTH RACE, 2:25 class.

Woodbrook Farm, br. s., "Woven Wind"	1	2	2
T. Brantingham, b. m., "Myrtle-twig"	2	1	1
	1	2	2

Time—2:41; 2:30; 2:32.

PROF. WIGHTMAN'S PAPER.

It Was Highly Instructive to Somerset Teachers' Association.

Raritan, May 29.—The third and last meeting of the season of the Somerset County Teachers' Association was held Saturday in this place.

The opening exercises, which were held at 10:15 o'clock, were followed by several papers, discussions, and three-minute talks by members of the association. The feature of the day was Superintendent H. J. Wightman's paper on "Recent Advances in Teaching."

The paper was concise and powerful, presenting the best methods in all the primary and grammar branches of school work. The members showed their appreciation of it by voting unanimously to have the paper printed in pamphlet form and sent to all the absent ones. For the benefit of not only those who were unable to be present but for all concerned, it was further voted that Mr. Wightman should read a paper on the same subject at the next pedagogical meeting in November.

President H. C. Krebs, of Somerville, was re elected for another year. The next meeting will be held at Somerville, October 14th.

Awarded a Southern Contract

F. A. Dunham, C. E., of Park avenue, this city, has been awarded a contract to make a preliminary survey of the roads in a Tennessee county. In speaking of Mr. Dunham The Herald, of Cleveland, Tenn., says that he "is an authority on road building and a National authority."

CHURCH CONVENTION COMES TO AN END.

Seventh-Day Baptist Business Finished Sunday.

NEW OFFICERS ARE CHOSEN.

NEXT MEETING PLACE OF CONVENTION AT BERLIN, N. Y.

Edgar R. Green, of Berlin, Elected President of the Association in Place of H. M. Maxson, of Plainfield—Much Routine Business Transacted—Sacrament of Baptism Administered to Presbyterian

With the night's session the convention of the Seventh-Day Baptist Eastern Association, which has been held in this city during the last week, Sundays, came to an end.

The session of Saturday evening was a very interesting one. A song service was conducted by David E. Titsworth, and devotional exercises by Rev. W. D. Burdick, of Nile, N. Y. after which the young people's hour was led by Miss L. Gertrude Stillman, of Ashaway, R. I. Miss Stillman made a report of the number of young people in the Endeavor societies of the association. In the senior societies there are 309 active members, in the junior, 127.

The congregation listened to an interesting talk on "Industrial Mission Life in Africa," by Henry M. Maxson, illustrated with stereopticon views.

Sunday morning's service opened with a business session, at which the following officers were elected: President, Edgar R. Green, of Berlin, N. Y.; vice-president, George B. Shaw, of New York; recording secretary, Martin Sindall, of Dunellen; assistant recording secretary, Frank J. Green, of Berlin, N. Y.; treasurer, Arthur J. Spicer, of Plainfield; engrossing clerk, Martin Sindall, of Dunellen; corresponding secretary, Miss Winifred Curtis, of Westerly, R. I., committee on ordinations, A. Mears, A. H. Lewis, S. H. Davis; committee on missionary work, J. D. Spicer, O. A. Burdick, N. M. Mills; delegate to Southeastern Association, George Seeley; alternate, A. J. Potter; delegate to Central, Western and Northwestern Associations, O. D. Sherman; alternate, S. F. Randolph. A resolution was passed expressing the sympathy of the association with the Peace Conference now in session at the Hague, and their earnest prayer that complete success may crown its efforts. It was decided to hold the next meeting of the association at Berlin, N. Y.

The business session was followed by the Woman's Hour, conducted by Mrs. Anna Randolph, of this city. Mrs. Randolph spoke generally of *women in denomination. Miss Har*ris, of Shiloh, read a paper on "Loyalty," and Mrs. Henry M. Maxson one on "Be of Good Cheer." The sermon of the morning was to have been by Rev. Theodore L. Gardiner, of Salem College, West Virginia, but he was unexpectedly called home by a fatal accident to a member of his senior class, and his place was taken by Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, of this city, who preached a strong sermon from the text "Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid; yea, we establish the law," Romans, 3, 31. The sermon was a plea for the authority of the law of God, as given in the Scriptures.

The afternoon session began at 2 o'clock with devotional exercises, conducted by Rev. Theophilus A Gill, of New York. A layman's hour followed, Henry M. Maxson presiding. J. Arthur Wilson, of Dunellen, spoke on "Success," Miss Elizabeth A. Fisher, of Marlborough, on "Some Tendencies to be Avoided," and Alfred C. Prentiss, of New York, on "The Sacredness of the Medical Profession." Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis then conducted a Tract Society hour.

An unusually large attendance crowded the church at the evening session. A service of song was conducted by David E. Titsworth, after which came a sermon by Rev. Clayton A. Burdick, of Brookfield, N. Y. His text was Romans 8, 31: "What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?" His theme was the overcoming of obstacles in the Christian life, and his prescription for this purpose was formed of the three ingredients prayer, obedience and faith.

At the close of the sermon, the sacrement of baptism by immersion was administered by Rev. A. H. Lewis to Dr. Littell, of the University Settlement, New York. Dr. Littell was brought up in a Presbyterian family, was made an unbeliever by sorrow, but at last became a true Christian, and desired to acknowledge her faith. Her experience was given publicly just preceding her baptism. Her father had met Dr. Lewis, years before, and been impressed by words of his, and Dr. Littell, having become a believer in the Seventh-Day doctrine, desired to receive baptism at his hands.

The session was closed with a prayer and conference meeting, led by Rev. Ira Lee Cottrell, "I beseech you * * * that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice," was the keynote of this service, which had as its theme "Consecration," and made a fitting close to four days of pleasant and profitable conference.

BICYCLIST CRASHED INTO TROLLEY CAR.

A Wonder That George Bartle Was Not Killed.

WAS BADLY HURT, THOUGH.

SPURTED OUT FROM BEHIND LOAD OF HAY INTO CAR.

It Was Thought at First That the Bicyclist Had Been Killed, but an Examination of His Injuries Showed That They Were Not so Bad—Suffered From the Shock—Bartle Was to Blame.

What might have been a fatal accident was narrowly averted Thursday afternoon on West Front street opposite Liberty street. Geo. Bartle, 24 years of age, was riding east on his wheel toward home. He was behind a load of hay and was travelling fast when he decided to pass the load of hay. He had just started to pass the hay when a trolley car going west appeared and the rider and the car came together with a terrific crash.

It was thought at first that the young man was killed and people nearby who saw the accident shut their eyes with fear and trembling, thinking surely that the rider was killed. The *car was stopped as quick*ly as possible, and assistance was rendered the young man. He was carried to one side and his wheel, almost a wreck, was taken care of. Bartle was carried to his home, and Dr. Buchanan, of the borough, was immediately called. He found upon examination that Bartle's head was cut n several places which necessitated the taking of a few stitches. There were also a few cuts about the face and a cut on the knee. So far as the physician was able to determine he did not think that the scalp was fractured, and he did not think the young man's condition serious. He suffered greatly from shock and it was sometime before his condition in this respect grew better.

Those who saw the accident are inclined to blame Bartle for using such poor judgment and in not knowing that the road was clear before trying to pass the load of hay. That he was not killed is considered miraculous by those acquainted with the facts in the case.

PRINTER WHO IS MISSING

FRANK WEBSTER MYSTERIOUSLY DISAPPEARS FROM NEWARK.

He Formerly Worked on The Constitutionalist in Plainfield — Chief Grant Asked to Help Find Him.

Frank Webster, a native of this place, whom many will remember, has disappeared. Mr. Webster was living in Newark with his wife, and the police have been notified to be on the lookout for him. In view of the fact that Mr. Webster was born in this city, and worked on The Constitutionalist about fifteen years ago, and has many friends here, his wife thought he might come here, and a search was made. Captain Grant has been notified to look for him.

Mr. Webster has been suffering of late with pains in his head, and his eyesight has been affected, in fact he has been under treatment for his eyes. It is believed that his troubles have affected his mind, and it is feared that he may have done himself bodily injury.

He left his home at 125 East Kinney street last Tuesday, but the next day his relatives found him at Rahway and took him home. He left again Thursday and has not been seen since or heard of. He wore a derby hat, black cutaway coat, vest to match coat, dark striped trousers, small striped sateen outing shirt with collar attached, and no necktie. One shoe was cracked across the toe. Mr. Webster has money with him. Of late he has grown stout, weighing about 160 pounds. He had a star tatooed on his arm.

Mr. Webster resided when in Plainfield, at the corner of Watchung avenue and Second street. He is about 45 years of age, and is a son of Lewis Webster, who was one of Plainfield's best known citizens.

Sweets Won Success.

A very successful strawberry festival was held Saturday afternoon and evening in the W. C. T. U. rooms under the auspices of the members. Mrs. John French was chairman of the affair, and under her direction the members assisted in making a good sum of money for the benefit of the union.

Coming Nuptials

Cards are out announcing the marriage of Miss May Flynn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Flynn, of West Fourth street, to Dr. Francis P. *Donlon, of New York city. The mar*riage will take place in St. Mary's church Wednesday morning, June 7th, at 10 o'clock.

WANT TRANSIT OUT ARLINGTON AVENUE.

People are Wondering Why Franchise is Not Asked for.

CONSENTS WERE SECURED.

BUT STREET RAILWAY COMPANY SEEMS IN NO HURRY.

When They Secured Extension to Scotch Plains They Agreed to Build Out Arlington Avenue as Soon as the Right of Way Could be Got—Board of Trade Not Satisfied With Slow Way of Doing It.

The question as to whether the people of this city are to have trolley service out Arlington avenue towards Metuchen is one that is now agitating their minds to some extent. It will be remembered that when the Common Council granted the Plainfield Street Railway Company a franchise to run to Scotch Plains, the company agreed to construct and operate another line through Arlington avenue to the Crescent Oval, golf grounds, etc., within one year from the time the proper number of consents were obtained, and for the faithful performance of this work a bond of sufficient amount was given by the company. Now that the proper number of consents have been secured, according to the word of Lawyers Chas. Moffett and Harry C. Runyon, who secured them for the company, residents are wondering why the company does not apply for a franchise.

At the Board of Trade meeting last week it was stated by a certain member that in his opinion the trolley company was holding the long end of the stick, and to substantiate his statements he said that it is optional with the company when they apply for a franchise, and in fact if they choose they need never apply if it suited their purpose, and the Council would be helpless in the matter.

In view of these facts the members of the Board thought it advisable to look into the matter and see what can be done. The advantage of having a trolley rushing in an opposite direction from the one now in operation would be many. It would carry a great many people to the baseball grounds, golf links, and would likely be a means of carrying people from this city to the Lehigh Valley Railroad station at South Plainfield, and would in some manner reach Metuchen; besides it would bring people from the outlying districts into the city, and the local merchants would benefit.

With this end in view the members of the Board of Trade have taken an interest, and if they are assured that the Plainfield company does not in*tend to build the proposed line they* will see what can be done toward getting the Brunswick Traction Company to come to Plainfield from Metuchen. It is believed by a majority of the people of Plainfield that trolley connection in the above-named direction would be of as much value in Plainfield as any they now have, and for that reason strong efforts are now being made to bring the matter to a focus.

SAYS HE SWORE AT HIM.

ADAM FRITZ ARRESTED FOR USING PROFANITY.

O. F. Pierson the Complainant—Councilman Hetfield, Who Made Similar Charges a Year Ago, Will Defend Him.

For the second time within a year Adam Fritz, of Somerville street, has been arrested in this city for using profane and indecent language. The complainant this time is Oscar F. Pierson, the painter, and the alleged offense occurred Saturday afternoon on West Front street, just after Fritz and Pierson had returned from a drive together.

The last time that Fritz was arrested the complainant was Councilman Walter Hetfield, who up to that time had been his warm friend. Fritz pleaded guilty to the charge and paid a fine of $3. Now Fritz and the Councilman are friends once more. So friendly are they that Hetfield is Fritz's lawyer in this new trouble.

Sometime ago Pierson bought a horse of Fritz, in payment for which he gave a note, it is said. Saturday afternoon the two men met on West Front street and Fritz invited Pierson to take a drive with him.

Upon their return Fritz let Pierson out where he had picked him up and stopped for a few minutes talk, and what was said is not known, but Pierson claims that without any provocation Fritz suddenly began to call him vile names and use insulting language toward him.

Pierson went directly up to Counsellor McClure's office and had him to make out a complaint against Fritz, and later Pierson swore out a warrant for his arrest before City Judge Runyon. The paper was placed in an officer's hands, but in some way Fritz heard of the matter, and instead of waiting to be placed under arrest, gave himself up to the Judge. It is likely that his trial will come off Saturday morning.

HAVANA FROM ALL SIDES.

The City Hides Much Dirt and Squalor Under Finery and Glitter.

FEVER RIDDEN HARBOR.

Beauty of the Hills and Palms, and Interesting Architecture of the Ancient Houses.

There Has Been a Settlement on Its Site Since 1519—Is Divided Into Two Parts—Show Places of the City—The Narrow Streets and the Idle, Easy-Going Population.

A beautiful city is Havana, Havanash. La Havana, San Cristobal de la Habana, the town of St. Christopher of the Haven. Like most tropical towns and like many peoples of the tropics, it hides much dirt and squalor under much finery and glitter. One must not dwell on its incredibly foul harbor, that is poisonous the year round with fever. Looking inland, there shine tall palms and rolling hills, hung with draperies of deep and glowing green. The burning sun of Cancer is reflected from white spires and roofs.

Over romantic walls there peep fantastic and graceful trees, strange to Northern eyes. Ancient houses, with deep archways and with mysterious gratings over medieval windows, incite to speculation. Narrow streets are bright with the colored dress of country people, burned brown by a hot sun. Mules and donkeys hung with pannniers, handsome with braided bridles, are tethered along the houses fronts, while their owners wait for a purchaser of the rich fruit, the tiny red bananas, huge plantains, long sugar canes and great yellow globes of oranges with which the animals are laden.

Men in white clothes, women in mantillas, pass through the streets. In the big park, the public square, are chattering merry crowds. Careless and pleasure-wooing people they seem and are, and it is hard to imagine that the idle, easy going place was taken and retaken once by the worst buccaneers who ever infested the Spanish Main.

Havana is one of the oldest cities of the Western World. There has been settlement on its site since 1519. It is divided into two parts—the old town and the new. The old town is inside of the ancient walls, while the new part is outside, and has many pretty suburbs. Good roads lead to it from the lovely country that rises in fine stretches behind it.

One of the show places of the city is the cathedral, which was built in 1724, and which is of interest to the whole world because it contains the tomb of Columbus. His body has been taken away, but the tomb and the memorial stone and inscriptions remain.

The history of the city is bloody. It was the bone of contention between the Spanish and the pirates throughout the sixteenth century, and its narrow streets were the scenes of dreadful deeds. The buccaneers captured it many times while their power lasted, and each time the city had to pay enormous tribute. In the fights the town was destroyed partly, and much of it has been rebuilt over and over again.

Apart from the attacks of the buccaneers, it suffered in the wars of Spain with other Powers, and in 1762 was taken by the British. The siege that perched its capture is memorable in British history on account of the enormous loss on the English ships, not from fighting, but from yellow fever and smallpox.

Filbert Culture in Italy.

It will surprise many to hear that in certain districts of Italy the filbert crop rivals the produce of the vine in commercial importance. These delicious nuts are grown on bushes or shrubs, which are arranged in groups that are from 15 to 25 feet apart so as to insure the access of plenty of light and air. They thrive best in deep clayey soil, and the planting takes place during November and December of slips from the mother plant. Seeds could be used but the growth would be too slow to be profitable. As it is, the shrubs do not bear fruit until the third year, any blossoms appearing before that time being removed, so that the plant shall not be impoverished. The plants are periodically pruned, and any slips which have failed to sprout are removed and replaced by others; so that there are plantations which remain in full growth, although nearly a hundred years old. The filbert is not subject to the diseases common to other crops, but it suffers severely from hailstones and from cold winds.

WOMEN OUTLIVE MEN.

They May Also Retain Youthful Beauty to an Old Age.

It is strange, but true, that the most delicate child often outlives his stronger brother or sister. Many instances are on record of the long survival of those who seemed destined to die early. It is said of Voltaire, who lived to be eighty-four years old, that he was so delicate at birth that he could not be baptised for several months. Sir Isaac Newton, it was once said, would not live a week, but he celebrated his eighty-fifth birthday. Fontanelle lived to be a hundred, although he was so frail a birth that the priest had to go to his home to baptize him.

Even more interesting than this is the statement by Professor Buchner that it is possible for a woman to preserve her youthful beauty even to old age, or, in some instances, to regain it. The Marquise of Villarbo died at eighty-six with all the marks of youth in her face. Margaret Verdun at sixty-five smoothed out the wrinkles, her hair grew again and her third set of teeth appeared. Cases of this third dentition are not rare.

The Professor has still further hope for the fair sex in the announcement that women live longer than men. One French woman, Marie Prioux, who died in 1857, was said to be 158 years old. Statistics of the various countries on this point are remarkable. In Germany only 4.3 of 1,000 males reach the age of 100, while more than 500 of 1,000 females reach that age. In the United States there are 2,583 females to 1,000 male centenarians. In France of ten centenarians seven were women and only three men. In the rest of Europe, of twenty-one centenarians sixteen were women.

"Bicycle" for Nursemaids.

A nursemaid's cycle is the latest invention in the wheel line. It is a tricycle, the two front wheels of which are quite close together, above these is a passenger seat resembling a small reclining chair. For use in carrying an infant out to air the passenger seat is provided with a hinged bottom, making the bottom part adjustable at a level with the seat in order to form a bed for the infant while sleeping. A foot rest at the bottom serves as the foot of the bed.

The front wheels are pivotal in separate forks and hold the machine upright under all ordinary conditions, thus preserving the passengers from accidents from tipping over. The other parts of the machine, frame, rear wheel, pedals, saddle, &c., are the same as in the ordinary bicycle.

The steering is done with the front wheels, stability is maintained by the support of the machine being constantly upon three fixed points, by mounting the front wheels in separate pivoted forks and connecting them with the handle-bar so as to turn them simultaneously.

Choosing a Wife for Her Teeth.

One of the most curious and interesting of bridal customs among the Esquimos is the process of choosing a bride, not for her face, her figure or her fortune, but for the excellence and strength of her teeth.

Up in the polar circle, where a man's blood freezes, and parts of him drop off at the touch of the icy blast, it is a difficult matter to keep the untanned skins from hardening and cracking. There is only one process known to the Eskimo, that of chewing. It is necessary to perform this operation every two or three months, and it is a part of the wife's duties. It is for that reason that an Eskimo selects his future helpmates for the size of their teeth and the strength of their jaws. Of course one wife cannot attend to all the skins, and sometimes an Eskimo has as many as ten loving helpmates.

Wives are bought, sold and exchanged among the Eskimos. The price fluctuates in similar manner to the price of wheat or corn, or stocks on Exchange. A father with a growing daughter will be approached by a neighbor and offered one, two or three dogs for her, according to her maxillary powers. Sometimes a blue foxskin or a dozen strips of blubber may enter into the bargain, but dogs are generally the factors used.

Poster Parties.

Do you want something new in the way of entertainment? Then give a poster party. Don't get a lot of posters to ornament your rooms, but request your friends to come representing some familiar poster character. The assembled party of poster persons will certainly have a very jolly time together.

Costume parties are pretty generally approved by those who enter into the spirit of the thing. And the popular posters of the last few years furnish many inviting opportunities for weird dressing and posing. Such costumes are not hard to get up, and no expensive material need be used. If the invited friends are well acquainted and unconstrained no other entertainment need be provided than informal music and dancing and light refreshments, for each guest will bring his or her share to the amusement of all.

India has 25,000,000 widows, and 77,000 children under one year old.

The age limit for marriage is put at 12 years but the law is constantly broken. There is also a law that widows may remarry, but as only six have done so in thirty years it shows the power of custom. The widow's life is a very hard one; she is the family drudge, her jewels and clothing are taken from her, and she is in no sense held accountable for her husband's death.

TO CURE ROUND SHOULDERS

It Is to be Found in Proper Foods and Regular Exercise.

To cure round shoulders, says "a woman who knows," the best and most nourishing foods must be taken as weakness of constitution or health is one of the first causes of round shoulders. You should take a strong iron and quinine tonic, and if it is cold weather when you begin the cure take cod liver oil as well. If this is apt to disagree take cream instead. You must keep regular hours as to meals and sleep, and have plenty out-door exercise, only without undue exertion. Walking is about the best exercise to take, although riding and bicycling may be indulged in when you are getting better.

You must be careful to sleep on a hard mattress, never on a feather bed, and you must take care that your pillows are not raised too much as this is apt to throw the head forward and add to the rounded shoulders, instead of making them any better. You must be careful always to walk straight and never lounge along the road. The way to do this is to hold the shoulders well back, the chin, in the air, to look straight forward on a level with your eyes, and never droop the head and go through life looking for possible pins on the ground.

On no account must you stoop over your work or reading, as this is bad indeed. If you are sewing you must sit in a low chair, and one that has a straight back to lean against. Or by any chance you have to sit on a high chair to do your work, you must see that you have a footstool. In writing you should either sit at a table which is the proper height, or you should always use a sloped desk, and in reading never hold the book up your knee, but hold it up and lean back or sit upright while reading.

You should often hold your hands behind your back and walk this way up and down a room or out of doors for ten minutes at a time, when you have nothing better to do. You must also lie flat on a backboard or the door for several hours a day.

The Most Curious Sleeve.

Here is the most curious sleeve designed for fashionable women in many a day. And when past and present sleeves are considered that is surely saying much for its novelty.

It is the new dinner sleeve of the moment which forms an old-fashioned mitt when it reaches the hand.

It answers the purpose of sleeve and glove in one, and is quite the fad of the hour for dinner wear, as it does away with the awkwardness of removing the glove from the hand when dining.

The most effective of these odd dinner sleeves are made of spangled tulle or net. The filmy fabric clings closely to the arm and when it reaches the wrist it is shaped like a mitt of the days of our grandmothers. It just covers the knuckles, allowing the rings to show to good advantage.

FASHION'S NEWEST SLEEVE.

The sleeve does not reach to the shoulder, but, like many of the ultrafashionable sleeves of the day, is suspended from it by a band of velvet or jewels. Just where the sleeve is attached to the bodice is a mystery to the uninitiated, but it goes without saying that it is attached and it is not necessary to put on one's sleeve first and one's bodice afterward.

Economizing Space.

A woman who investigated how the innumerable suits and jackets are taken care of in the shops where these are offered for sale discovered that the necessary economy of space comes from the use of metal rods upon which the garments are suspended by means of the hangers. She promptly applied the same principle to her own limited supply of closet room, with the result that she is able now to utilize space that can be found to any clothespress, however small. From a near-by plumber she got all the gaspipe tubing she needed cut in the required lengths. These were mounted in the closet by simply securing them on the hook boards, taking care that they fitted snugly between walls. Two pairs of the cheap white wire hangers completed the closet outfit, and now skirts and bodices, wrappers and jackets are kept within easy reach in compact space and in good shape. In particular is the parlor floor closet, when thus equipped, found to be much more useful, for there may hang the reserve overcoats and heavy storm wraps of the entire household, which have heretofore often proved too bulky and unmanageable for it.

COME BACK.

"Won't you change your mind, Maud?"

"It is too late to change. The dogcart is at the door."

"What does that matter? It can go back to the stables. I wish you would."

"My dear Jack, do not add inconsistency to my other faults. Goodness knows the list of them is long enough in your estimation."

The speakers were a man and a woman, both young, and both good to look upon. She was very pretty and very young, but her mouth was set in a hard line and there was defiance in her eyes. The man stood in front of her, looking at her anxiously, and mingled with the cawing of the rooks overhead came the sound of a horse's hoofs, impatiently pawing the gravel in front of the hall door. Truly the dogcart was waiting.

Jack Rodney gave a sigh which was almost a groan, then drew himself up and squared his shoulders with the involuntary action of a man who has to say something unpleasant and who hates the task.

"Very well, Maud. I can say no more. It is evident we cannot go on like this. Our lives are burdens to us, and other people will begin to notice that we are not on friendly terms. Perhaps when I am away you will think better of me. I may not irritate you so much. You know, I only speak to you for your own good."

"You preach—you don't speak."

"Maud!"

"Oh, don't let us argue. I am sick of it."

"And of me, too, I suppose? Well, then, good-by, if you will have it so. I have left a note for you on the boudoir table. Will you kiss me?"

"No. It is stupid to be hypocritical, and there are no onlookers."

With another sigh the man turned away, and without one backward glance walked to where the dogcart stood in readiness, took the reins and in a minute the sound of a horse's swift trot was heard down the gravel drive.

Maud Rodney sat quite still where her husband had left her until the faintest sounds had died away. Then she rose and pulled a rose from a tree as she passed, but it fell to pieces as she gathered it, and a thorn scratched her finger. After all, it was as well that Jack had gone to Norway. They were always quarreling, and he never let her do as she liked. She had been so spoiled at home that she could not brook the slightest contradiction; besides, she wanted to show him how independent she was and how well she could do without him.

It was getting cold, and she shivered. Where was her warm cloak, which Jack always wrapped around her when the day was falling. The maid would bring it. She went to the house to summon her. As she passed through the open French window into the boudoir she thought of the note left for her by her husband.

"Another lecture, I suppose," she muttered, as she broke the seal. It contained a blank check and a short note, which said:

"My Darling Wife—You can fill up the inclosed for any amount you like. Do not deny yourself during my banishment, and try to recall me as soon as you can. You know how much I love you. Yours ever, JACK."

She twisted the letter about in her fingers, and the corners of her mouth drooped as those of a child about to cry, but she forced back the tears and tried to tell herself she was a woman of spirit.

Wrapping a shawl round her, she went again into the dusky garden and wandered down a long green alley, with tall white foxgloves bordering it on either side. They looked uncanny in the dim light, and the ground pale blossoms in the distance seemed to take queer shapes and to bend and wave like fantastic spirit forms made misty by the darkness. It was so horribly still and yet the throb of the night beat like a silent pulse in the air. Two white owls flew over her head and startled her with their mournful cry, and surely—yes surely—there in the distance under the shadow of the trees was the crouching form of a man. Mrs. Rodney's heart sank into her boots, and with a cry of "Jack, Jack!" she turned and fled. Footsteps followed fast behind her, and like a flash the thought went through her mind that she was left defenceless.

"Jack, come back! Oh, come back!" was her voiceless cry as she felt her strength going and feet flagging, but as she turned the corner she saw a maidservant running toward her. She paused to gain breath, and then went on. A happy thought flashed through her mind. Her husband had returned. She would never be wilful again.

"Your master—has he come back?" she gasped.

The woman nodded, but said nothing.

At the hall door a group of people were standing, and their faces looked pale and terrified. She heard murmurs of "poor fellow," "struck on his head," "all over in a moment," and with an icy fear in her heart she rushed into the hall. A man held up his hand for silence.

On a low couch lay a still form, with a handkerchief over the face. With trembling hands she lifted it and saw her husband, quite white, quite still. He had come back, yet not he, but a lifeless form, an outward semblance only of the man she had loved, yet banished. And then she knew that she was indeed alone. And yet the world would go on just the same, the flowers bloom, the birds sing and morning and night dawn and darken, making up a round of weary years, while only God and her own heart would know the despairing bitterness of her cry, "Come back!"

FOUR TRUTHFUL FACTS.

Exalt a harmless indulgence into the domain of sinfulness, and you will be sure to make it wonderfully popular.

A woman either fears or hates the man who knows just how old she is. He is liable to give her away at any moment.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter was sent there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for them?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think there especially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

TEN FOR FIVE CENTS. RIPANS ONE GIVES RELIEF

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York World concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and find means a saving of $3 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month and I would not be without them now if it were not a dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and if one does get the benefit I feel in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case in the papers enables some other person to get relief, I want to be as greatly benefited as I have been. I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about it, no benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

JUNE NUPTIALS UNDER PRETTY FLORAL BELL

Wedding of William Rowley and Mara Elizabeth Eycke.

BRIDE LOOKED HANDSOME.

BROTHERS OF THE GROOM ACTED AS USHERS.

Ceremony Performed by Rev. C. E. Herring and Witnessed by Many Congratulating Friends—House Elaborately Decorated With Flowers for the Occasion—Will Reside on Linden Avenue.

There was a pretty wedding celebrated Tuesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Pope, at No. 39 Summit avenue, when William Wilder Rowley, of Washington Park, and Miss Mara Elizabeth Eycke were made husband and wife.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Charles E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, in the front parlors of the Pope residence. The bridal couple stood beneath a floral bell composed of syringos and peonies, suspended by evergreen festoons from the corners of the front bay windows. The bride, who is a pronounced brunette, wore a gown of white satin, with duchess lace and pearl trimmings, with a bridal veil caught together with lilies of the valley. She carried a bouquet of pink roses.

Messrs. Clark and George D. Rowley, brothers of the groom, filled the important function of ushers. As the bride and groom entered the parlor and took their places before the officiating clergyman, Lohengrin's wedding march was played by P. Ludwig Conde's orchestra, assisted by Miss Mamie Alpaugh, of High Bridge, N. J., with piano accompaniment, followed at the close of the ceremony by "The Lost Chord." While the happy couple were receiving the congratulations of the guests the orchestra rendered very exquisitely Mendelssohn's wedding march.

After the congratulations the guests enjoyed a sumptuous wedding supper, served in the dinning room which had been transformed into a veritable bower of beauty. Evergreen festoons entwined with pink roses extended from the four corners of the room and fastened at the chandelier, making a very pretty effect. The table looked very handsome and in the centre was placed the wedding cake which gave a picturesque and inviting appearance.

The parlors and hall were also prettily decorated with flowers and potted plants.

The bride is an estimable young lady and has many friends in the so*cial circle which she moves. She is a* native of Lamington, N. J., but has made her home for sometime with the family of Mr. Pope. For a time the bride was employed as a trained nurse in the general Hospital at Elizabeth.

FIREMEN GAVE A CHAIR.

FELICITIOUS TIME BETWEEN THE CITY AND BOROUGH LADDIES.

Firemen's Chair Presented to Warren Engine Company by Members of Engine Company No. 2, of This City.

In winding up the affairs of the volunteer fire department the fire laddies of the various companies have adopted a novel method of disposing of their property. Some time ago they decided to remember their friends in other departments by distributing among them the furniture and some of their effects as souvenirs.

Last Tuesday the members of Engine Company No. 2 visited Warren Engine Company No. 1, of North Plainfield, and presented them with a foreman's chair. C. J. Newman, of No. 2, made the presentation speech and in a felicitious manner donated the chair on behalf of the members of the company. Foreman Bennett, of No. 1, responded and in a short speech thanked the donors for the kind remembrance and said he trusted the good feeling which had existed so long would be maintained for an indefinite period tho' the boys of No. 2 had disbanded as a fire organization. Speeches were also made by Chief Fairchild and other members of No. 1 and No. 2.

After the presentation speeches the members of No. 2 were invited to a collation at the Crescent Hotel where a pleasant time was enjoyed for an hour or two. Next Tuesday evening the members of No. 2 will go to Perth Amboy and present Lincoln Hose Co. No. 1, of that city, with three pictures and the old ballot box so long used by them.

Sudden Death of Samuel Giles.

Samuel Giles, of Randolphville, below New Market, died suddenly of apoplexy yesterday. He had been talking with a neighbor at an early hour this morning, apparently in good health. A few minutes later the neighbor saw him lying on the ground in his garden and hastened to him to find him dead. Mr. Giles was very ill the past winter, but seemed to have regained his usual health. It is thought that the excessive heat superinduced the fatal stroke. Mr. Giles was 85 years of age, and leaves a widow and twelve children. One of his sons works in Warnock's bakery on North avenue.

E. B. Ryder and family, of Central avenue, have returned home from a short vacation.

HEADON COLLISION ON THE LEHIGH.

Freight Trains Wrecked at Bound Brook.

FLAGMAN WAS TO BLAME.

TWO ENGINES AND SEVENTEEN CARS WERE WRECKED.

Accident Occurred at 2:30 This Morning on the Curve Diagonally Between the Central and Lehigh Valley Stations—Fortunately No One Hurt—Cars Strewn on to Central's Tracks.

Bound Brook, June 7—The fifth serious wreck on the Lehigh Valley Railroad at Bound Brook since the first of the year occurred this morning at 2:30 o'clock when two freight and coal trains had a headon collision, wrecking seventeen cars, two locomotives and blocking both tracks of the Lehigh and the eastbound freight track of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, which is only a few feet distant from the former road. The trains concerned in the wreck were the eastbound local freight, drawn by Engine No. 642, and a westbound coal train, drawn by Engine No. 728. Wallie Carey, of Easton, was engineer of the first named engine and Elmer Welck, of Wilkesbarre, of the latter.

The locomotive of the eastbound freight was driving cars on the westbound track west of the station. A flagman had been sent to warn the westbound freight, but he was not far enough down the track. His signal came too late to prevent the freight train from stopping, and the two locomotives came together on a sharp curve diagonally opposite both the Lehigh and the Central stations.

The westbound train was moving at the rate of twenty miles an hour, and the other engine at a slightly slower rate. The crews of both locomotives saw that the collision could not be averted and they jumped without injury to themselves. The men on the rear end of the westbound train were badly jarred up by the col*lision, but not seriously hurt.*

The two locomotives came together with a compact that wrecked the front of each engine and derailed them. Seventeen empty cars were derailed and smashed into kindling wood, being strewn over a long stretch of track. The cars were piled in a heap twenty five feet high at one point, and both tracks of the Lehigh blocked. A number of the wrecked cars were thrown a distance of fifty feet onto the eastbound freight track of the Central Railroad. The wires of the Western Union Telegraph Company were torn down and the block system of the Central Railroad put out of order.

Wrecking trains were summoned from Easton and Perth Amboy, but it will take all day to get the tracks open and the damage repaired. Superin*tendent Springs is on hand overseeing* the work.

HIGH MASONS MET IN JERUSALEM LODGE

Grand Master Ewan Among Those Present.

ADDRESS ON MASONRY.

SPLENDID TALK GIVEN BY REV. J. W. RICHARDSON.

Subject of the Address Was "Masonry a Fact, Not a Mummery"—Visitors Received With Grand Honors—Dr. Richardson's Address Was Highly Appreciated—A Social Time Followed.

Notwithstanding the intense heat Tuesday the members of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. and A. M., entertained several of the Grand Lodge officers, and spent a very enjoyable time among themselves. There was present, among the high officers, Grand Master Josiah W. Ewan, Grand Senior Warden W. Holt Apgar, Grand Junior Warden Walter Chandler, Grand Tyler Stillman, also district deputies representing the Masonic districts of the State.

The visitors were received with grand honors and were introduced by District Deputy C.C. Howard, of the Fifth Masonic District, of Plainfield, after which the members and visitors had the pleasure of listening to an eloquent address by Rev. J. W. Richardson, pastor of the Park Avenue Baptist church. Mr. Richardson's address was on the subject: "Masonry a Fact, Not a Mummery." It was a powerful address and was listened to attentively by all. A portion of the address is as follows:

"By the sweetly solemn scenes of the lodgeroom, Masons are taught to take some poor frozen brother and place his naked flesh against their own warm hearts; to stoop down and feel the breath of misfortune. Masonry comes and uses its vast resources as a barrier between a brother's need. Oh, Masonry reaches into many a blighted life, and with angelic touch fills its earth with roses, its heaven with stars, and drapes its future with the crimson of hope! Masonic sympathy is not pretense. In the sunshine of its altar it presents a circle of loving hearts and pleasant companionships, and encouragement for those who toil alone in the great bargain of life. And for pain and sickness it comes swiftly with silver wings and affectionate attention. Masonic sympathy is not of that sublimated sort that concerns itself only with ethereal things and forgets the earthly.

"By the application of these principles, Masonry aims to present a high type of manhood to the community! Very few of the outside world really understand the aid of Masonic work. Some foolishly think that Masons come together and, like the schoolboys, turn the lodgeroom into a playground for ridiculous pranks. I would that they could know how serious and sublime, and peculiarly adapted Masonic methods are to work hand in hand with the Christian civilization. It touches and blesses society in a thousand ways, and yet the locality of these blessings is unsuspected, because it is so unostentiously done.

"The Bible is the mainspring of its mechanism. Its ideals come from that book. The very secrecy of Masonic preparation, against which the unsophisticated proclaim, is a prominent page in the lesson book of Truth. Secrecy is not a Masonic eccentricity; the great Father works silently. Goodness needs no publicity. So there is a profound meaning in the fact that Masonary opens no recruiting offices, nor offers financial inducements to fill its ranks Masonry teaches a profound lesson by requir*ing every applicant for admission to* come unsolicited and offer himself as a free will offering at its shrine! In this institution giving is made a luxury—a closed mouth accompanies the open hand. This is the basis of that Masonic charitableness which closes the lips against repeating the faults of a brother, and which keeps secret from a cynical world the need of some unfortunate.

"Finally, these symbols, and rites, and passwords, are to aid man in his religious training. This is the aim of all Masonic teaching. He who looks no further than the sentimental, and intellectual, has not learned Masonry. He who says it has no religious office must be unfamiliar with its principles. The order of service in a church is not more specially arranged to bring worship of God before the people than are Masonic rituals to impress that same thought upon its craftsmen. From its alpha to omega Freemasonry is an illustration of religious facts, setting forth religious doctrines by sublimely religious lessons of obedi-

WILL RAISE $2,500 FOR A CELEBRATION.

Formal Steps Taken to Observe Fourth of July.

QUESTION OF ORGANIZING.

SOME WANTED CATHOLIC SOCIETIES REPRESENTED.

William Newcorn Elected President of the Committee to Go Ahead With Plans for the Event—It is Proposed to Have a Glorious Day of It—Another Meeting Next Wednesday.

There was not as large a representation of organizations present at the meeting held in Red Men's Hall last Tuesday for the purpose of perfecting an organization to bring about a celebration in this city on the Fourth of July as had been expected. It may be possible that the hot weather had something to do with the apparent lack of interest in the matter. When the roll was called it was found that but 26 organizations were represented.

The meeting was called to order by William Westphal, of Miantonomo Tribe of Red Men, and William Newcorn was named a temporary secretary. After the call of the roll at the suggestion of Justice T. W. Nash, a lively debate took place upon the propriety of perfecting a permanent organization. Robert M. Clark, of Franklin Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., favored forming a permanent organization at once, as did several other gentlemen. Justice Nash, who said he represented the G. A. R. organization, at once took issue with Mr. Clark on the ground that no Catholic organization was represented at the meeting and that the various Catholic organization had not yet held meetings to be able to appoint delegates to attend this meeting. He believed that it was unjust to cut the Catholics out of having a voice in the matter of this permanent organization. The celebration is to be by all the people and not by any clique or faction, said Justice Nash, and he was decidedly opposed to ignoring these very worthy class of citizens. F. C. Lounsbury expressed himself as having the same view—he wished all classes of people represented. The discussion was finally brought to a close by a motion being made to proceed to the perfection of a permanent organization which was adopted and the following officers were chosen: President, William Newcorn, of Miantonomo Tribe of Red Men; secretary, Robert M. Clark, of Franklin Council, Jr. O. U. A. M.; vice presidents, Mayors Rockfellow and Smalley.

Messrs. F. C. Lounsbury, R. M. Clark, V. W. Nash, S. E. Flanagery and Wm. Newcorn were appointed a committee to retire to an ante room and draft a general plan for a celebration, and to decide of what the celebration should consist. The committee reported in favor of having a parade of various city organizations in the morning and an open air address in the afternoon, with fireworks in the evening. It was the sense of the committee that $2,500 be raised by popular subscriptions to defray the expense of the proposed celebration. The meeting was adjourned to next Wednesday evening at the same hall at 8 o'clock.

Before adjourning Justice Nash stated that there was $26 in the City National Bank which had been left on hand after defraying the expense of celebration of four years ago. It was available if the committee wished to use it. No definite plans was outlined for raising the funds necessary for the celebration, but it is expected that the various organizations will appoint committees to look after this most important matter.

The finance committee is to be appointed by President Newcorn.

LAYING RAILS TODAY.

TROLLEY TRACKS BEING LAID TO SCOTCH PLAINS.

A Gang of 250 Italians Put to Work on East Second Street Yesterday—The Cars Will Soon Run Over It.

A gang of 250 Italian laborers were put to work on East Second street, a rove Richmond street, yesterday, by Contractor L. W. Serrell, Jr., laying the rails for the Scotch Plains extension of the Plainfield Street Railway Company. It was the intention to commence laying the rails on Richmond street, making direct connection with the Netherwood line of the company, but yesterday the special work, such as joints, curves, etc., failed to arrive, and the work could not be started at that point.

Civil Engineer VanEmburgh was roused out at 4 o'clock yesterday a. m. and surveyed the course of the track along Second street before 7 o'clock so that the laborers would not be delayed. A single track will be laid to about 400 feet beyond Netherwood avenue. There the route commences running over private property and from that point to Scotch Plains the line will be double tracked. The roadbed is all graded between this city and Scotch Plains, and it is calculated that the rails will be laid by next week, and the week after trolley cars will be running over the line.

The cross-county route to Elizabeth is also graded between Westfield and Cranford, and within a few days a big gang of men will be put to work grading the roadbed from Scotch Plains to Westfield.

ADVERTISE THE CITY.

THAT IS THE IDEA TO BE FORCED ON BUSINESS MEN.

Committee Appointed by Mayor Smalley Last Night and Discussed Plans for an Organization This Evening.

A meeting of the committee appointed by Mayor Smalley, chairman of the recent meeting of the business men of the city, was held last night at the office of J. B. Coward. Mayor Rockfellow, James E. Martine, J. B. Coward and Silas D. Drake were present.

The situation of the business men in the city with respect to opportunities for increasing their business and making Plainfield a greater and more successful town, was informally discussed. All the members of the committee talked freely and advanced various ideas.

One thing definitely decided upon was to recommend to the meeting this *evening that a permanent organiza*tion be formed immediately, and that two committees be named to go ahead with the work that is most necessary for the welfare of the town. One of these is an advertising committee and the other a committee of progress.

It was suggested that advertising was one of the best things for Plainfield, but that it must be prosecuted in a systematic, permanent and expert manner to bring returns. The committee thought that the best thing to do in this line was to start a subscription paper among the merchants and other people interested for the purpose of raising a good sized sum of money to advertise the town advantage.

Mr. Drake had an idea with reference to establishing factories in the west end of the city which he broached in an informal manner, but at the meeting this evening he will probably explain it more fully

The meeting this evening will be held in Coward's hall on East Front street, and it is desired that every business man, as well as all others interested, attend the meeting.

NUPTIAL MASS AT ST. MARY'S CHURCH.

Brilliant Wedding Celebrated There This Morning.

AN IMPRESSIVE SERVICE.

DR. DONLON AND MISS FLYNN THE CONTRACTING PARTIES.

Ceremony Occupied Three-quarters of an Hour and Was a Beautiful Sight—Performed by Rev. T. J. Donlon, of St. Agnes Church, New York—The Bridal Party an Elaborate One.

St. Mary's (R. C.) church was thronged with a fashionable assemblage yesterday, when, for the third time in the history of the church, a nuptial mass was performed. It was, indeed, a pretty sight and one that will long be remembered by everyone present. The altar candles were brilliantly lighted, while the altar dec*orations were made up of white* peonies and roses. In front of the altar there was a pleasing arrangement of choice flowers, while on either side were arranged beautiful and stately palms.

The contracting parties were Miss May Flynn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Flynn, of 444 West Fourth street, and Dr. Francis L. Donlon, M. D., a prominent physician of New York.

While the guests were being seated, and prior to the appearance of the bridal party, Miss Mary Smith, organist of the church, executed a number of very pretty selections. Promptly at 10 o'clock, the hour appointed for the wedding, the sweet strains of the Lohengrin wedding march announced the arrival of the party. As several members entered the church every eye was centred on the participants, and with admiring glances watched them approach the altar.

The party was led by the ushers, three of whom are physicians and close friends of the groom, while the fourth is a brother of the bride. They were Drs. Smyth, Howley, Davis, of New York, and Edward A. Flynn, of this city. Following them was the bridesmaid, Miss Katherine Flynn, sister of the bride, who was gowned in white organdie over pink silk. She carried a bouquet of pink rosebuds.

Then appeared the bride, accompanied by her father, who gave her away in marriage. She was richly gowned in white satin of an oyster shade, trimmed with point de esprit lace. She also wore a veil caught up with lilies of the valley. In her hand she carried a prayer-book.

As the party approached the altar they were met by the groom and his best man, Dr. P. J. Byrne, of New York. A circle was formed in front of Rev. T. J. Donlon, of St. Agnes (R. C.) church, of New York, who performed the ceremony. Immediately following the marriage ceremony the nuptial mass was held. During the mass the bride and groom ascended the altar to the inner side, where they received the blessing given by the officiating clergyman. This is a very pretty service, and the musical response by the choir of the church was perfectly given. The entire service consumed about three-quarters of an hour and was watched with a great deal of interest by the guests.

After this beautiful ceremony was performed the bride and groom left the church, followed by the other members of the party, while the Mendelssohn wedding march was being rendered on the organ. They went at once to the home of the bride's parents where a reception was held for the relatives and few friends.

During the hours of the reception a delightful breakfast was served by Maresi, and that which gave additional pleasure to the guests was the rendition of classical music on the piano.

Dr. and Mrs. Donlon received their guests in the parlor, where elaborate decorations, consisting of palms and roses, were used with good effect. The happy couple were showered with the best of wishes of all for a successful and happy journey through life.

Early in the afternoon the bride and groom left this city for a honeymoon to Atlantic City and Washington, and upon their return will reside in a newly furnished home in New York arranged for their reception by the groom.

Mr. and Mrs. Donlon received a very large collection of costly and elegant presents, as valuable tokens of esteem in which they are held by their many friends.

Among the gifts presented were pretty stick pins of horseshoe pattern which were given to the ushers by the groom, while the bride presented her sister, the bridesmaid, with a handsome ring.

THE FAILURE
:: OF ::
DRESS REFORM.

By Lillian De Graff Davis.

Dress reform seems to be a failure. It is fast becoming a byword. The corset has triumphed. American women, who for a time were almost persuaded to follow the lead of the stray enthusiasts, have come back to their senses—and to their stays. They no longer try to imitate the impossible women of ancient Greece.

I have come to this conclusion after asking many prominent women what they thought about corsets. Here is what the perennial, ever blooming Lillian Russell had to say on the subject:

"Are corsets harmful? Of course not —the right kind. Singers all wear them. They can't hurt any one provided they fit. If corsets of necessity confined the muscles and hindered development, how could women sing in them? Singers' voices depend entirely upon the play of the abdominal muscles. Some sort of a corset is a necessity to women with well developed figures. Slim girls can afford to go without them perhaps. But here in the difficulty: Slim girls don't stay slim if they are healthy. It is my opinion that corsets have come to stay."

MRS. VAN RENSSELAER CRUGER.

Mrs. Theodore Sutro's well corseted outlines have long been familiar to Sorosis, women's conventions and intellectual assemblages. Mrs. Sutro says:

"Even an intellectual woman likes her dresses to fit. And what modiste can fit them without corsets? I have always tried to use sense in dress matters. I don't have my dresses made to weigh heavy. I don't squeeze into them to suffocation, as you can see. There are rational peculiarities in dress the world over. French women do the tight lacing. Dutchwomen wear the innumerable petticoats, English women wear the aggressively comfortable 'common sense' clothes, but American women dress simply as a rule. I don't think dress reform without corsets will ever achieve much. It's too negligee."

Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger, distinguished for beauty, brilliance and worldly prestige, is also a champion of corsets. She says:

"The need for corsets was long felt, and even in ancient times women wore bandages or straps to support the bust. This became more necessary as the position of women became less private. The natural form unrestrained and the loose flowing gown are now relegated to oriental localities, where women are slaves, and to harems. Women in civilized life need more clothing. The corset came when men and women began to mingle as equals in society. It is a delicate device, both useful and beautifying. It may be used or abused, according to the woman who wears it."

Della Fox, whose constitution was proverbial until her recent unfortunate illness, laughed "reform" to scorn.

"I am a man in corsets when on the stage as well as a woman," she said. "How would my trousers fit without them? I think corsets would be a good thing for men to adopt. Prizefighters would look lovely in them. Do they ever hurt? How absurd! Imagine going about without them. No woman with her reason could or would go without them."

How about Zaza? Of course Mrs. Carter wears corsets. They fit her tight, too; nothing erratic about them. When asked for her opinions, she said just what all the others say:

"Corsets are necessary.

"Corsets are beautiful.

"Corsets are healthful.

"Vive la corset!"

Anna Held had never heard of dress reform. When its aims and purposes were made plain to her in bad French, she replied in worse English:

"Heavens! I have not seen American ladies in no corsets. They do not go on the stage, do they? How imbecile! French ladies would not do that, you bet. It faut for decency, you know. See how nice my dress fits! Mon Dieu, but I would be ruined if I did not have the corsets! Is it the style in America, did you say? Impossible! I hope I shall never meet these funny women. I should laugh. I should be rude. I could help that!" etc., for the immortal Anna is loquacious.

Viola Allen as Glory glories in the corset. "I admire some features of dress reform," she said, "though I have not adopted them. I wear corsets made to order and light, hygienic clothing. I will show you some of my everyday things to give you an idea. See these silk tights. I have them in black and colors. Then these silk undervests weigh almost nothing. The corsets fit every curve of my figure and give all over. They are not 'armor clad,' you see—only a few slim bones and steels. Only foolish women wear brass rods up and down them nowadays for the lightning to strike. I don't."

WORKS WITH HER PEN

IDA HUSTED HARPER, BIOGRAPHER FOR SUSAN B. ANTHONY.

Something About One of the Busiest and Most Successful of Women Journalists—An Earnest and Brilliant Advocate of Woman Suffrage.

Mrs. Ida H. Harper has recently come into prominence in the east, where she has been engaged for the past two years upon the "Life and Works of Susan B. Anthony" and at present as correspondent to the New York Sun upon woman's work, especially that pertaining to the suffrage question.

Mrs. Harper is a woman of rare literary attainments and a writer of marked ability and versatility. When a very young woman, she began a witty and original series of articles in the Terre Haute Saturday Evening Mail, which continued for 12 years. During this time she ably edited a woman's department in The Fireman's Magazine, the largest labor periodical in the country, edited by Eugene V. Debs. Being an extensive traveler, Mrs. Harper corresponded for the Chicago Times and Inter Ocean, Detroit Free Press, Cleveland Leader, Indianapolis Journal, New York Christian Union and other large papers.

In 1889 she became managing editor of the Terre Haute Daily News, carrying this paper through a political campaign and supporting an independent ticket, which was elected entire. Later Mrs. Harper was an editorial writer on the Indianapolis News and made a specialty of paragraphing, her work being widely copied.

She wrote one of the monographs for Indiana and read several papers before the World's fair congress, receiving a diploma of honorable mention from the board of managers. She was the Indiana representative of the World's Fair Press league and a charter member of the Press association of Indiana; also secretary of the Woman Suffrage association.

In the autumn of 1893 Mrs. Harper went to California, where her daughter entered the Leland Stanford university, and she herself spent two years in the study of economics, constitutional history, French, English literature, etc.

Early in 1896, when Miss Anthony went to California to conduct a campaign for securing a woman suffrage amendment at her earnest solicitation, Mrs. Harper took the management of the press work for the state, when for eight months she was in constant communication with 350 papers which advocated woman's enfranchisement, and also assisted Miss Anthony in a vast amount of literary work, contributing her services gratuitously.

At the close of the campaign Mrs. Harper accepted Miss Anthony's urgent invitation to go to Rochester and write her biography. This has involved nearly two years of the most exacting labor. She read 20,000 letters, faded and crumpled with age, assorted, selected and eliminated, prepared material for three stenographers and wrote with a pen 500,000 words, besides making a vast amount of historical research. An especial genius for painstaking labor is required for this work, which Mrs. Harper possesses to a remarkable extent.

This same conscientious attention to details, which makes her a successful writer, also makes her a successful homekeeper. While much of her work has been of a public nature, she is nevertheless a great lover of home, never neglecting it for outside work.

Mrs. Harper is of New England parentage, but was born and spent most of her life in Indiana, where she entered the Indiana university at 17. At the close of her freshman year she accepted a position as principal of a high school, but resigned to be married the next year.

She has one daughter upon whom she has bestowed her loving care, her husband having died many years ago, and who has now grown to womanhood and already developed into a writer of much ability.

Since completing Miss Anthony's biography Mrs. Harper and her daughter have made their home in Washington, where she is busy with her pen. She is a close student of current events, takes a vital interest in national affairs and is a firm believer in the equality of rights for women.

Mrs. Harper has little sympathy with the argument of those who seemingly bring forward by the opposers of woman suffrage, that it would "destroy the home." Upon this point she says: "The strongest influence that the woman can wield in the home may be counteracted by the conditions that exist outside of it. She is seriously crippled in the performance of these very duties of wife and mother if shut out from all participation in that municipal and state legislation which touches so closely the interests of the home."

ELNORA M. BABCOCK.

Rumor has it that Marie Corelli, who is regarded by many as one of the most gifted of women writers, is coming to this country.

MATERIALS AND COLORS.

Sheer Fabrics and Brilliant and Delicate Shades.

This season's fabrics are ravishingly pretty. They have borrowed the tints and lightness of the butterfly's wing and the flower's petal, and dainty delicacy reigns supreme. Airy materials are in the very van of fashion, not merely the usual mousseline de soie, tulle, crepe de chine, gauze and lace, which are becoming an old story, but all sorts of variations of those themes. Nor is this airiness confined to silks. Lawns and muslins and similar wash goods are of the sheerest description, and even the new wools are light and transparent. Wool canvases and grenadines are hardly heavier than cambric and are seen in equally delicate colorings. Veilings, too, are among the favored fabrics, while, returning to silks, there is the whole range of liberty gauzes and even a very light, thin velvet. Summer is coming, if the market is to be believed, and it will be a summer of most attractive fashions.

Among colors blue of an entirely frank shade may be reckoned as the leading favorite. A most trying color it is, too, for the average complexion, but that makes no difference when fashion is in question, and so blue gowns and blue hats predominate among the advance models. So also bluets are again in strong evidence among flowers, and unpardonable liberties have been taken with the vegetable kingdom, in no way more strikingly than in the construction of vivid blue roses, which are placidly accepted by the fashionable woman with no logical uneasiness.

The illustration depicts a pleasing hat of deep periwinkle blue straw, the brim of which forms a sort of double puff, the crown being of shirred mousseline de soie of the same color. At the left side of the brim, next the hair, is a group of bluets mixed with blue mousseline de soie and blue ribbon, and the trimming at the top of the hat consists of a piquet of shaded bluets rising from a knot of light periwinkle satin.

A WHITE SEASON.

Pique, Muslin and Other Wash Goods in Their Glory.

It is to be a white season again, and during a white season wash fabrics are in their glory. There is no white cotton fabric which is not pressing well to the front now—dotted muslins and mulls, duck, pique both plain and fancy, sheer white swiss muslin, lawn, all over embroidery, nainsook tucking, varied by strips of insertion or puffing and perhaps, prettiest of all, sheer white dimity with tiny lines of corduroy, than which nothing is more dainty and simple. Barred muslins, oddly enough, are less prominent than usual, but perhaps the universal favoritism of pique has crowded them to one side.

In the list of model costumes of wash goods swiss muslin and pique are foremost and are represented with about equal vehemence, but they do not clash, as pique naturally falls into the tailor made class, while swiss muslin belongs to the soft, vaporous and elaborate order. It is never seen alone, but is always enriched by quantities of lace, usually valenciennes, which, either in the form of edging or insertion, is plentifully strewn upon every style of cut of the gown will admit of its presence—namely, on flounces and, as far as insertion is concerned, in the body of the skirt and corsage and in the sleeves. There are also separate white waists, not shirt waists, of much elaboration, which are practically a mass of openwork lace and embroidery, delightfully cool to see and wear and also equally difficult to launder.

The picture illustrates a little child's frock of white batiste covered with an embroidered design in pale blue. The little skirt and bodice are sewed together at the waist. The square neck is surrounded by a double bertha of open embroidery, blue on a white ground, and the bertha covers the short sleeves. Two ruffles to match edge the foot of the skirt, and at the waist are two bows of deep blue ribbon.

WHAT WOMEN ARE DOING.

Many socially prominent Kentucky women are owners of thoroughbred racing horses and patrons of the turf. Among these is Mrs. Annie Lyle Bradley Barnes, wife of Colonel William S. Barnes. She personally conducts Maplebourne farm, near Lexington, one of the most famous in the blue grass country.

Mrs. Bradley Martin, who has been widely known as one of the leaders of New York society, has decided to make London her permanent home, with her daughter, the Countess of Craven. She will establish an elaborate salon in the fashionable quarter of London.

The New Jersey Legal Aid society is a recently formed organization for the purpose of giving legal advice and assistance to women and dependent children, in that state, free of charge. Mrs. Emily E. Williamson is the promoter of the enterprise, and some of the most eminent lawyers of New Jersey have been retained by the society.

London society was recently agitated over the sudden and strange disappearance of Lady Sophie Scott, wife of Sir Samuel Scott, and daughter of Earl Cadogan, the viceroy of Ireland. After two weeks' absence she returned home as mysteriously as she departed, but no explanation of her conduct is given.

Three California women—Mrs. McLean, Miss Shumway and Mrs. Hennig —are likely to receive medals from congress for heroic life saving service. They rescued half a dozen people from the wrecked steamer Chilkat, off the California coast.

Miss Sarah Hewitt, daughter of ex-Mayor Hewitt of New York, conducts her father's farm at Ringwood, N. J., and is known humorously as the "the Squire of Ringwood." She is an expert horsewoman and is able to manage the most spirited animals. Occasionally she dons a leather apron and shoes a horse as well as a man.

One of the few American women who witnessed the battle of Manila Bay was Mrs. J. F. Lucy, wife of Lieutenant Lucy, who accompanied her husband to the Philippines. She recently returned to this country and is enthusiastic in her praise of the valor and heroism of American soldiers and sailors.

Mrs. Madeline Yale Wynne, who is an artist and author not unknown to fame, is said to be the only woman silversmith in the world. Following her own artistic ideas, she manufactures from the crude ore many dainty and unique articles of ornament and usefulness.

Erie, the county seat of Neosho county, Kan., claims a distinction accorded to no other town in the United States. Two local newspapers are published there, both of which are owned and edited by women.

Mrs. Jennie June Croly (Jennie June), president of the New York Women's Press club and the founder of Sorosis, has been much entertained in London, where she has been spending several months. Mrs. Croly was one of the speakers and guests of honor at the first meeting of the Society of American Women, just organized in London.

Three years ago Mrs. Francis W. Ralston, of Philadelphia was society's favorite at Narragansett Pier. She is now the superintendent of the millinery department of one of the largest New York dry goods houses. There has been no change in her social or financial conditions, her acceptance of the present position being a whim to exploit her notions of artistic millinery rather than the necessity of earning a livelihood.

"Who will give us a new word which shall be the feminine for fraternize?" asked a well known member of the New England Women's club the other day. "Women cannot fraternize; what do we do?" And then she answered her own conundrum, "We sorolize."

Through the patriotic efforts of Miss Ada Lovering Stanford, daughter of Judge Hanford of Seattle, Wash., Admiral Dewey's flagship, the Olympia, will be presented with a suitable gift commemorative of the fact that at the great battle of Manila the commander's vessel bore the name of the capital of the state of Washington.

CLINGING COSTUMES.

The Fashionable Skirt in Different Lengths and Styles.

The only way to attain the extreme of the clinging effect now fashionable is to discard all fullness of underwear, wearing but one petticoat, which, while profusely trimmed below the knee, is tight as an umbrella case above. Combination suits of underwear are sometimes worn to decrease bulk to the utmost.

Double skirts, redingote skirts and skirts with a circular flounce have not succeeded in driving out the plain skirt, which is still used for simple toilets and occasionally for ceremonious ones. All, however, are plain at the top, flaring at the foot and long all around, trailing at the back more or less, except in the case of the regulation walking skirt. No stiffening is used in the edge, the hem or facing, with the inside frill, being quite enough support except in the case of very soft silk gowns. With such goods a facing of stiff muslin may be put between the outside and the lining or silk facing, the muslin being cut to follow the curve of the edge. The lining of a skirt is usually sewed in one with it, but for such goods as foulard and crepe de chine the lining hangs separate.

The gown illustrated is of pearl gray bengaline, the foot of the skirt being cut in scallops over an edge of rose red silk. The scallops are embroidered with silver. The bolero, scalloped and embroidered to match, is cut away in front to show a blouse of white lace. Cut silver buttons close the bolero, and the plain sleeves are embroidered at the wrists. The collar and belt are of rose red silk. The silver gray straw toque is trimmed with white feathers and red roses.

THE BICYCLE.

What to Wear For a Riding Costume This Year.

Many women ride a diamond frame wheel, although they do not make as much noise about it as they used to do. Of course for the diamond frame trousers or a divided skirt is required, and if the latter is chosen it is better not to have it gathered in at the knee, although such gathering certainly prevents it from flying up during riding. It is better to wear tight trousers of the same material beneath it, however, to get around this difficulty, than to look as absurd on foot as a woman does who wears the gathered in divided skirt. It appears well when she is mounted, but as she is not a bicycle sensation she must alight occasionally, and when a little breeze is blowing the inflation of the skirt is something ludicrous in the extreme.

For the drop frame as ordinary skirt costume will do perfectly well. It is usually cut rather short, and when it descends no nearer the ground than eight or nine inches it is much safer, as with a long skirt there is always great danger that it will catch in the wheel or be blown behind the chain and cause a spill. One of the inevitable flapping it makes in the wind, which looks awkward and retards progress.

The bicycle suit illustrated is of fawn cloth, the short skirt being trimmed with white galloon. The short jacket is cut away over a rounded portion of the fawn cloth and has a collar of white cloth embroidered with fawn and white. There is a bordering of white galloon upon jacket, plastron and sleeves, and two large buttons close the front. A white shirt waist is worn, with a golden brown cravat and a white straw trimmed with brown.

The Dictum of Dress.

The Rich, Stately Velvets Are to Return in the Fall.

I am glad to be able to say that in the fall we are to have a return of the rich and stately velvet gowns. There will be plain velvets in all the richest colors, among them purples in the darkest shades, ruby, cardinal and garnet, and one or two of the deep blues.

As a rule, deep blue does not light up well at night, but the new color card has a couple of shades of royal blue which the light falls with magnificent effect. Ruby and cardinal are regal under the gaslight, but garnet looks better in daylight. The purple shades in this card have a subtle difference from those in fashion now, but I think those for fall and winter richer and more royal. These are the plain velvets.

There are also dozens of designs of velvet cisele. This means that there is a heavy, firm satin background, with a raised velvet flower upon it. One sample I saw had the ground of a metallic gray satin, with large flowers and leaves in rather conventional design upon it. These were gray also, but of a much darker shade. Indeed they appeared to take a dozen shades as the light fell upon them in different lines. This velvet cisele will cost enormously. Some of it will be from $10 to $15 a yard.

There are other designs where the raised figures are in colors to represent sprays of flowers and single blossoms. One had the satin ground of a sort of russet or olive green with great velvet pansies in natural colors, sometimes six or seven different varieties displayed upon one sample of half a yard. Some call this embossed velvet.

There are figured velvets, too, where the design must have been printed on. These are mostly in soft effects, where much dark red, blue and green mingle and produce oriental designs, reminding one of the coloring of the walls in some of the rooms in the Alhambra.

Persian patterns are also shown among the events which are now casting their shadows before. All the silks and satins will be in richer and more artistic designs than they have been, and while the actual coloring is as brilliant in its component parts the general effect is more pleasing.

Taffeta and foulard, india and pongee are all in vogue and will be until the fall days come, when grosgrain, satin duchesse, peau de soie, faille and rhadames will take their places. Grosgrain, it is expected, will be the best liked. Armure silk is also one of the thick silks for autumn and winter. This is an excellent quality and it wears admirably well.

In one of the big ribbon importers' houses they told me that the black velvet ribbon craze was but in its infancy. Tons of this ribbon are in their way and being manufactured here. They are to be applied in the most lavish manner upon all sorts of garments, and many of them will be wrought into figures on garments as the satin ribbons were on those of this spring.

The average woman who is now getting her summer attire into perfection does not seem to realize that the gowns, coats and capes that she may want to wear next fall are nearly all done. There are mountains of them. Among them are many velvet effects and crepons of deep and rich crinkles. There are no end of rough stuffs, woolly stuffs, hairy stuffs and curly stuffs and woolly and hairy plaids, so coarse and harsh in texture that one may be pardoned for believing that they were originally designed for horse blankets. They are made into skirts and cut so that the fronts are bias. Where, as often is the case, the coloring is high, it is effectually toned by the black velvet ribbon before mentioned.

Homespuns, cheviots in Scotch effects and tweeds, as well as coverts, are seen. The plaids are in camel's hair and Scotch twill, each having its own especial fleece to make it look richer and heavier.

Broadcloth is advanced a point in dignity, and while it is to be used for tailor costumes they are made and so elaborately trimmed that they are too elegant for simple street wear, and are for visiting where handsome dressing is obligatory. A favorite trimming is appliqué of Limerick lace, or point de venise, with possibly a little fine raised hand embroidery.

HENRIETTE ROUSSEAU.

The Author Of "The Choir Invisible."

By Jeanette Devoe.

"The Choir Invisible" has been read by most women of intelligence and refinement. Many have reread it, and some have read it half a dozen times, finding in its exquisite pages an enduring charm and delight. Though written by a man, it is essentially a woman's novel, as, appealing particularly to feminine tastes, it has doubtless been read more widely by women than any other work of fiction.

The author is James Lane Allen. Tens of thousands of women are familiar with his works—"The Choir Invisible," "A Kentucky Cardinal," "Aftermath," "Summer In Arcady" and other stories, but of his characteristics and personality comparatively little seems to be generally known. It is of these particularly that I write.

JAMES LANE ALLEN.

James Lane Allen is a native of Kentucky, the descendant of generations of country gentlemen, and was born and reared in the "blue grass" country, which Kentuckians insist produces the noblest men, the most beautiful women and the finest horses in the world.

His ancestry leads back on his father's side, to Colonel William Payne of Virginia, an officer of the Revolution. On his mother's to Pennsylvania Scotch-Irish stock of the same period.

His mother, from whom he inherited much of that grace and tenderness which characterized the life pictures his pen has so exquisitely portrayed, was a woman of rare charms and high intellectual qualities. From his earliest childhood he was much in her society. She was his first teacher.

As a boy he developed a taste for reading, which was carefully fostered and directed by his mother, whose gentle and refining influence is in later years shown in his published works and to whom he pays a reverential tribute in their dedication.

Being much alone in boyhood, he spent his days with books or in the woods and fields, where a deep love grew unconsciously within him for the gentle landscape which he has so delightfully painted in story and sketch.

Of the world outside he knew but little until he was sent to the Kentucky university, once Transylvania university, the first college founded west of the Alleghanies and during the last three-quarters of a century the alma mater of many distinguished men. He devoted himself especially to the study of the classics, and when he received his degree of master of arts he was accounted one of the most proficient Greek and Latin scholars in the country.

It was originally his purpose to fit himself for a professorship in classics; but, as he himself says, "liking college work less and literature more," he gave up teaching, to which he had been compelled to resort for a livelihood, owing to financial reverses of his father, and began his career in letters, which was to be his life work and which happily is not finished, though a high measure of success has been attained.

Though the literary work of James Lane Allen was begun with maturer powers and wider culture than most writers exhibit in their first publications, he did not at the outset find success in literature a primrose path. He was destined to know the pang of having his manuscript rejected when his finances were at a low ebb. But merit such as he could not long go unrewarded. His first notable work was a series of magazine articles on the "Blue Grass Region." The field was new, the work was fresh, and the ability of the writer was recognized. Then followed stories and sketches, nearly all of which had a background of Kentucky landscape, and running through them was a thread of Kentucky history and incident.

The first of Mr. Allen's stories to attract wide attention was "John Gray," which was afterward rewritten and amplified, the title being changed to "The Choir Invisible." This title was suggested by this couplet from George Eliot's famous poem:

So shall I join the choir invisible
Whose music is the gladness of the world.

"The Choir Invisible" is perhaps Mr. Allen's most popular work of fiction and has been most widely read and admired by women of culture and refinement.

James Lane Allen is now about 50 years of age, tall and handsome, genial, companionable and kind hearted. In him are happily blended the qualities of the true gentleman—strength and gentleness.

A QUEER OLD WORLD.

If virtue would allure like sin
How easily might goodness win.

If right went laughing by like wrong
The devil would lose half his throng.

If day sought pleasure like the night
Dawn need not blush to face the light.

But virtue seems so cold and proud
That merry sin attracts the crowd.

And night has such a solemn air
Men follow wrong, the debonair.

And care so eats the daytime up
At night they seize mad folly's cup.

And drink forgetfulness 'till dawn,
And so the queer old world goes on.

A STRANGE STORY.

BY G. W. S. ANGELL.

It was one of our Friday night symposiums at the Cosmos Club, and as our particular clique was made up of Merton, from the Geological Survey; Herring, of the Fish Commission, together with Long, from the Agricultural Bureau; De Forrest, of the Army Medical Museum, and myself, then serving as Washington correspondent for a New York paper, it is needless to say that the talk had run the entire gamut of art, literature and science, and had for the moment settled on the belief in personalities.

"I tell you, gentlemen," said Merton, with the authoritative air by which he always attempted to settle questions under discussion, "that while I am willing to admit that there may be some things almost impossible to prove or disprove scientifically, yet the talk about the supernatural, subconscious mind and all such stuff is, vulgarly speaking, simply rot." And he lay back in his chair with a self-satisfied air, as though there were nothing more to be said on the subject.

Long took up the argument, and the debate grew so warm that all the pros and cons were laid down in that excathedra way which we young men are apt to affect. Dr. De Forrest had thus far taken little part in the discussion, but had smiled once or twice at our assertions in a way that assured us, who knew him so well, that he had a good story to tell if we could only draw him out.

"Come, Doctor," said Long, as he ordered a fresh round of brandies and soda for the company, "you ought to know something about this question, for you told us last week that you had studied under Charcot when you were in Paris."

De Forrest selected a fresh perfecto from the box at his side, lighted it in his usual careful way and blew a few rings of smoke, which he watched float lazily toward the ceiling, before he spoke.

"Well, boys," he began, "as Merton has just said, I have some things which we cannot as yet decide by purely physical methods. We cannot weight the soul in our most delicate balances, nor measure it in inches nor add but the fraction of a hair, nor can we by our most subtle reagents analyze that vital spark we call life in our laboratories. I do not even propose to speak of the many curious phenomena which I witnessed during my studies in Paris, for they might furnish you with a text for a sermon which I'm not to follow; but I'll tell you a little incident in real life which occured when I was very young in my New York practice, and then leave the question for you to decide.

"When I established myself in New York, back in the sixties, from motives my unskilled at Vienna, I joined the Bohemia Club. That was not its name, but as none of you are old enough to remember the club which was made up of such men, and I shall take the liberty of changing the names of the actors in my story as well, for obvious reasons.

"We were a rather jolly crowd at the Bohemia, for we worked hard at our different lines all day and then met at the club in the evenings for relaxation and to compare notes. You see we were young then, and not authorities in our several branches, as you all are here," and he smiled in his patronizing way as he looked round our little circle.

"There were two Southerners in the club," he continued, "both M. D's, and although nearly alike in their tendencies and marvelously so in their dress, they were totally different in character, and I suppose it would be hard to find in any club two men further apart in their moral and mental qualities. Whiting had been a practising physician for a year or more and had already a large practice. He was a splendid fellow, large of frame but straight as an arrow, with great brown eyes that looked you squarely in the face when he spoke, and, with all his physical strength, kind and gentle as a woman. He was loved by every one at the club, where we knew him as the soul of honor and generous to a fault.

"Davis, on the other hand, though he was of the same olive hued type and enough like Whiting in features to be his twin brother, had a sinister expression on his face, and when he looked at you with his eyes half closed and that cynical smile on his lips he made you feel as though he despised his own Louisiana swamps. He was a heavy drinker, and spent money enough at the club, but he was never known to pay a bill, and I'm sure he never spent a dollar on any one else unless he saw that he would gain some advantage in return.

"How he made his ample means of their own, but Davis had never practiced, so far as we knew, and where he got his title of doctor from or where he lived no one seemed to know. Some said that he was an expert chemist and dabbled in alchemy as well, but he made no close friends, and seldom spoke of his own life.

"It happened that Davis and Whiting had never met at the club, as each came but seldom, but we often chaffed one about the other, and from their facial resemblence dubbed them the two Dromios. Jekyll and Hyde would have been more appropriate, but this was long before Stevenson's book was written.

"Whiting always resented any chance allusion to his double, although good natured at the rest of our chaff, and seemed to doubt the actual existence of Davis, whom he had heard of but never met, and thought we were simply trying to put up a game on him. Naturally the more he scoffed at the reality of Davis the more we nagged him, until finally in sheer desperation he proposed to give a quiet little dinner for four of us, at which Robinson, an artist and fellow club-member, myself, Davis and Whiting were to be the quartet.

"Davis promised to be there, if possible, and said he was already acquainted with Whiting—of course by reputation only, he added with that cynical smile we all hated. On the night of the dinner Robinson and I were on hand early, for we were anxious to see the meeting between Davis and Whiting, and had made several bets with each other as to whether Davis would show up.

"Whiting appeared punctually as usual, but though we waited until midnight Davis failed to materialize. Of course this settled the matter in Whiting's mind for the time being, and he made us set up several bottles of wine to drink to the health of his mythical counterpart, as he called him.

"The next night, however, he came to the club, and drawing Robinson and me aside said: 'I suppose this matter has gone too far. I like a joke, but I think if is rather rough for you to keep it up.' And on our expressing our utter ignorance of the meaning he showed us a letter from Davis regretting his inability to be present the night before, and saying that he was too ill at the moment to make his regrets in person.

"'But, my dear fellow,' said Robinson, 'if you really think us guilty of this trick you can easily explain how it happens to be written on your own paper?'

"Whiting grabbed up the note and seemed frightened for the moment, for at the head of the letter was his crest and the envelope bore the impression of his private seal, which he always wore on a ring on his left hand. He looked at it searchingly, and then left the club without a word.

"After this occurrence we ceased banteringly to call Davis by his name, the word around to the other fellows to drop it, for we saw that the matter worried him greatly and feared the effect of ridicule on his highly strung, nervous temperment. Davis came to the club less frequently during the winter, but at every mention of Whiting's name he would laugh, but he was sorry they did not hapen to meet.

"One day, early in the spring, Whiting sent a note asking me to come up to his office at once, as he had something of importance to tell, and begged me not to fail him. I had often been to his office on Madison avenue, but had never called on it since I ought to —th street. It was a quiet neighborhood, west of Ninth avenue, and the house was one of a row of old fashion, of frame architecture in need of repair, but backed up against their rear were several ramshackel old tenements, nearly deserted by tenants.

"I had not seen Whiting for some months and was shocked by the change in his appearance. There were dark circles under his eyes and a strange tinted pallidness on his face, as he grasped my hand eagerly and drew a chair for me in front of the grate fire, for the evening was cool and raw.

"'Doc,' he exclaimed suddenly, after we had lit our cigars and talked glittering generalities for a few minutes, that fellow Davis is killing me by inches."

"'Why, old man,' I said, 'so you have come to believe in him at last.' I started to laugh, but checked myself when I saw the expression of his face.

"'What is it, my dear boy?' I asked, soothingly. 'It certainly can't be serious. What has he been up to now?'

"'Its damned queer business,' said Whiting excitedly, and I can't imagine his motive; but these are the facts. For several weeks this fellow has dogged my footsteps, and after I have made a prescription and left this unsual prescription he has sent a note to the patient imitating my handwriting and changing the medicines for others, which, had they been taken as directed, would have in some cases proved fatal. Fortunately the druggists have telephoned me that there was some mistake and I have been able to correct it. But of course this constant changing of prescriptions has affected my practice terribly, and people are beginning to think that my mind is unbalanced."

"'But, my dear fellow,' said I, trying to quiet him, 'why not give up your practice for a few months, as you have decided to, and meanwhile we will deal with this fellow Davis as he deserves.'

"'But that is not all,' continued Whiting, despairingly. 'It is true I don't need the income from my practice, and work more from the love of it than for the money, but this fellow has gone and dared to call on Miss Wiley, my fiancee, and tell her many of the foolish escapades of my college days, the secret of which I have always trusted to my own breast. I have tried to explain them away, but of course cannot deny the tales, and I fear it is all over for me in that respect. I could see how she could listen to the end or where she could have met him.'

"Davis' actions seemed to be more inexplicable than ever, and I longed to get hold of the brute and force an explanation from him; but, hiding my anger, I tried to quiet Whiting, and finally succeeded upon him to take a heavy dose of choral, which I prepared, and to try to get a night's rest, promising to see him in the morning and attempt to patch up matters.

"I left him asleep on his lounge, and, as it was still early, walked over to Madison avenue, determined to call on Miss Wiley, and if possible, slightly, and tell her of Whiting's condition.

"There was a light in the drawing room, and, ringing the bell, I gave my card to the servant, and was shown into the parlor, where Miss Wiley sat at the piano, her hands on the keys, while standing at her side and looking down ardently into her upturned face was—Davis.

"For a moment I could not speak and seemed glued to the floor, but Davis quickly advanced and, after a few polite inquiries about my health and his dear friend Whiting, pleaded an engagement and left.

"His presence in the house and his unmistakable loverlike attitude made it very painful for me to speak, but remembering the condition of poor Whiting and how heartbroken he would be, I ventured to speak about Davis and asked where she had met him.

"'Oh, I have only known him a few weeks,' she said, 'he called with a letter of introduction from Dr. Whiting and said they were fellow students in the South. He has been most kind and attentive to me, and I shall introduce some of his own songs.' And she rattled on about his divine voice, while I sat speechless at the new complication of affairs.

"At last I blurted out, 'Would you kindly let me see the letter of introduction?' adding that Dr. Whiting had written me him to some of his friends in Europe and I wished to see his methods.

"I felt that this was a most feeble excuse, but could think of nothing else, and of course Miss Wiley was too polite to express her surprise at the strange request. (Going to a dainty writing desk in the corner she came back and handed me the letter.

"There was no doubt of the chirography being exactly similar to Whiting's, it saw the same long convoluted capitals and crisp, sharp endings of each word, and as for the signature, his bank would have sworn to it. Besides, there was the seal of my friend's which I now knew so well. I don't know what I said in thanking her for my head was in a whirl, but I had enough sense left to say good night and quickly withdraw.

"How Davis could have obtained the paper and seal, or how he learned of all those details in the life of Whiting's, I could not imagine. But I saw that his relations with Miss Wiley had gone so far that it would do no good for me to interfere, and that I should only be snubbed by her for my impertinence in meddling in other people's business.

"Whiting was out when I called at his rooms next morning and his servant told me that he had gone to the country for a rest and left no address.

"It was perhaps a month afterward that he turned up at the club one night, looking more ghastly than ever. He would not talk, but finally explained that he was to be written on your own paper?'

"Whiting grabbed up the note and seemed frightened for the moment, for at the head of the letter was his crest and the envelope bore the impression of his private seal, which he always wore on a ring on his left hand. He looked at it searchingly, and then left the club without a word.

"'What is it, my dear boy?' I asked, soothingly. 'It certainly can't be serious. What has he been up to now?'

"'Its damned queer business,' said Whiting excitedly, and I can't imagine his motive; but these are the facts. For several weeks this fellow has dogged my footsteps, and after I have made a prescription and left this unsual prescription he has sent a note to the patient imitating my handwriting and changing the medicines for others, which, had they been taken as directed, would have in some cases proved fatal. Fortunately the druggists have telephoned me that there was some mistake and I have been able to correct it. But of course this constant changing of prescriptions has affected my practice terribly, and people are beginning to think that my mind is unbalanced."

"'But, my dear fellow,' said I, trying to quiet him, 'why not give up your practice for a few months, as you have decided to, and meanwhile we will deal with this fellow Davis as he deserves.'

"'But that is not all,' continued Whiting, despairingly. 'It is true I don't need the income from my practice, and work more from the love of it than for the money, but this fellow has gone and dared to call on Miss Wiley, my fiancee, and tell her many of the foolish escapades of my college days, the secret of which I have always trusted to my own breast. I have tried to explain them away, but of course cannot deny the tales, and I fear it is all over for me in that respect. I could see how she could listen to the end or where she could have met him.'

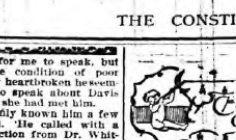
"Davis' actions seemed to be more inexplicable than ever, and I longed to get hold of the brute and force an explanation from him; but, hiding my anger, I tried to quiet Whiting, and finally succeeded upon him to take a heavy dose of choral, which I prepared, and to try to get a night's rest, promising to see him in the morning and attempt to patch up matters.

"I left him asleep on his lounge, and, as it was still early, walked over to Madison avenue, determined to call on Miss Wiley, and if possible, slightly, and tell her of Whiting's condition.

"There was a light in the drawing room, and, ringing the bell, I gave my card to the servant, and was shown into the parlor, where Miss Wiley sat at the piano, her hands on the keys, while standing at her side and looking down ardently into her upturned face was—Davis.

"For a moment I could not speak and seemed glued to the floor, but Davis quickly advanced and, after a few polite inquiries about my health and his dear friend Whiting, pleaded an engagement and left.

"His presence in the house and his unmistakable loverlike attitude made



LOST ILLUSIONS.

I used to think that marionettes
Were people live and true;
That Judy and Punch and the baby dear
Were living people, too.
And now I know that they're only dolls,
Which do what they're made to do.
But, oh, dear, nothing is half the fun
That it was before I knew!

THE MOUND BUILDERS.

The Very Peculiar Manner in Which They Buried Their Dead.

Several centuries ago the great plains along the rivers in the southern and central part of the United States were occupied by bands of people called now the Mound Builders. Their chief occupation was hunting and fishing, but what has led to speak about is the way in which they buried their dead. They buried them with all their weapons, for they thought that when they got to the Happy Hunting Grounds they would want them. They did not bury their dead the way we do. But would heap up a mass of earth on the ground with all their possessions and cover them up with earth, and when more would die they would put them right on top of the others and cover them up with dirt, so in the course of years these mounds would grow until some of them are 30 feet high and more than a hundred feet high. Think of all the work it took to build these mounds, for all the dirt had to be brought in little baskets by the women and children. Don't you think that this was a curious way to bury their dead? About two miles from where we used to live there are two of these big mounds right on the banks of the river. We used to dig in them for arrow heads and pottery. In one of these mounds we found part of a tunnel, but this great race of people has passed away, leaving nothing but these huge mounds for us to remember them by. So our race will pass away, leaving nothing but the ruins of our vast buildings to mark where we have worked, lived and died.

Men and Women With Horns.

Villereuve, a French authority, has been at some pains to collect many instances of men and women who have had horns.

In the British Museum is the largest specimen of a human horn. It is eight inches in length and ornamented the head of a noble Englishman. In the seventeenth century a Mrs. Allen, of Leicestershire, England, had a pair of horns. Another Englishwoman of the same town, known as the beautiful Mary Davis, had a pair of horns, which were regarded as an addition to her charms. She had them cut off four times, but they grew again. One growth was presented to King Henry I. of France.

In 1887 M. Lamprey relates he found in the African territory of Ganim several imposing types of horned men and women. One of these was a majestic-looking negro with two horns, which in his case formed a ring in each side of the nose. A Mexican named Rodrigues is described as having a horn on the side of his head about seven inches long, with three branches.

There are cases of similar horns being found on dogs, horses and hares.

Malpigh calls such excrescences "a nervous prolongation of the skin." Bieschi calls them the result of a morbid secretion. They are in substance analogous to the horny growth of the human finger nails and the claws of beasts.

The Magical Knot.

A very amusing trick, consisting in simply tying one knot with two ends of a handkerchief, and, by apparently pulling the ends, untying them again.

Take two ends of the handkerchief, one in each hand, the ends dropping from the inside of your hands. You simply tie a single knot, when your hands and your handkerchief will be in the position shown in the cut. Instead of pulling the ends C and D, grasp that part marked B with your thumb and forefinger, dropping the end D, and pulling upon the end C and the head B, when, instead of really tying, you unloosen the knot.

All this should be done as quickly as possible, to prevent detection. Examine the engraving closely, and you will more readily understand the explanation.

Speed of the House Fly.

When a common house fly is alarmed its rate of speed in flight amounts to over one hundred and fifty feet a second. In normal flight its wings make 800 beats a second, sending it through the air twenty-five feet in that space of time.

Pure Air.

Some scientists assert that the purest air in cities is found about twenty-five feet above the street surface.

BONNIE BESSIE.

"Bonnie Bessie" every one called her and rightly enough, for of all the highland lassies who gathered at the little kirk Sabbath mornings not one was half so pretty and winning as Bessie.

Squire Renfrow, of the Red Pass, was desperately in love with Bessie, and sought to make his wife in spite of difference in rank. He was a bachelor, something over two-score years old, and he wanted Bonnie Bessie for his wife.

"If the lassie thinks she can fancy me," he said, addressing Bessie's grandmother, "I'm ready and willing to lead her to the kirk to-morrow, and if a good, true husband and some gold and silver will make her happy, she'll be as happy as a queen at the 'Red Pass.'"

Bessie listened with wide, startled eyes, burning cheeks and quivering lips. She held her peace, standing tall and slim in a sort of stunned silence until her gray haired lover had taken his leave. Then she burst forth into vehement, passionate protest.

The old grandmother suffered her to storm until her passion had spent.

"Well, 'tis o'er now, and ye'll simmer down and keep quiet, mebbe. I've let ye have yer say, and now I'll have mine. We're poor folk, me and ye, and I've required a little dab on the upper part of the cheeks, which is promptly rubbed down and blended with the fingers, and then a little dab more is put on the lower part of the cheek, on the jawbone, that must be rubbed up and under. Never color the little spot right in the center of the cheek, for nature does. The next step is to fix the lips, and the color for them is always the same as that used on the cheeks and is always a liquid. This should be put on very carefully and so as to appear darker on the inner edge, but not much darker, and should be put on the forehead and rubbed off until there is none to be seen. Then the slightest suspicion is touched on the eyebrows, under the mouth and as promptly rubbed off, as the object is only to take off the shine.

"After this you go to the brows and eyelashes, and remember also you do, don't use a pencil for the daytime. You can buy a little box with a cunning little mirror in the top and a pencil in the bottom and a horn of what appears to be India ink at the bottom. That is the one and only thing used by the French woman. The India ink is rubbed on from the India-ink-looking stuff, and then applied to the brow and lashes, but it must be put on the hair and not on the skin.

"That is the way the French woman gets herself up for appearance during the day, and she is to be seen to perfection under the electric light. And she generally is clever enough to wear a hat which shades her face just a bit at least. Of course, you don't need cosmetics, they make up in a dark room with the lights turned on, and they are really now, all of them, looking at their best, and any other woman with disgust and congratulating themselves on knowing just how the thing is properly done. Almost any woman looks well by day or by candle light, but it is best to apply after the daylight fashion, only making it more intense. But when it comes to the theatre one must be more careless work. If you do, it is a dead giveaway."

The Curse of Familiarity.

In their strife for mental equality with men, says a writer in the Ladies' Home Journal, women have unintentionally fallen into a free and coarse manner which previously lent them an air of mystery, of superiority, in the best sense, than which no element is more essential in holding a man's latest love and respect. The young woman who greets a man friend with "Hello, old man!" or its equivalent in tendency, or who returns a card called "a peach," but she would be a peach with the bloom rubbed off.

Every day it becomes more convinced that at the root of the increasing evidence of widespread marital unhappiness would be found the familiarity that breeds contempt. When a boy climbs a tree for green apples or chestnuts, whichever he prefers, he constantly sees a better one higher up beyond his reach, until he nearly breaks his neck to get the one out of his stretch, partly hidden by foliage. And so man's ideal woman hangs at the top of the tree of knowledge. If the ideal drops into his hands he throws it to the ground as worthless and begins to climb again. Would it be reasonable to think, then, that it is so hard for cherries, that he would value them long if he ate a surfeit of them?

Greek Beauties

The women of Greece are extravagantly fond of cosmetics and not artistic in their methods. They paint their cheeks bright red, the eyebrows and eyelashes deepest black and tint the veins a delicate blue. The result of this is often startling and ghastly. If they reach forty the women of this classic land are ugly old crones, yellow and wrinkled.

Girls are betrothed in early youth, and their marriage dowry consists of linen and household furniture, money not being a requirement. Their education is very limited, and does not consist of music and painting, as one might imagine, but dancing, conversation and care of manner. Household duties are included in this limited curriculum, and every girl is instructed in the art of making rose jam, Turkish coffee and various delicious sweetmeats. Beauty and the art of pleasing, which when beauty is gone will stand them in excellent stead, are considered the only necessary requirements for a woman. To be pleasing and to be popular is the only aim in life of the Grecian woman.

FRENCH WOMAN'S MAKE-UP.

Art of Applying Rouge So That Its Use Will Not Proclaim Itself.

"If women will insist on making up, why don't they take the pains to do it artistically?" demanded the woman just back from Paris. "Really the most noticeable feature about the woman one sees after a trip abroad is the careless way they daub their faces with paint and powder. Now the Parisian woman learns the art and applies it as such."

"Do tell us about it," said one of her friends.

"In the first place," replied the traveller, "a woman who knows how the thing is done gets the proper colors. She never buys for day use a paint that is pronounced. If she is a brunette she gets powder and rouge for brunettes, while if she is a blonde she buys blonde materials. These come both for day and evening use. In the case of course, she must put them on in the light in which she is to appear. The first thing she does after getting the proper material is to wash her face with a tiny bit of soap on the end of a wash cloth and dry with a soft towel. If it is to be a day appearance, let her go to the brightest window in the house and, sitting close to the corner of her hand mirror, apply her make-up. The rouge for day use is a liquid, and should be applied with the finger tips. All that is required is a little dab on the upper part of the cheeks, which is promptly rubbed down and blended with the fingers, and then a little dab more is put on the lower part of the cheek, on the jawbone, that must be rubbed up and under. Never color the little spot right in the center of the cheek, for nature never does. The next step is to fix the lips, and the color for them is always the same as that used on the cheeks and is always a liquid. This should be put on very carefully and so as to appear darker on the inner edge, but not much darker, and should be put on the forehead and rubbed off until there is none to be seen. Then the slightest suspicion is touched on the eyebrows, under the mouth and as promptly rubbed off, as the object is only to take off the shine.

"After this you go to the brows and eyelashes, and remember also you do, don't use a pencil for the daytime. You can buy a little box with a cunning little mirror in the top and a pencil in the bottom and a horn of what appears to be India ink at the bottom. And she generally is clever enough to wear a hat which shades her face just a bit at least. Of course, you don't need cosmetics, they can never say positively that she paints.

"But how about the make-up for evening dress?" asked her two friends as she stopped speaking and applied herself to the third course of her luncheon.

"Oh, well, almost any of these modes we see about us would pass muster in gas or candle light. That is one reason why they look so much better indoors. They make up in a dark room with the lights turned on, and they are really now, all of them, looking at their best, and any other woman with disgust and congratulating themselves on knowing just how the thing is properly done. Almost any woman looks well by day or by gas or candle light, but it is best to apply after the daylight fashion, only making it more intense. But when it comes to the theatre one must be more careless work. If you do, it is a dead giveaway."

THE OLD ADAGE.

"WHAT IS WORTH DOING AT ALL IS WORTH DOING WELL."

The Notion of Economizing Time By Slighting Work is as Foolish as Robbing Peter to Pay Paul—Learn to Distinguish Tasks Which Are Duties and Those Not.

The adage that What is worth doing at all is worth doing well is so well known as the truth that the proverb is oftener quoted than practised. Life is such a whirl of duties, there is so much to be crushed off its green space of time, that the hurried and harried housekeeper does things with what the oldfashioned country people call "a fit and a run doing." This notion of economizing time by slighting work is as foolish as to rob Peter to pay Paul. Sooner or later—and it is generally sooner—Peter must be paid, and oftener with interest. The room that was only half dusted yesterday will look more untidy to-day because of the dust collected in the corners and the deposit of dust on the rungs of the chairs, and the whole apartment will have to be thoroughly dusted. So the time spent yesterday in flecking the impalpable, but perceptible, powder from the mantel and the dado and setting off the polished table tops was really time thrown away. This morning the price of a former morning's negligence is paid.

So with the ugly tear that was hastily mended last evening. It took much less time to run together the sides of the rent than it will now. It is used up in laying another piece of stuff under the hole and neatly darning down the edges. But this first time that a strain comes on the spot—it will go to the thin edges, and the last end of that tear is worse than the first. Even darn it, and you expect it to catch and darn it. But who will give back to you the precious time spent last night in superficial work? Those minutes are much wasted as the hour sat with folded hands. It would better investment than the careless stitches, for they would have meant beneficial rest, and therefore gain, while unsual.

It is time the American housekeeper appreciated the great truth that time and nerves are too precious to be wasted in performing that which avails naught. Suppose you do not "turn off" as much work as your neighbor. What difference does this make? If you have done what you could, thoroughly and conscientiously, you have done all that it is your duty to do. And well is better service than to do much.

Our dear Mrs. Prestige says:—"If you could once make up your mind, in the fear of God, not to undertake more work of any sort that you can carry on calmly, quietly, without hurry or flurry and the instant you feel yourself growing nervous and out of breath would stop and take breath, you would find this simple, common-sense rule doing for you what a prayer or two could scarcely accomplish."

"Ah!" some weary woman sighs, "if one could do that! But there are so many things in my life that I have no time to do any one of them thoroughly!"

Are they all Mustbe's? There are Musts of duty that belong to us women in the garb of essentials that are really only Maybe's. The great thing is for us to learn to distinguish those tasks which are duties from those which, as sweet Leslie Goldthwaite learned by experience, "must be crowded out." Let them go, and let us not mind what other people think you ought to do. That is not the point.

The problem to be solved is what God and our conscience ought to do. When you decide that, and then take up with both hands each duty that he assigns you, bravely and calmly and with a determination to perform it unto Him, the flurry and hurry will disappear and the needed strength will come.

Work accepted in this spirit must of necessity be well done. It cannot be nervously hurried over or the thing left to be performed by others—the hundred and one other claims.—Marion Harland.

Rose Bags.

Iris and lavender are very fragrant and nice to mix with rose, but they do not compare with the June rose bag in freshness or perfume. Tom Moore knew whereof he spoke when he talked about the rose that "clung to it still," for in all probability he had a feminine relative whose delight was to rise with the lark and pick York roses in which to embalm her purple and fine linen. As rose bags were made then they are made now, provided that one knows the secret of success, which is to allow the petals to dry perfectly before tucking them away among one's linens. If one breaks the petals as one would for a pot pourri, by leaving them on a newspaper in the sunshine or in a warm, dry room, for half the forenoon or forty-four hours, possibly longer, to dry them thoroughly. They should be shaken up and turned occasionally to insure the evaporation of all the moisture. When quite crisp and withered put the petals in bags of net, thin silk or muslin, and scatter with them a few dried rose essence. This will stimulate and bring the perfume out, as a damp day brings out the scent of the sweet-grass basket made by the Indians.

Sun Bonnets the Rage.

Sunbonnets of every description are seen in the shops and exchanges, and there is no doubt about it but they are the rage. The average out-door girl must possess at least half a dozen of these creations. In the country they are worn all day, and in town they are fashions them herself, but this is no small task, and requires time and taste and skill.

Bathing could be more becoming and picturesque than some of the lovely combinations of muslin, lace and ribbon which are already shown. They are made in all sizes and worked in bright colors, to suit every taste. Some are soft and drooping and others are made on stiffened forms. They have strings or they have not, but the strings, if there, are unlikely ever to be tied. It would seem to indicate that the average girl intends to pay great regard to her complexion, and not go bathless in the sun as she did last season.

Mr. Murray Marked.

It is unlikely that Assemblyman Murray will be renominated in Union. His "I propose" and "I object" in the last run of House debate have been adopted at his home in Plainfield, where the Republican chan "proposes" to nominate another because they "object" to Murray.—New York Press.

This is the edict that we have been expecting from the powers that be in political circles. Mr. Murray was undoubtedly too independent for the servile followers of the corporations in the last Legislature. The Plainfield statesman had convictions and he did not allow them to be smothered under political pressure in the State House. So far as we were able to judge Mr. Murray did not espouse or advocate a single measure in the last Legislature that was not conceded to be fair, but the fact that he did not truckle to certain influences makes him a mark for political retirement. We do not know whether Mr. Murray intends to strive for another nomination this fall, but if he does it will be interesting to see how he fares.

Asking Pointed Questions.

The State Department of Banking and Insurance is about to turn a searchlight upon the methods and financial conditions of the building and loan associations doing business in New Jersey.

Wm. Bettle, chief of the department, has had prepared for distribution a form of the report which these associations will be required to render to his department.

Some of the questions in the report, if truthfully answered, and they must be duly verified and sworn to, may be the means of causing some of the associations to go out of business. The report of an association made upon the blank that has been prepared will be most complete, as the forty-six searching questions and eleven tabulated statements, many a one hinging upon another, are calculated to expose any existing family skeleton, no matter how securely it may be locked up in the association's closet.

From Army to Business.

Four thousand of the volunteers in the Philippines have asked for permission to be mustered out over there, with travel pay, if they desire to remain and take part in the business and industrial developments of the Islands. Gen. Otis has been instructed to grant this request, under such conditions as he might see fit to impose. He has issued an order that men who wished to receive their discharges to enter civil life would be allowed land travel pay, and be given a certificate good for free transportation to the U. S. on an army transport at any time within one year, and that those who would re-enlist after discharge would receive travel pay for the entire distance to and from the old homes. Notwithstanding this big inducement—more than $600 a man—a comparatively small portion of the men have reenlisted. Gen. Otis has made no report as to the number, but unofficial advices say that not more than enough men to form two regiments have been secured.

No better evidence of the desire and the purpose of the Central Railroad of New Jersey to accommodate the community they serve, even when they are not assured of clearing expenses on a certain service, is needed than is the agreement to put on through trains between Plainfield and Newark at the request of the Board of Trade of the latter city. General Passenger Agent Baldwin has had considerable experience in this direction, and it has been such that he does not believe that it will be a profitable one for the company. However, the Newark merchants have been so earnest in their solicitation and so persistent in their efforts to get the through train service, that the railroad company has finally agreed to accommodate their requests, though they scarcely believe the service will return the expenses it will entail. But in railroad business the same as other lines the old axiom, "nothing ventured, nothing gained," offers a basis for experimenting with the through service.

A Washington (N. J.) paper suggests Former Congressman Cornish as the Democratic State leader. Hunterdon County Democrat name Congressman Daly. The Bayonne Herald nominates Allan L. McDermott upon whose broad shoulders the mantle of Leon Abbett rests.

GIVE THE CHILDREN A DRINK called Grain-O. It is a delicious, appetizing, nourishing food drink to take the place of coffee. Sold by all grocers and liked by all who have used it. Children when properly prepared it tastes like the finest coffee but is free from all its injurious properties. Grain-O is delicately nourishing, strengthens the nerves. It is not a stimulant but a health builder, and children, as well as adults, can drink it with great benefit. Costs about ¼ as much as coffee. 15 and 25c.

Lawyers After "Dunn Act."

The Lawyers' Club of Newark, the most influential organization of legal minds in the State, has decided to bring proceedings to test the constitutionality of the Five Counselors Act, known more popularly as the "Dunn Act."

The law was passed at the instigation of Congressman John T. Dunn, of Elizabeth, who, when he forsook the paint brush and pot, desired to become a lawyer, but was unable to at that time on account of the rigid rules concerning an apprenticeship in an established lawyer's office. Mr. Dunn was subsequently elected a Member of the Assembly from Union county and while serving as such succeeded in securing the passage of the Five Counselors Act, which provides that any one who can secure the recommendation of five counselors at law in good standing may be entitled to take the examination provided for aspiring lawyers by the Supreme court, and if they pass they must be licensed to practice.

It is urge by many of the legal lights of the State that this law has opened a way for the admittance of a large number of incapable and vicious lawyers in New Jersey. An unsuccessful attempt to repeal the law was made at the last, and several preceding sessions of the Legislature.

If things continue to progress in the New York Produce Exchange as favorably for the Plainfield members for the next few years as they have in the past few, there is no reason to believe but what the citizens of the Eldorado of the East will be the whole powers that be in that great commercial institution. The annual election of officers was held yesterday, and Councilman Elliott T. Barrows, of the Third ward, was advanced from vice president to president of the Exchange. President of the Council Fred T. Andrews, *also of the Third ward, was ad*vanced from the position of secretary to vice-president of the Exchange. And further than that Councilman John Valiant, of the borough, was reelected as a member of the board of governors. No other town, with the exception of New York city, is so well represented among the officers of the Produce Exchange as Plainfield.

The Duke de Arcos, the new Spanish Minister, who has had the honor to reopen diplomatic relations between Spain and the United States, is a man of common sense as well as a diplomat. He proved it some time ago by marrying an American girl. When asked to express an opinion concerning Cuba, the Philippines and the late war with Spain, he replied: "You will please excuse me. I come to let bygones be bygones. Spain is waiting and watching; she has the past, you have the future. I do not wish to talk of the past. I come here to meet friends, many of them very old ones, not enemies."

Elizabeth is contemplating extensive street improvements in the direction of permanent pavement, the same as Plainfield is, and at a meeting of the Elizabeth Council last week bids were received from companies desiring to do the work. Inasmuch as this city will be going through the same experience in a few weeks it will be interesting to know how the bids run. The bids for asphalt ran from $2.09 per square yard to $2.50 per square yard, the *proposals being sub*mitted for lake and rock asphalt, the latter being the highest quality. The trapblock proposals varied from $1.42 to $1.75 per square yard; the telford from 84 cents to $1 15 per square yard, and brick from $1.71 to $2.23 per square yard.

The borough is certainly to be congratulated for the way in which her taxpayers have come forward and settled their taxes. Of the 1898 personal tax there is only $20 remaining unpaid, while of the poll tax there is about $60 unpaid. Collector Brown has used the limit of the law to secure this money, and many persons threatened with arrest have come up and settled rather than go to jail. Mr. Brown will continue to enforce the law and make every person pay up or take the consequence.

The Philadelphia Record observes that "like the use of the bicycle, the use of the automobile contrivances will raise up new advocates for better roads. What was denied to suffering horses will may be conceded to human beings who kick their way along the highways and to the desire for speedier and safer propulsion in the horseless carriages. From this point of view the new inventions are likely to prove a boom to those who do not use them as well as to those who do."

Government officials have about abandoned hope of any settlement of the Alaskan boundary dispute through the negotiations now pending. It is stoutly claimed that this is the fault of the Canadian Government, which has made it plain that nothing short of a Pacific port will satisfy it. This Government has made it equally plain that it will neither make such a concession nor agree to submit Canada's right to ask as much to arbitration.

The Trust Business.

There is a slight decrease in the value of the corporations and trusts that have come into existence during the last month in New Jersey, due to the fact that nearly all important commercial combinations have been made. The corporation department of the Secretary of State's office has announced the result of the trade of the month of May. There were 205 corporations given certificates or charters, and that is larger than any previous month, although the total of the capital stock is not as large, due to the fact that there has been a rush of small corporations, with capital stock ranging from $100,000 to $1,000,000

Delaware has captured corporations to the amount of $60,000,000, and a company has been formed to incorporate concerns under the laws of both New Jersey and Delaware, and each concern has opened offices almost under the shadow of the State House in Trenton. The decrease is said to be legitimate, because the big companies have all come into existence during previous months, and the high tide in the business of incorporations has been reached.

The State of New Jersey was figuring on getting at least $1,000,000 out of the registration of charters, but it will not reach that amount. There are only five months before the end of the fiscal year, and during the midsummer months few concerns come into existence. The financial officers of the State now believe that the State's revenue from this source will be about $700,000, which is a very notable increase compared with the $84,110.80 received from this source last year.

Saloon in the West End.

If the establishment of a licensed saloon in the West End of the city will result in the suppression of the illegal traffic that is known to exist there now, the Common Council will have, perhaps, acted wisely in granting the application of Michael Walsh last night. Doubtless those who are earnest advocates of temperance will question the policy that permits the establishment of another saloon on any pretext, but if it wise, and the position that the Council has taken is the matter for the past few years would seem to prove that it is accepted as such, for licenses to be granted for three saloons within a stone throw of each other on West Third street, then it is not an extraordinary proceeding to allow one saloon to be located in a section like that surrounding Grant avenue and South Second street.

This question of a licensed saloon in the West End has been a bone of con*tention for several years past, and* how that is settled by the barriers of precedent being thrown down it is probable that as long as any licenses are granted in the city this particular one will continue to secure the approval of the Council in the same direction, providing, of course, its record for the first year is not a bad one.

David B. Henderson, of Iowa, will be the next Speaker. The Ohio delegation has decided to support his candidacy en Hanna's orders, and that insures his election. This means President McKinley will have more influence in Congress than he has possessed since becoming chief executive.

DOGBERRY TIED THE KNOT.

Justice Mosher is Getting Popular With Couples Who Want to Marry.

Justice Mosher had the honor and pleasure of performing another marriage last Tuesday. It is quite apparent that the justice is becoming popular in nuptial affairs, this being the *third marriage ceremony he has per*formed within two weeks. The contracting parties today were David McInnes, 23 years old, a native of Scotland, and a machinist by trade.

His bride was Willemena Romenick, 19 years old, and a native of Germany. The nuptial knot was tied in Justice Mosher's best style in the office of Counselor Geo. Ball.

The only witnesses *were the blush*ing attorney and the matter-of-fact W. R. Mattox, one of the three constables of Plainfield. The affable justice did not have the temerity to kiss the bride, but he did extend his congratulations.

New Guggenheim Concern.

New Brunswick, June 6.—The Gug*genheim Exploration Company* filed articles of incorporation at the County Clerk's office yesterday. The object of the corporation is to acquire land in various countries for the purpose of mining for precious metals. The new company is to operate in conjunction with the Guggenheim Smelting Company, which has an enormous refinery of precious metals at Perth Amboy.

CHINATOWN "WHITE DEVIL"

Lieut. Wm. Price of the San Francisco Police Force Honored With That Name.

DESCRIBES HIS WORK.

Never Fights Highbinders Twice in the Same Way—Secret Signals Travel Ahead of Officers and Bluff Flit.

The Only Safe Way to Capture a Hatchetman is to Make a Rush—Danger Always From Secret Trap Doors Operated by Cords or Springs—Treacherous Roof Fighting.

Lieut. William Price of the San Francisco police force has been fighting the "hatchetmen" of Chinatown in that city for ten years. He has thus described his work and that of his enemies:

The only way to fight a pack of demons is to go among them yourself, I guess. Ten years ago the highbinders called me their "white devil." If there is anything in a name, all right. I would rather have them believe I am a devil than an angel.

How do I fight highbinders? Never twice in the same way. If you set a trap for a hatchetman and he gets caught in it you will never bag another one that way. If there were 1,500 highbinders in that quarter everyone would know it in less than five minutes. When I walk down Kearney street and up toward Chinatown these men have signals who carry the news on ahead of me, just as if someone had my picture on a banner going on. It's like a flash. A certain wave of the hand goes from block to block and these hands are well paid, too.

But if they should fail in their duty and some highbinder should be caught redhanded all the spunk sticks in Chinatown could not save the carrying signalman. A price would be placed on his head before an hour.

Besides this system there are secret ways of holding parties and underground dens where the highbinders hold their meetings. I remember a big raid we made one midnight in Ross alley. We had located twenty hatchetmen in a deep cellar, but the next thing was to get them handcuffed. I knew we could fight men and that signals were being used. "Little Pete" had just been murdered and over his grave vengeance had been sworn. Our only hope was to cut the signals or wires.

A block distant from the den was a Chinese butcher, on the street corner, and his stall was open so he could look both directions. He had a suspicious look whenever I came about and always began to cut up meat. We watched him. I always went to the same block and began cutting. Two minutes before the raid I jumped around the street corner and into his stall. He moved toward the block, but I clicked a gun in his face. It was not a block at all,—simply a board rounded to look like one, and the sleight of weight told me it would press a button below and ring the highbinders' bell a block away. I clipped the wire carefully, handcuffed my man to an iron railing outside and soon had a wagon load of men from Ross alley on the way to the central police station. Of my fellows, Sanderson looking fellows, but we covered them all with guns as soon as the door was opened.

The only safe way of getting a highbinder is to make a rush. He always has six or eight doors at his disposal, besides secret hiding places, blind doors and windows. I have known of them to jump into a "climb waiter" or secret elevator and shoot up to the attic and jump through a hole in the roof. All this is in the books. Right here is the danger in hunting the highbinder. A policeman is liable to step upon a concealed trap door in the floor and fall into some dark building and fall into some dark, foul basement twenty feet below. We have to look out for this when we do the "rush act." Not many weeks ago Tom Naylor was pursuing a desperate fellow through one lodging house on Stockton street, and was just about to grab him by the "pigtail" when the highbinder ran up a "trick ladder" to a hole in the roof. Tom followed him and when he got to the top of the criminal pulled out a nail, jerked a wire and Naylor fell twenty feet to the floor, while his man ran out over the roof. Naylor tried to give it up.

The roof fighting is the most treacherous of all in raiding highbinders. A man is a good target in such a place, and it is impossible to tell where the shot was fired. But that isn't all. On all these roofs there are trap doors, all fixed with springs, so that at any minute, while the hatchetmen knew them all at a glance. It is a bad thing to fall through these doors. You don't know where or how far you are going to journey, nor just what kind of company you're going to find at the bottom. The doors are operated by cords or springs.

I have surprised many a gang by sliding down a rope right into their midst. Another trick of mine was best. Sometimes a shot fired above their heads the moment you enter the room will have the desired effect. You must show them right from the start that you mean business. Sometimes a squad can surprise the guards and looking by flashing a pair of bayonets before the door or from the opposite side of a crowded street car.

When a highbinders' society meets to set prices and decide heads and determine which among them shall do the deed the utmost caution is observed. Sentries are wired or clipped they are still safe. At least three guards stand near the entrance, two of them on the opposite side of the street. The approach of an officer the men inside scatter or begin playing dominoes. The bylaws and the bowl with the "black button" are put in a chute and sent above or below, where some man is always in readiness to receive them. When all is quiet again they gather around the bowl, all blindfolded but the president and secretary. The dish is filled with white buttons. If a man is to be killed one black button is placed in the bowl and the members begin to "draw." Doomed but resolute, is the man who gets the black. He must do the job and money is ready for his defense if he is caught.

END OF SCHOOL YEAR IS CLOSE AT HAND.

Regular Meeting of the Board of Education.

COMMENCEMENT PLANS.

DECIDED NOT TO HAVE CHILDREN SING AT GRADUATION.

A Special Invitation Extended to State Superintendent Baxter and President McCutchen, of State Board of Education, to Attend the Exercises—Some Repairs to be Made in the Vacation Time.

All the members were present at last Monday's regular meeting of the Board of Education. Bills for various amounts were presented and after being read were audited and ordered paid.

Superintendent Maxson presented a check for $384 in payment of tuition for non-resident pupils for the summer term. He also presented a check for $10 collected by the pupils of Whittier School for the library fund. Upon motion of the president the money was ordered placed to the credit of the school fund. The report of the tax collector, showing that $784.92 of school taxes had been collected was received and the amount ordered placed to the credit of the school fund.

The Board acknowledged and extended a vote of thanks to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., for an invitation to attend the memorial exercises in May next.

At the suggestion of Superintendent Maxson, the Board discussed the propriety of having singing by the children of the school on the occasion of the graduation exercises of the High School. After a full discussion of the subject it was decided to dispense with the singing.

Mr. Lounsbury, from the committee on buildings and repairs, reported that new desks were necessary in the Franklin, Whittier and Bryant schools to provide for the increase in classes. The cost would be about $1,100. Upon motion it was decided to purchase the required number of desks.

Plans and specifications were also presented from Architect Karr with reference to making repairs to the Whittier School building, to give additional class rooms on the second floor. After a thorough examination of the plans it was ordered that the Board advertise in the city newspapers for bids, the same to be opened and acted upon in full Board.

At the request of Superintendent Maxson the Board passed a resolution extending a special invitation to St. John McCutchen, president of the North Plainfield Board of Education, and also to the Hon. C. J. Baxter, State Superintendent of Education, to attend the graduating exercises of the High School.

Upon motion of President Probasco the Board then went into executive session.

FIRE IN RINK BUILDING.

CAUSED BY TENANT BAKING BREAD AT 3:15 A. M.

Might Have Been a Serious Conflagration if Not Discovered as it Was—Third Fire at Brady's Icehouse.

The fire department was obliged to answer to two still alarms Sunday, but in neither case did the fires amount to much, although the first at 3:15 o'clock Sunday morning might have proved a serious one. It was in the apartments occupied by the captain of the Salvation Army and his family, in the rink building on Watchung avenue.

The captain's wife was baking bread at that hour with an oil stove. They evidently were unconscious of an impending fire, but a man named Thomas, residing in an apartment beneath them, smelled the smoke. He hastened to headquarters and gave the alarm. Assistant Chief Jennings and Driver Wm. Roes hastened to the scene of the fire with No. 2 hose wagon. An investigation proved that the fire was behind the walls, and after tearing off several strips of boarding twelve inches long, it was discovered that two 2x4 inch studs were almost burned through. If this had not been discovered in time no doubt a large conflagration would have followed. Through the use of extinguishers the fire was soon put out and little damage resulted.

The second "still" was at the site of Brady Brothers' icehouse, which was recently destroyed by fire. In some unknown manner the sawdust, lying about the place caught fire and was blazing fiercely. This makes the third time that the department has been called to that place. No. 2 hose wagon was taken out, and in a little while the fire was extinguished. The damage was very slight.

ALL WANTED CUPS.

L. W. Randolph Sold 2,000 Glasses of Soda Water Saturday.

Saturday was a big day for L. W. Randolph, the popular Front street druggist. He advertised to give away a tin cup to every purchaser of a glass of soda, and as a result he gave away 2,000 cups. Miss Ellis, of Sixth street, was in charge of the cups and distributed them to the people as they left the store. The crowd began to arrive during the forenoon, and increased steadily until the cups were all gone about 10 o'clock in the evening. The crowd was so large at one time in the evening that Patrolman Saunders was sent for to clear a passage way into the store, it being impossible for people to get in and out. The cups given away makes a nice souvenir, and inside appears the advertisement of Mr. Randolph. Up and down the various principal streets during the evening there was a clatter of cups and the advertisement proved to be a profitable one.

To Entertain Visiting Braves.

The picnic committee of Miantonomo Tribe of Red Men, No. 118, met Saturday evening and made arrangements for entertaining the numerous visiting tribes which are expected in the city on the occasion of the Fourth of July celebration.

Fine Time on the Mountain.

The Sunday-school of the Unitarian church, comprising a goodly number of people, went by trolley to the mountains last Saturday and spent a most delightful time. They were accompanied by Pastor Nickerson, who had charge of the programme for the day and thus all were assured a good time.

Juniors Invited Here.

Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., has issued invitations to several councils throughout the State to take part with them in the Fourth of July celebration and parade in this city. It is expected that the response will be quite general.

to the coffee drinker. Coffee drinking is a habit that is universally indulged in and although as universally injurious. Have you tried Grain-O? It is almost like coffee but the effects are just the opposite. Coffee upsets the stomach, ruins the digestion, affects the heart and disturbs the whole nervous system. Grain-O loses not the stomach, aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. There is nothing but nourishment in Grain-O. It can't be otherwise. 15 and 25c. per package.

GOOD RACES AT DRIVING PARK SATURDAY.

Exhibition Mile by A. C. Vail's Grey Mare in 2:34—Decided Not to Have Any Races on the Fourth of July.

There was a good-sized crowd present Saturday at the track of the Plainfield Driving Association, at which time several excellent races were witnessed. There was considerable interest and good time was made, considering that the horses so recently took part in the Decoration Day races at New Brunswick. Following is a result of the several races:

Henry Hayes, "Andy"	1	1
F. Jenner, "Nancy"	3	2
J. Martin, "Jerry"	2	3
Time—2:50; 2:51.
W. O. Baldwin, "Jeaness"	1
J. Mantz, "Dapper"	2
Time—2:31; 2:30.
T. Brantingham, "Wyoming Boy"	1
J. W. Johnson, "Wyoming Wind"	2

It has been decided by the officers of the association not to hold a meet July 3d and 4th, as previously intended, but to hold a meet the last of August.

A feature of Saturday's card was the exhibition mile by A. C. Vail's grey mares in 2:34 Next Saturday four good races have been arranged for and fast time is expected.

MAYOR ACTED AS JUSTICE.

Mr. Smalley Discharges Mr. Spring With a Warning.

Saturday evening the case of Lewis Spring, who was charged with disorderly conduct, came before Mayor Smalley in the borough court room at 7 o'clock. S. S. Swackhamer appeared for the defendant, and upon certain technical objections being interposed the defendant was discharged by the Mayor, and in so doing Mayor Smalley stated that there must be no more disorderly or misconduct, and earnestly urged the defendant to maintain peace and harmony in his home hereafter.

For Aid of Babies' Camp.

An ice-cream, cake and candy sale, for the benefit of the babies' camp supported by the City Union of King's Daughters, was held Saturday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Skillman, 1326 Watchung avenue, by Miss Ethel Skillman, Miss Constance Wilcox, Miss Grace Wilcox, Dudley Wilcox and Frank Wilcox. Tables decorated with flowers were scattered about the lawn, and here during the afternoon the young people dispensed ice cream and delicious home-made cakes and candies. The profits were $5.

He Was D. and D

James Frazer was arrested on West Fourth street at an early hour Sunday morning by Patrolman Watson, who charged him with being drunk and disorderly. He was released by Mayor Rockfellow to appear in court last Monday, which he did and upon pleading guilty to the charge preferred by the officer was given a reprimand by Judge Runyon and given his liberty, sentence being suspended.

Engagements.

The engagement is announced of Miss Emma F. Gillem, of 113 Duer street, to Leonard S. Smith, of 109 Duer street.

The engagement is also announced of Miss Grace C. Smith, of Park avenue, and William H. Olmsted, of Bank place.

Little Borough Business.

It is not likely that there will be a mid-month meeting of the Borough Council this month, owing to the very little work that is being done on the streets, thus making the pay roll so small that it is not necessary to take action on it.

S. D. Drake's New Office.

Silas Dewey Drake has leased the store formerly occupied by the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, on North avenue, for a term of two years, and will fit it up for offices for his new real estate venture.

—At the cake and candy sale to be given tomorrow afternoon and evening at the Young Women's Club there will also be ice cream for sale, which is very seasonable at this time. The proceeds of the sale will be devoted to paying the rent for the clubroom during the summer, and no doubt there will be a liberal patronage.

POLITICAL SLATES IN UNION COUNTY.

Many Aspiring Candidates in Both Parties.

DEMOCRATS ARE ACTIVE.

THINK THEY SEE A CHANCE TO CAPTURE SOME PLACES.

Several Men Who are Anxious to be Named for the Office of Sheriff—Plainfielders are in the Fight and Will Do Their Best to Get a Share of the Plums—A Democratic Picnic.

Elizabeth, June 5—The Union county Democrats are going to have an outing August 31st which they expect to make a big affair. It will be by water to College Point or Whitestone, L. I. This is the day the slate will be made up for the fall campaign, when a Senator, County Clerk and Sheriff will be chosen besides three Assemblymen.

Owing to the bitter struggle among the Republicans this year for these offices the chances of the Democrats are thought to be improving in the county.

Freeholder William J. Swain, of Summit, is a candidate for Sheriff, and so is Jacob Glaser, of Elizabeth. John L. Crowell, of Rahway, it is said, would not be averse to running for County Clerk. Former Sheriff Hicks, of Elizabeth, is talked of for State Senator.

There promises to be a number of Riebmonds in the field by the time the outing takes place.

The Union county political slate which it is whispered is most favored by the Republican party leaders is Joseph Cross, of Union, for Senator; William Howard, of Rahway, for County Clerk, and Robert Houston, of Elizabethport, for Sheriff. The trouble, however, is that Sheriff Kirk, of Plainfield, wants to be County Clerk, and so do J. T. McMurray, of Plainfield, and Assemblyman George A. Squire, of Elizabeth.

Freeholder J. Martin Roll, of Springfield, would, it is said, like to be Sheriff.

The slate favored by the leaders leaves Plainfield without any of the plums, and that Gibraltar of Republicanism will hardly submit to be thrown down a second time in this fashion.

The death of William Colgan, City Surveyor of Elizabeth, creates a vacancy that it will be difficult for the Democrats to fill. There is very little available timber, and this was conceded by the way in which year after year Ernest L. Meyer, Republican, was chosen.

Thomas Mackesey is said to be a candidate, and Mr. Meyer would like to get it again.

ence and faith. The builders of our system thoroughly understood the meaning of these types and symbols, and selected them because of their meaning. The ceremonies of ancient craft Masonry outline prophecy, and picture sacrifice, of which a consistent meaning can be found only in the sacred Scriptures."

After the above address the Grand Master made a few appropriate remarks in which he eulogized highly the remarks of Dr. Richardson. He also stated that the sentiments of the address were the same as those expressed at a meeting of the Grand Lodge of the State of New York, held yesterday.

The visitors were obliged to leave in time to take the 9:30 o'clock train from New York, and after their departure the evening was devoted to social features, during which a bountiful collation was served. A feature of the affair was the fine music rendered by Joseph A. Sattel's orchestra, and a trombone solo by Garret T. Dunham.

The rooms were beautifully decorated for the occasion by Brother Miles, and a profusion of choice roses were used, while every member present was presented with a pink rose.

The committees, to whom is due the credit for the delightful affair, are as follows: Reception—Past Masters Jacob Kirkner, Wm. Sebring, D. C. Adams, H. O Hance, Wm. Ford; entertainment—G. T. Dunham, Chas. Yaeger, R. A. Meeker, C. H. Rugg, Stephen Beeching; refreshment—L. B. Woodson, J. W. Vansfelde, Clarence Goss, R. A. Meeker and Henry Woodland, while Past Master B. Frank Coriell had general supervision of the whole affair.

$20,000,000 MORTGAGE.

IT REQUIRED $10,000 WORTH OF REVENUE STAMPS.

Given by the United Electric Company to Guarantee Trust Company to Secure a $20,000,000 Bond Issue.

Elizabeth, June 7.—The biggest mortgage ever recorded in this county was filed in the Recorder's office yesterday morning. It was for $20,000,000, and the revenue on it alone amounted to $10,000. The mortgage was a collateral trust mortgage given by the United Electric Company of New Jersey to the New Jersey Title Guarantee Trust Company to secure the issuance of certain bonds. The United Electric Company proposes to issue and deliver to the trustees 25,000 bonds, numbered from 1 to 25,000 inclusive, and aggregating in amount the sum of $20,000,000, bearing 4 per cent. and payable in gold. The mortgage is a voluminous one, filling thirty large printed pages, setting forth the nature of the indenture. The mortgage will cover 496,742½ shares of stock of the People's Light and Power Company at a par value of $10 each; 19,993 shares of the North Hudson Light, Heat and Power Company at a par value of $100; 9,993 shares of the Consumers' Light, Heat and Power Company, of Elizabeth, at a par value of $100, and 1,115 shares of the Morris County Electric Company, at a par value of $100.

CAN'T GET HIS GOODS.

Fred Hargraves Commences Action in Tort Against Wesley Brokaw.

Fred Hargraves has brought an action in tort against Wesley R. Brokaw, the Front street music dealer, for an alleged conversion of property to the amount of $200. It appears that some time ago Mrs. Cornelia Hargraves, who is suing her husband for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, packed up some household goods which Mr. Hargraves alleges to be is property and had them stored in Brokaw's store.

When replevin papers were served upon Brokaw he ignored them and refused to give up the property; hence the action. W. G. DeMott represents the defendant. The papers are returnable next Monday afternoon before Justice Mosher.

DESTRUCTION OF THE PALISADES.

Efforts May Be Made to Preserve Them.

THE LAW TO BE INVOKED.

SENTIMENT OF THE PEOPLE FAVOR THE MOVEMENT.

A Suggestion From James E. Martine That the State Purchase the Property and Convert It Into a Public Park and Thereby Save This Picturesque Aspect of the Hudson River.

The destruction of the beautiful Palisades along the Hudson river goes steadily forward, and notwithstanding the sentiment of the public there appears to be no means of putting a stop to the demolition of these imposing rocky formations which appeal to the many who annually sail up or down the "Rhine of America."

While it is well-known perhaps that some attempt has been made upon the part of the residents of this State to check the work and if possible save the Palisades these efforts have been pure spasmodic and have resulted in nothing. It is the belief of many people that the State authorities will yet be compelled to act in the matter before any definite means is evolved to save these picturesque rocks from entire destruction. It is quite apparent to those interested in the preservation of the Palisades that it is necessary to have legislative enactment in the premises before there can be an assured fact that they will be left entact and their glorious magnificence continue to enchant the vision and delight the eye of all lovers of God's handiwork.

In an interview regarding the Hudson river and the celebrated Palisades, James E. Martine said to a Press reporter:

"I think it a disgrace to New Jersey that the State powers have stood idly by for so long and permitted the destruction of this wonderful rock formation. There is no use of appealing to the owners of the property on the grounds of sentiment. Sentiment doesn't cut much figure with these people. What they are after is hard cash—nothing else will stop them."

"What cause would you suggest, Mr. Martine?" was asked.

"Why, let the Legislature act. Have the property condemned by the State for a public park and paid for by the State."

"Do you have an idea that such a bill could be put through the Legislature?"

"Most assuredly I do. If the people will insist that party platforms and candidates be pledged to support such a measure there would be no difficulty about enacting a law that would be the means of saving the Palisades.

"Just as sure as the matter is much longer delayed this wonderous wall of rock will be entirely demolished or at least enough of it will be blasted away to utterly efface one of the most impressive and beautiful features of our country."

ENCAMPMENT OF G. A. R.

STATE DEPARTMENT MEETING IN TRENTON TODAY.

Department Commander Smith, of Plainfield, Presiding Over the Session—Candidates Named to Succeed Him.

Trenton, June 7—The annual encampment of the Department of New Jersey, Grand Army of the Republic, opened this afternoon in Masonic Hall, and will continue through until tomorrow night. Department Commander Wm. C. Smith, of Plainfield, is presiding over the sessions of the encampment, which opened at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

During this first session nominations will be made for department commander, senior and junior vice-commanders, chaplain and medical director. There will also be nominations made for council of administration and delegates to the National Encampment, to be held in Philadelphia in September.

Among the prominent ones mentioned for department commander are the present holder of the office; ex-Sheriff George Bassett, of Camden; Capt. Parsons, of Red Bank, and Oscar Gifford, of Newark.

This morning the Council of Administration met and considered some of the early business of the encampment. This evening a camp fire will be held in Masonic Hall. Before the opening of the regular order of business, there will be an informal meeting of the delegates of the Woman's Relief Corps and the Ladies of the G. A. R.

A large number of the members from Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, of this city, are in attendance at the convention, and they will stand united in their support for the re-election of Department Commander Smith. Many of the local veterans will take in the last day of the encampment, which is the most important.

BOROUGH COUNCIL FINDS PLENTY 10 DO.

Many Routine Matters Were Transacted Friday Night.

DETAILED STREET REPORT.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PAYMENT OF AVENUE ASSESSMENTS.

Petition Received for Macadamizing Orchard Avenue and a Complaint About Westervelt Avenue—$150 Voted to Warren Engine Company to Help Buy the Members New Uniforms.

The warm weather of last Friday did not affect the amount of business to be transacted and the session was a little longer then usual. All the members were present including the Mayor and Corporation Counsel.

Clerk Bowley presented the report of Collector George F. Brown, which also includes the clerk's report. It is as follows: Taxes and interest, $957.92; special school tax, $343; Board of Health, $763; Watchung avenue assessment, $1,611.59; rent of 106 Duer street, $10; license, $30; fines, $5; received from Plainfield Street Railway, $10; received from Somerset county, account of borough licenses, $855; balance May 1st, $4,561.74; disbursements, $5,362.73; cash June 1st, $3,036.85; borough fund, $1,026.21; Watchung avenue fund, $1,412.64.

Among the petitions received was one from Henry A. McGee and other residents of Orchard avenue, asking to have their street macadamized, and agreeing to pay their proportionate share for the work. In a long series of complaints some unknown person presented a petition to the Council asking to have Westervelt avenue between Grandview and Mountain avenues macadamized. The petition was presented through Mr. Swackhamer, who did not care to divulge the petitioner's name. The paper stated the awful condition of the street in the spring and summer, when it was sometimes impossible to get through the street on account of the mud especially. The petitioner stated that the former administration had agreed to macadamize the street, but nothing has been done.

Mayor Smalley stated to the truth of the statements made in the petition, but Mr. Valiant objected to being cited as a part of a former administration that had agreed to macadamize the street. The matter was simply received and filed.

Wm. Newcorn, from Miantonomoh Tribe, I. O. R., petitioned the Council to appoint a committee of three to meet with the general Fourth of July committee, and Mayor Smalley left the matter in the hands of President Swackhamer.

Chairman Clark, of the street committee, presented a detailed account of the work accomplished in his department through the past month. During April $691.58 was expended and $1,956.26 was spent in May, of $3,500 appropriated to the street work, $1,946.84 has been expended, leaving a balance of $1,553.16 on hand. During the month there was used 858 tons and 1,775 pounds of crushed stone in various parts of the borough, and the sum of $456.93 was expended for labor.

Mr. Clark reported under the head of miscellaneous macadamizing the sum of $9, and explained by saying that a few persons desiring that fine crushed stone be placed in front of their property from the curb to where the macadamizing begins had agreed to pay the cost if the borough would do the work, and thus it was done. Mr. Burtis thought this a bad practice to establish. Mr. Valiant thought if the street committee used good judgment there was no harm to result, although he agreed with Mr. Burtis in a measure. Mr. Clark stated further that the people for whom this work was done were responsible, and while the borough was repairing and macadamizing streets it was an easy matter to do the little extra work and thus have it done right.

Mr. Valiant offered a resolution to the effect that a warrant for $3,000, certificate and interest on account of Watchung avenue improvement, be drawn, and another resolution that such an amount be drawn to pay note of $3,000 on account of the Watchung avenue improvement, which is now due.

Mr. Valiant stated that warrants had been drawn for a sum of $2,900, and there was only $2,500 to the credit of the borough.

Mr. Rogers made a motion that the Council appropriate the sum of $150 for the benefit of the members of Warren Engine Company to assist them in purchasing new uniforms. He said that the members had agreed to raise $1,050, and the motion provided when that sum is raised that the Council donate the $150, making in all $1,200, which purchases uniforms and overcoats.

Mr. Clark and Mr. Swackhamer favored the motion, but the Mayor took exception to it and voted against it. He thought it was a good deal of money to appropriate at present, when an effort is being made to reduce the tax rate. The motion prevailed with one dissenting vote, that of Mayor Smalley.

Mr. Rogers offered a resolution providing for an appropriation of $75 for the extra fire protection during the Fourth of July.

At this time Mr. Clark stated that he had been in touch with many persons affected by the Watchung avenue opening, and he was of the opinion that if the time for paying assessments should be extended to July 1st, that a greater portion of the several amounts would be paid in. He had found the residents willing to abide by the decision of the courts, and he thought the time should be extended one month. He offered a resolution authorizing the collector to accept interest at the rate of 6 per cent. before July 1st, and this was adopted.

Mayor Smalley said that Mr. Kiely, who had received the contract for laying crosswalks in the borough, had not kept his agreement. This matter was referred to the street committee, as was also the matter of having Greenbrook road put in proper condition by the Plainfield Water Supply Company, who had recently torn the street up.

After Mayor Smalley had extended to the Council a cordial invitation to attend the meeting of the Plainfield Advancement Association next Wednesday evening, the Council adjourned.

REPUDIATES MORTGAGE.

DISCIPLES' CHURCH CLAIMS THAT FORMER PASTOR IS RESPONSIBLE.

Present Congregation Declines to Assume the Obligation and as a Result It Will Probably be Carried Into Court.

The First Disciples' church has received service of a notice of foreclosure of mortgage of $2,000, as a sequel to the troubles which were aired through the courts several months ago at the time Pastor B. W. Hand resigned and took part of the congregation with him.

The peculiar legal situation is that the church refuses to recognize the existence of the mortgage, and at a recent meeting was so recorded. The mortgage exists, but whether legally or not must be determined later by the courts, for the church has retained Counselors Codington & Swackhamer to fight the foreclosure.

It is claimed that the pastor and the trustees without any sanction from the congregation put a mortgage on the church in 1895, and the church would have liked it had Hand taken it with him when he went.

ALERTS CASH GONE NOW

OLD VOLUNTEERS TURN THEIR FUNDS TO A GOOD PURPOSE.

A Balance of $340 on Hand—After Giving Mrs. Townley $25 They Gave the Rest to the Hospital and Children's Home.

The Alert Hose Company, one of the oldest volunteer fire companies in the State, whose members were composed of some of the most representative and influential citizens of Plainfield, held a meeting Saturday afternoon at their rooms on West Second street for the purpose of making a final disposition of the funds left in the treasurer's hands at the time the company went out of active service with the introduction of the paid call system. The amount of money on hand was found to be $340. There were various opinions expressed by the members of the company as to the best disposition of the funds.

After a free discussion of the matter it was decided to present Mrs. Townley, wife of Driver William Townley, with $25 as an appreciation of the many favors she had done for the company, and to divide the remainder of the sum between the Muhlenberg Hospital and the Children's Home.

After the meeting Foreman Roger F. Murray offered to treat and it was unanimously agreed to adjourn to Randolph's soda fountain.

PRETTY NEW YORK WEDDING.

Dr. Norman Probasco Would Have Been Best Man but for Illness.

The society notes of New York papers described Thursday a pretty wedding which took place Wednesday afternoon in St. John's Episcopal church, St. John's place, when Miss Georgia Hutton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert John Hutton, was married to James Taylor Hanan. Dr. Norman Probasco, son of Dr. J. B. Probasco, of East Front street, was to have been the best man, but was not sufficiently recovered from his recent attack of typhoid fever to act in that capacity, and his place was taken by Addison J. Hanan, a cousin of the groom.

ONCE PROMINENT IN DEMOCRATIC POLITICS IN MIDDLESEX.

Suddenly Overcome While Working in His Garden and Died Before Physician Could Get to His Side—Engaged in Jewelry Business in New York—Leaves a Widow and Two Children.

John M. Dayton, a well-known citizen of Plainfield, died suddenly at his home, 11 Elm place, early last Saturday. Mr. Dayton was an early riser, and this morning, as had been his custom since the advent of warm weather, he went into his garden to work. This was about 5:30 o'clock. About an hour later he was seen by some members of the family to pitch forward and fall. His wife hastened to his aid and found Mr. Dayton unconscious. J. E. Townsend, the mable dealer of Front street, assisted in removing the unfortunate man to the house and Dr. Endicott, the family physician, was notified before he reached the house Mr. Dayton died. Death was due to apoplexy.

The deceased is survived by a wife and two children—a son and daughter. He was about 53 years of age and a member of Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, and was also an attendant at the First Presbyterian church.

Mr. Dayton formerly resided in Dunellen, and while there was prominent in the Democratic party of Middlesex county.

For several years Mr. Dayton has been a prominent jewelry merchant on John street, New York.

Mr. Dayton's health had been considered good and his death came as a great surprise and shock to his family and friends.

PROVES A GOOD BUYER.

PAYS PRICE, GETS CHANGE, BUT THE CHECK IS N. G.

Somerset Men are Swindled—They Would Like to Meet This Man With a Glib Tongue and False Money Orders.

A clever swindler in the garb of a farmer has appeared near Somerville, who, after purchasing a bill of goods, offers a check for a larger amount than the bill and asks for the change. He first tried his hand in the village store at Neshanic. Then he appeared at Bound Brook as a drummer and went to Slamm's clothing store. He gave a check for $40 and took the clothing and change.

At Amerman & Boger's grocery at Raritan he bought 100 pounds of sugar, gave a check for $18 and took the change. At E. Vanfleet & Son's shoe store he bought shoes for himself, wife and child, the bill amounting to nearly $10. He gave a check for $14 and received the change.

The swindler's checks have always been drawn to the order of Jacob Peters and signed by John T. Cox, a wealthy farmer at Readington, formerly Sheriff of Hunterdon county. Mr. Cox declares them all forgeries.

The fellow is slim, with a light mustache.

Death of a Bartender.

The death of Charles Bracher, aged 30 years, occurred last evening at Dreyer's Hotel, on Somerset street, where he was a bartender. Mr. Bracher came to Plainfield from Brooklyn, and for sometime has suffered from erysipelas which caused his death. Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan was the attending physician and he did all in his power to cause restoration to health, but all efforts were unavailing. Mr. Bracher recently came to this city and is not known except to Mr. Dreyer and his family.

J. M. Schorb, Sr., of East Front street, left today to visit relatives in Jersey City and Brooklyn.

DAILY PRESS TO AID BABIES' CAMP FUND.

Popular Subscriptions to Raise Needed $300.

THE WORK APPEALS TO ALL.

MONEY REQUIRED TO RE-ESTABLISH THE CAMP.

The Daily Press Will Start the Subscriptions With $5, and Will Act as a Medium for Those Who Desire to Contribute to the Fund—Small Amounts Will be as Welcome as Large Ones.

In making the lives of little tots brighter, healthier and happier by the visit to the Baby Camp on Johnston's drive during the heated season for the past few years the City Union of King's Daughters has been doing a noble and worthy work that appeals to the softer and kindlier side of life. Starting in a small way, the camp last year became an institution that at the end of the season convinced those who recognized and appreciated its work, to be an indispensible detail in the philanthropic work of this vicinity, because it reached a class of persons whom no other improvement sought to aid. In particular praise was to care for the poor little babies.

Those who have observed or are acquainted to any extent among the poor families of Plainfield are able to realize what a work like this means. It means that the city nurse made a trip each morning and gathered up little girls, some not yet able to walk, from the poorest homes of the city, where life is a contradiction of what most of us delight to associate with baby days. When the children arrived at the camp there was a wide change from the scene that most of the little guests had become accustomed to. Rugged and wooded land formed a protection on all sides save for the narrow road cut out for the stage to wend its way in and out of the camp. In the center of the cleared spot stood a quaint, substantial structure, a visit to the interior of which showed the handiwork of those who had planned for the purpose of making the stay of the little guests one of extreme pleasure and benefit. In and out of this rustic little resort the juveniles romped, played or slept, as their varying moods suggested, all day. But watching over them with a motherly eye was the city nurse, who fed this hungry little one with rich milk, rocked her neighbor into a slumber, soothed the fretful one with a piece of bread, explained a simple little game for another's amusement, and kept a supervising eye on the whole party. It was a pretty picture and one that could not but touch the heart of the older visitor.

As the sun was setting in the west, and the camp was swept by a cooling, refreshing breeze, the babies were rounded up and bundled into the stage again and returned to their homes, the livelier and the happier for their day's experience. These incidents were repeated day after day all summer, a work which appeals to everyone.

For this summer the City Union of King's Daughters were making plans for a resumption of their baby camp endeavors on a liberal scale, but last spring a forest fire on the mountain crept close to the camp and in a few minutes it was laid in ashes and the work of several seasons totally destroyed.

Some weeks ago, however, the King's Daughters commenced to plan for rebuilding the camp. The matter was gone over and it was found that $500 would be needed to put the camp in as good condition as it was last summer. Then they commenced to figure. They figured and they figured, but do their very best they found themselves short about $300. The season for their good work, if they are to continue, is nearly at hand. Whatever is to be done must be consummated quickly.

As stated, $300 is needed to re-establish the camp in fine shape and make it one of the splendid philanthropic institutions of Plainfield. The Daily Press believes that the people of Plainfield will give liberally and readily for the camp's needs if the matter is brought to their attention in the right manner. The Daily Press is ready to do its share. It will start a popular subscription fund and agree to act as an agent for the City Union of King's Daughters in the enterprise, accepting such amounts as may be offered and turning them over to the proper committee. Each day it will publish the list of donors and the amounts given. No matter how small the sum it will be welcome. Every penny counts towards reaching the aggregate sum needed. It is to be hoped that it will be a popular fund, made up of gifts from people from all classes and conditions, for the work of the baby camp has no drawn lines, except that it aims to help the little ones who have no one else to look after them.

GOLF ENTHUSIASTS WERE OUT IN FORCE.

Charles W. Fisk Leads in Hillside Club Contest.

NEW FACES ON PARK LINKS.

SCORES MADE IN PLAY SATURDAY FOR M'CUTCHEN CUP.

A Bit of Sensation Caused by the Phenomenal Score of a Supposed Novice—Placed at Scratch and Made Highest Net Score While Being Carefully Watched by a Number of Spectators.

The largest attendance of the season was recorded at the course of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club last Saturday. The beautiful weather brought the enthusiasts out in crowds and all day the grounds and clubhouse were filled with people. The special attraction for the day was the final play for the Chapman cup between Charles W. Fisk and Parker W. Mason. The former won by 3 up and 1 to play. This makes the second consecutive time that Mr. Fisk has won this cup and he will be obliged to win it a third time to become the permanent owner of it. The play throughout was close and very exciting.

The usual social features were enjoyed at the clubhouse and in the evening many remained to enjoy the excellent dinner served by Steward Ivamy.

There was the usual large attendance at the Park Golf Club course Saturday and the popular game was played continually throughout the day. In addition to the regulars on the course there were many new faces who appeared for the first time. The greens are now in superfine condition and good scores are becoming the rule under the efficient coaching of Richard Cass, the expert teacher.

Saturday morning there were very few players on the course who were entered in the junior scratch tournament, owing to the small number of entries the tournament has been extended another week.

In the afternoon play for the Mrs. C. W. McCutchen cup was continued with considerable enthusiasm, and some excellent scores were made. F. P. Taylor was low man, with a net score of 94. The scores recorded are as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
F. P. Taylor	97	3	94
F. B. Overton	125	22	103
C. W. Fisk	129	24	105
E. A. Hibbard	137	32	105
T. T. Douglass	132	26	106
Dr. H. Worth	139	30	109
G. W. Faber	111	3	108
W. Conley	114	3	111
Volney Green	139	18	121
J. A. Chisholm	135	12	123
Aubrey Crowe	127	0	127

There was a bit of a sensation at the course Saturday over one of the scores made. A short time ago the handicaps were made and one player received a very good handicap. His score which followed was exceptionally low, lower in fact than a majority thought it should be. As a result the handicaps were rearranged and this player was placed at scratch, and the next time he contested another player accompanied him around the course. The result was his score was the highest net score recorded. In this regard it can be said that the honor of a player is at stake, and if he "fixes" his score it is a gross injustice to other players. If possible this will be avoided.

A tea was given at the clubhouse in the afternoon, at which Mrs. Chas. A. Reed presided, assisted by Mrs. E. T. Douglass. The attendance at the tea was large and greatly enjoyed by all.

WRONG MAN COMPLAINED

TROUBLE BETWEEN ITALIANS CAME TO A FIZZLE IN COURT.

Nager and Mirando Quarreled About Money Matters and Got Into a Fight—Son Acted as the Complainant for Latter.

Sam Nager and Dominick Mirando, Italians, living in the vicinity of Terrill road, became involved in trouble between over money matters May 28th. They finally came to blows and in a few moments a lively scrap was the result. Mirando appears to have got the worst of the bout and he caused Nager's arrest on a charge of assault and battery. Justice Nash issued the warrant and Constable Mattox made the arrest.

The defendant secured the services of Frank Blatz as counsel while William Newcorn represented the State.

Saturday afternoon when the trial began the case fell through from the fact that it was shown that James Mirando had made the complaint and not Dominick, who is the father of James, and it was he who had the fight. Therefore, at the suggestion of counsel for the defendant, the case against the accused was dismissed. It is expected that a warrant will be issued for Nager on the complaint of Dominick Mirando.

Lawyer Newcorn to Orate.

Counselor William Newcorn has accepted an invitation to deliver an oration before Naraticong Tribe of Red Men, No. 31, at Somerville next Friday evening.

THE NEW FIRE HOUSE.

EQUIPPED WITH EVERYTHING FOR QUICK WORK AND COMFORT.

Possession Taken by No. 3 Hose Wagon Thursday—George Feiring and George Mohl, Jr., on Duty in the West End.

At last the change in the fire department is completed and Plainfield is enjoying now far better fire protection than ever before. Possession was taken of the new engine house in the West End Thursday afternoon, and while there are a few details yet to arrange everything is practically in readiness for answering alarms of fire.

The new engine house is one of the most complete for its size to be found anywhere. In the main it is modeled exactly after the present fire headquarters, and there is plenty of room to answer every purpose for which it is intended. The building, which is of brick, and resembles headquarters, is located on West Fourth street, on the line of the trolley, directly opposite Darrow avenue, and it is an imposing building.

The building is so arranged that there is room for the old hook and ladder truck, which will be placed there, and No. 3 hose wagon, formerly Alerts wagon. For the present the truck will not be stationed in the West End. The hose wagon and the gray team, driven by George Feiring, are now located in the new house, and Mr. Feiring, assisted by George Mohl, Jr., will be on duty there.

There is also arrangements for four horses in the house and just as soon as the city buys two more horses they will be placed there for the truck.

The house is provided with a large sleeping room that is both light and cool. Adjacent thereto is the toilet room, and several closets, while a bathroom with wash basins are a convenient addition to the comfort of those on duty. There are also two sliding poles, one at either end of the house in front. A comfortable room is located in front to the right of the bedroom, where a desk will be placed, and used for an office. The telephone is also in this room.

The building inside is finished in hard wood and is so arranged that the best service possible will be obtained. The electrical appliances were completed yesterday.

A drying tower for the hose is a valuable addition and this is well arranged at one side. The house is heated by steam and the most approved system is used. In the bathroom there is a tank where water can be heated by gas in the summer time. The surroundings about the house are pleasant and roomy, and many improvements have been made in the grounds.

Now that the change has gone into effect the new call system is in force, and the rearranged box calls will now be used.

Not to Push Street Work This Month.

After the Borough Council meeting Friday evening there was a short meeting of the street committee, when it was decided that, owing to the unperfected plans for continuing the work, it was best to take a rest on the street work for a month. The work will be taken up again in July and pushed rapidly along the various lines mapped out.

PASTOR SHOTT WANTS CHURCH MEN TO HELP

If Scotch Plains is to be Reformed He Must Have Aid.

DOES NOT PROPOSE TO QUIT.

SAYS THAT HE IS RECEIVING MUCH ENCOURAGEMENT NOW.

He Has Been Appealed To To Go Slow, But Declares That He Will Not Do So—Is Afraid Another Boy May be swallowed Up b Hell or Another Girl Lost—Appeal for Help.

Scotch Plains, June 5.—Rev. G. M. Shott, pastor of the Baptist church, continued his sermons yesterday concerning the morality of the town and his efforts to raise its standard. Though the day was warm and not inducive to church going except to the old worshippers, the edifice was well filled at both the morning and evening services.

The sermon in general was an appeal to the Christian people of the town to live their lives so as to be models to their weaker brethren and sisters. "I plead earnestly and fervently from the pulpit Sunday last for volunteers for this work," said the minister, "and they have been responding slowly ever since by word, letters, handshakes and offers of financial aid. Sometimes the response would be accompanied by a moistened eye. If you are going to stand by me now is the time for your prayers and support. The church should be first in your lives ever before the home and above all before the social life. Some have so many engagements that when a spirit of revival starts in a church they have to look over their notes and generally say: 'Pastor, I have another engagement for that evening.' Let not your social life entangle your Christian career. I have been approached by some and told that this was hardly the time and to wait. But I say I am a soldier under orders and will obey.

"What do you want to wait for? For another boy to be swallowed up in Hell or another girl lost? Now is the time to enlist! Others say property has decreased 10 per cent. in valuation since I began my crusade. I suggest to those people, if they are good business men, to buy up some of the property in town which is decreasing so rapidly. It will rise again, for property always rises with the moral standard of a community and not by the number of saloons, etc., you have.

"I feel sorry for this old church and its membership because of the notority some say this matter has given the town, and the pastor of the church is preaching the Gospel."

Mr. Shott has had all the financial aid offered him that will be necessary to carry on the work which he has started and will push to the end.

An amusing side of the notoriety part of the case came to light Saturday when Dr. Lambert, of Glenside Park, came before Judge Clark and asked to have Charles N. Flanders bound over to keep the peace. The doctor, who is a New York specialist, has until recently lived in Mrs. Flanders' cottage on the mountains. A short time ago he concluded to make a change and go to Glenside Park to live. In severing the relation of landlord and tenant trouble was started and the doctor claims Mr. Flanders became very much excited and threatened to do him harm. Judge Clark advised the doctor to think over the matter before taking any further steps, and also explained to the doctor that it is still safe for any one on the streets.

KILLED ON THE TRACK.

Peter Saums' Father Lost His Life by Not Hearing the Warning Whistle.

Somerville, June 5.—John Saums, aged sixty years, father of Peter Saums, of North Plainfield, was instantly killed at the Hamilton street crossing of the Central Railroad Saturday afternoon. He was walking the track, and on being deaf was unable to hear the whistle of the engine that was approaching him from the west drawing a westbound freight. He was hurled forty feet. His skull was fractured and his arm and leg were broken. Engineer W. B. Smith stopped his train so suddenly that it caused a car to leave the track, crashing into a signal tower and standpipe near the station, demolishing them and blocking the westbound track for some time.

A Good Story Teller.

There will be an entertainment at the Park Clubhouse, Thursday evening, at 8:15 o'clock. Among the entertainers will be Lieutenant Franklyn Hart, of the Naval Reserve. Mr. Hart is a good story teller and a singer as well. The committee in charge of the affair is composed of Elston M. French, Edward T. Wilson and Henry D. Hibbard.

—7 p. m. is the hour that Sherwin's shoe store closes (Saturday's excepted.) Cool and easy summer oxford ties, and shoes at bargain prices.

CENTRAL HELLOES IN A MODEL NEW HOME.

Fine Headquarters for N. Y. and N. J. Telephone Company.

EVERY ADVANTAGE AT HAND

PLEASANT PLACE FOR OPERATORS TO WORK IN.

Every Detail of the New Office is of the Latest Pattern, and Especially Adapted for Rapid and Satisfactory Service to the 500 Local Subscribers—Manager Runyon Deserves Credit for His Work.

Now that the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company has moved their "central" office from North avenue to their new building on Park avenue, near Fourth street, something regarding the change and improvements is in order. It will be remembered that the telephone company have for some time past been desirous of securing permanent quarters and placing their wires underground. The Common Council gave the company the right to put wires underground, and this work has been done in the central part of the city in a manner that has surprised the biggest crank on "tearing up streets." The work was done in such a way that one can scarcely tell today that the streets were torn up.

In the meantime the company purchased the building on Park avenue they now occupy. Arrangements were made under the personal supervision of Manager Charles W. Runyon to have a building fitted up in the most approved method and up-to-date style. The work was started several months ago and is now about completed, with the exception of a few details. In arranging the new office plenty of room was left for an increase in business, which necessitated the present change. The building is one-story with a large and commodious basement. The first floor is very deep and of ample width. It is also light and airy.

In the front part of the first floor on the left is the manager's office fitted in a convenient and modern style. On Mr. Runyon's desk is one of the latest style telephone that can be shifted to suit the user. While sitting at his desk he can call any operator in the office or the chief operator by simply raising a lever and pushing a button. In this office is one of the assistants, Miss Becker, who assists both the chief operator, Miss Etta Yaeger, or the manager. On the right of the entrance are located two booths for public use. These are also of the most approved pattern. They differ from the others used in that there is more room inside. The space used for the telephone is very small, thus making more room and giving greater convenience to the user.

An iron fence divides the space between the booths and the other part of the first floor. Directly on the other side of this fence is located the four switch boards, including the board for the selective system. At these boards are Miss Lou Croxson, Miss Nettie Chandler, Miss Edith Huribut and Anna Higgins, the four operators, who attend to the numerous calls that come in. These boards are up-to-date in every respect, and every convenience is provided for the operator. Directly back of the operators is a desk where the chief operator is located. She has general supervision over the operators and attends to all questions of business that comes in her department. During the night after 9 o'clock only one operator is employed, and that is Thomas Muir.

In the centre of the first floor is located the battery room, which is arranged according to the most approved plans known. There is also provided a place for storing supplies, and another place for testing telephones, while a very important part of the office is the testing board, which is connected with every telephone that is in use.

The company very kindly appropriated in their new building a good portion of the first floor to be used as a room for the women employed. This room is fitted up with every convenience. Easy chairs, a table and toilet arrangements are provided, while a gas stove is to be a valuable adjunct, so that the women can prepare various articles for lunch when necessary. The building throughout is furnished with the best of furniture and it presents a thorough business-like appearance.

Manager Runyon deserves great credit for the able and efficient manner in which he has attended to the business of the company and at the same time given Plainfield what is considered an exchange second to none in the State, and the business of the company has certainly increased under his direction to the satisfaction of his superiors. Mr. Runyon is also ably assisted by Herbert Chamberlain, Henry Root and several other men who serve as inspectors, linemen, etc.

Mrs. Harned, of Craig place, has returned from a visit with Brooklyn friends.

THROUGH TRAINS TO RUN TO NEWARK

Central Yields to Request of Newark Business Men.

IT WILL BE EXPERIMENTAL.

PASSENGER AGENT BALDWIN WRITES TO BOARD OF TRADE.

The Service Will Begin June 25th—Trains Will Leave Plainfield at 10:30 a. m. and 1:30 p. m Returning From Newark at 4:30 and 5:30 p. m.—Newark Business Men are Jubilant Over the Change.

Newark, June 3.—The Central Railroad has yielded to the demand from Newark for a through train service between this city and Plainfield. It will put on such through trains, beginning June 25th, and has signified its intention to do so by a letter to the Board of Trade.

General Passenger Agent Baldwin says that the trains will be put on experimentally. This is entirely satisfactory to the merchants of this city that have been moving in the matter.

The letter sent by Mr. Baldwin to the committee on commercial affairs of the Board, which is in answer to the request of the committee, is as follows:

"In answer to yours of May 19th ultimo I would say careful consideration in connection with the issuance of our next train schedule will be given to the request of the Newark Board of Trade for the establishment of a continuous passenger train starting from Plainfield between 10:30 a. m. and 1:30 p. m., and a corresponding train returning from Newark between 4:30 p. m. and 5:30 p. m.

"It is not out of place to add that this company's policy has always had in view the adjusting of its passenger train service so as to come nearest to meeting the reasonable requirements of its patrons in keeping with which it some years ago established a service of the same character as you now solicit, which was not a success and it therefore became necessary to so change the time that an excellent service was accomplished by transferring at Elizabethport, which service is still in force.

"Our disposition, however, is to again establish the continuous service experimentally, which will become effective from June 25th, 1899."

This letter is signed by H. P. Baldwin, general passenger agent.

THE BRAKEMEM PROTEST

DISSATISFIED BECAUSE VANLIEW IS BAGGAGEMASTER.

Old Trainmen Complaining Because He was Not in Line for Promotion—Superintendent Won't Treat With Committee.

A committee appointed by the dissatisfied Jersey Central Railroad men went to the station at Communipaw, Jersey City, Friday to have an interview with Superintendent Freck. The committee was not successful. A subordinate informed the committee that Mr. Freck would not meet any committee, but would deal with the men individually. It is said that the committee will try to see President Maxwell next Monday.

It is understood among the railroad men in this city that one of the things that is contributing to the dissatisfaction among the employes of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, especially those engaged in the passenger train service, is the action taken by the new officials of the company in relation to Frederick VanLiew, of LaGrande avenue, this city.

For several years past Mr. VanLiew has been stationmaster at Communipaw, but under the new regime he was recently removed from that place. Subsequently he was put to work again, but as a baggagemaster. Inasmuch as VanLiew was not in line for promotion in train service, not having acted as a brakeman, the brakemen immediately charged that it was an injustice to make him a baggageman over their heads.

It is understood that the case was called to the attention of the brakeman's organization, and the union has taken up the matter in the hope of preventing a like occurrence in the future.

CHEAPER FOR COUNTY TO CARE FOR INSANE.

It Costs County $42,000 a Year as Now Arranged.

THERE ARE 247 DEPENDENTS

A FEW STATISTICS THAT ARE OF INSTRUCTIVE INTEREST.

It is Thought That the County Would Save at Least $10,000 to Build and Maintain Its Own Asylum for Care of Insane—It is Seldom That Relatives Contribute to the Support of Insane Persons.

The question of the proper care for the county's insane is a subject which, it would seem, will stand a good deal of discussion. The increase in the number of insane constitutes one of the social problems of the age which threatens to assume alarming proportions, and which seems at present almost unsolvable. A few statistics on the subject will prove of interest.

The number of insane patients sent to the asylum at Trenton during the fiscal year of 1857-8 was 23; in 1860-1 it was 22; in 1864-5, 25; in 1870-1, 49; in 1875-6, 49; in 1880-1, 144; in 1885-6, 155; in 1890-1, 155; in 1895-6, 255. The number now in the asylum is about 240.

The appropriation for their maintenance for the fiscal year of 1899-1900 is $42,000. It is thought that the county could save at least $10 000 a year of this expense by building an asylum of its own and maintaining its insane at home.

Elizabeth has about half the population of Union county, but considerably more than one-half the insane patients from the county come from Elizabeth.

The deaths and discharges together of Union county patients number less than twenty a year on an average. Occasionally a patient is discharged as cured and remains well; but oftener he is again committed to the asylum after a time in much the same condition as when he first entered it. In nineteen cases out of twenty, once a man is admitted he becomes a permanent resident of Morris Plains, and leaves there only in a coffin. Some of the patients seem to be almost absolutely forgotten by all their kith and kin. They are as dead to the world as if in their graves.

In very few cases (fewer than 20 of the 240) is the cost of their maintenance paid for other than by the county. A man of property and income is responsible for the care and maintenance of a son or daughter, but the same man can not be compelled to pay for the maintenance of a brother. So it happens that in nearly all cases there is no one who is able to pay that can be compelled to pay. Practically, then, the public supports all insane people. County Collector Wood says the relatives of each person committed are diligently looked up, and if it is possible to collect any money toward the inmate's support it is collected. If we had a county asylum where patients would be visited oftener by relatives and seen oftener by neighbors and acquaintances, it might result in somewhat more money being collected through unknown relationships coming to light, but it would seem that no great increase is to be hoped for.

BAD FALL FROM BICYCLE.

C. E. Hepburn's Wheel Came in Contact With a Stone With Serious Results.

Charles E. Hepburn, the druggist, was severely injured last Friday while on his way home. He was riding his wheel on East Second street and when nearly opposite Thompson's old livery establishment took a header by reason of coming in contact with a good-sized hard-head stone which lay in the street. The fall was so severe that for a moment Mr. Hepburn was completely dazed, and when he was picked up by Fireman H. C. Bush, who noticed the mishap from fire headquarters, he was found to be injured so severely as to be unable to walk. He was assisted to his home at 410 East Second street by C. V. D. Corle, and Dr. Jenkins, the family physician, summoned.

The doctor found Mr. Hepburn suffering from a severe cut on the right leg near the knee. His patient also complained of internal injuries. It is not believed, however, that the accident will prove to be anything but a severe shakeup, from which the unfortunate man will recover in a few days.

Stone for a New Church.

NEW HOME PLANNED FOR HOPE CHAPEL.

Parent Society Decide to Expend $7,000 for the Edifice.

$5,000 WAS BEQUEATHED.

NEW STRUCTURE TO BE BUILT NEAR THE OLD ONE.

Committee Appointed Last Week With Power to Go Ahead and Erect the New Edifice—It Will be Necessary to Raise Only $2,000 From Private Sources—They Expect to Build This Summer.

At a congregational meeting held at the Crescent Avenue church last week ninja a committee, composed of Isaac W. Rushmore, Robert H. Cook, H. C. Squires, John Bushnell and S. A. Cahoone, were given the power to go ahead and erect a new church edifice for the worshippers at Hope chapel on the property purchased some time ago from E. M. French & Co.

It has not yet been decided whether the building will be of frame or brick, there being a division of opinion. The total cost of the structure will be about $7,000, and it will be 45 x 60 in dimensions. It is intended to make the seating capacity of the new church about three hundred, and have it arranged so that it will join the present building and if necessary the buildings can be thrown in one, thus making a seating capacity of nearly eight hundred.

There is a frontage of 150 feet on Fourth street, and it is the intention as the present structure will wear out and become unfit for use, to tear that part down and replace it by new additions.

Bids were received some time ago for erecting the new church, but the committee has not yet awarded any of the work. This will be done at an early date, and the work of building will be started if possible so the structure will be completed before cold weather sets in.

It will be remembered that the sum of $5,000 was bequeathed to the trustees of Hope chapel by the late Mrs. VanDeventer, and this sum will pay for the largest part of the work, and the balance about $2,000 can easily be raised to complete the building.

The growth at this chapel has been phenomenal. Starting eleven years ago with but a handful of workers, it is today one of the most prosperous and influential church homes in the city. Under the pastorate of Rev. G. Kennedy Newell the members have attained a high standard of proficiency in Christian work. The need of a new and more modern church home has been apparent for a long time, and the members are now rejoicing to know that their hopes are to be realized.

BY THE SAD SEA WAVES.

SEASHORE PEOPLE PREPARING FOR A BUSY SEASON.

Property Owners are Able to Get High Rents This Season—Problem of Band Concerts in Asbury Park.

Asbury Park hotel proprietors have more inquiries at this season of the year than have ever been known before. Real estate agents are kept on the move every day showing and renting cottages. Property owners have been able to get more rent for their cottages this year than has been the custom. Unfortunately for those who own small stores the demand for this class of property this year is comparatively weak. This can be accounted for by the fact that the number of such stores have increased so rapidly of late that the supply far exceeds the demand.

While Asbury Park and Ocean Grove will enjoy an era of prosperity, the same is true at Allenhurst, Deal, Bradley Beach, Avon, Belmar and other adjacent resorts. The large number of new cottages erected at Allenhurst within the last year and the extensive improvements made to Allenhurst Inn, represent an expenditure of at least $200,000. The Spear property, which has but recently come into the possession of the Coast Land and Improvement Company, has been transformed into a colony by itself, with new buildings going up and a grand exhibition of landscape architecture. At Deal the same activity is manifest. New cottages are being built on every side.

The City Council is just now wrestling with the question of getting a band to give concerts in the Asbury and Fifth avenue pavilions alternately during the season. So many applications have been received that the music committee is in a quandary to know which band to recommend. "Founder" Bradley has drawn the line on Italian bands.

Prof. Wightman's Paper Appreciated.

The paper on "Recent Advances in Teaching," prepared and presented by Superintendent H. J. Wightman, of the borough, at the meeting of the Somerset County Teachers' Association held at Raritan a few days ago was of such interest that it was unanimously decided to have the same presented at the next county institute.

FALL CAMPAIGN TO HAVE EARLY OPENING.

New Jersey Politics Assuming a Lively Form Now.

FIGHTS IN ALL SECTIONS.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE A MUCH SOUGHT AFTER PLUM.

A Trenton Correspondent Thinks There Are Troublous Times for Republicans at Several Points—Democrats See a Chance to Win the Senate—Elections Promise to be the Most Exciting Held.

Although this is what is called an off year in New Jersey politics, yet the campaign for the fall elections, which has already begun, promises to be one of the most exciting, in many of the counties, that has ever occurred. The fervor of the politicians in the counties where State Senators are to be elected is at a high pitch, indeed. And it is scarcely less in those counties where sheriffs and other officers will be chosen. Essex, Monmouth and Somerset are ablaze with the interest which is being manifested, and Salem and Gloucester, it seems, are not calm by any means. Camden looks all serene, because, being a strong Republican county and Senator Johnson being slated for a reelection, there is no reason for a quarrel in the organization of the dominant party. That organization is nearly as perfect as can be; so much so, that it has made Camden the safest Republican county of the State, not even excepting Essex, which once in a while is considered doubtful.

The Sheriff's office in most of the counties is more sought after than that of Senator or Assemblyman, or, in fact, any other in the gift of the people, because its emoluments are so large and its duties so light. The average office-seeker would rather be a Sheriff than anything else. This year Sheriffs will be elected in all of the counties with the exception of Passaic, Somerset, Bergen and Cape May. In Essex and Hudson the remuneration attached to the office is said to be nearly as large as the salary of the President of the United States. Of course, it is only natural to expect that the candidates for this fat berth are numerous in each of the eighteen counties, and that there will be a very hot fight in most of them between the rival political parties. There are now Democratic Sheriffs in the counties of Passaic, Somerset, Bergen, Hudson, Warren, Hunterdon, Monmouth, Sussex and Middlesex, all the others being Republican. The Democrats are reasonably sure of holding their own, and perhaps they may make gains in Salem and one or two other close counties.

Should the Democrats get in good fighting trim and make an effort, such as their party used to do in former years, they might succeed in electing a sufficient number of Senators to control the next Senate. With old-time vim and enthusiasm, backed by a recourse to practical politics, they could be successful in the counties of Monmouth, Somerset and Salem. It is not so long since these counties showed a Democratic tendency. In fact, Monmouth county is normally Democratic, and Salem and Somerset have had as many Democratic as Republican officials within the last quarter of a century.

Republican difficulty is Democratic opportunity. In Somerset the Republican factions are yet at war, and there is no sign of an armistice. It looks as if the Reed faction has been successful in the contest over the postmastership of Somerville. The report is that while the Thompson faction has apparently yielded with grace to the inevitable, yet a sting remains, and it will be felt for some time to come. In the selection of a candidate for the State Senate Mr. Thompson is likely to exert more influence than he did in the postmastership contest. Should the factions keep their wrangling then the much-desired opportunity will arise for the Democrats to prepare for a battle, which, if properly managed, will result in a victory for their ticket.

Saw the Queen.

Mrs. Thos. W. Morrison, of Plainfield, formerly of this city, in writing to a friend in this city from London, says that she had an excellent opportunity to see Queen Victoria when driving through Hyde Park. The Queen at the time was within twelve feet of Mrs. Morrison, and she says that Her Majesty looked very well indeed for one who is eighty years old. There was no crowd or excitement incident to the Queen's appearance, which Mrs. Morrison thinks was in strange contrast with what would have occurred in this country were the President's wife to go out driving in a public park.—New Brunswick Home News.

Building the Stand Pipes.

OLD MRS. HART GETS PART OF HER MONEY.

A Long Disputed Case Has Been Settled.

BEEN IN CHANCERY COURT.

JUSTICE HART RETAINS POSSESSION OF $4,000.

Mrs. Hart Formerly Lived at Scotch Plains and It Was Alleged That Her Westfield Nephew Obtained Possession of Her Property by Undue Influence and Improper Compensation.

Westfield, June 3.—After pending in the State Courts for the past three years, the action of Sarah Ann Hart, eighty years of age, formerly a resident of Scotch Plains, against Justice Levi Hart and wife, of Westfield, to compel the return of property valued at about $10,000 on the charge of using undue influence in securing it without proper compensation, has been settled. The case was heard last before Vice Chancellor Reed.

Three years ago the aged Mrs. Hart was living in Scotch Plains with a demented son. Justice Hart was her nephew and he induced his aunt to bring her son to Westfield and live with his family. After she had been there a short time Mrs. Hart deeded all of her property over to Hart and his wife, in consideration of the agreement that she and her son should always have a home with them. Soon after this the aged woman's brother at Bound Brook heard of the proceedings and induced his sister to leave her nephew and come and live with him. Subsequently suit was brought against Justice Hart to have the property reconveyed to his aunt, it being alleged that undue influence and improper compensation had been used to secure control of it.

Justice Hart has been fighting the case bitterly, but within the last few days the case has been settled satisfactorily to the parties concerned. The terms of settlement required Justice Hart to return to his aunt property to the value of $8,100, and the balance of her previous possessions, amounting to about $4,000, is to be retained by him. Mrs. Hart will be cared for by other relatives in the future.

MET ON RARITAN BANKS.

PLAINFIELD RED MEN VISITED NEW BRUNSWICK BRAVES.

Delegations From Both Local Tribes Journeyed on a Stage—Speeches and a Good Time Generally Enjoyed.

A large delegation of Red Men visited New Brunswick last Friday, where they were royally entertained by Sbanda Tribe, No. 180. Two stages and a private carriage were used to carry about 30 members of Paughcaughnaughsinque Tribe, No. 193, and an equal number of Miantonomoh Tribe, No. 118, while quite a number went by wheel.

Entertaining speeches were delivered by Great Senior Sagamore Newcorn, Deputy Great Sachem Westphal, Sachem Houseman and Justice W. Nash, of Plainfield. A humorous recitation by John Carney, of Tribe No. 193, convulsed the Red Men and led to a renewal of the "pipe of peace." Music and a substantial collation followed. The Plainfield Red Men report a pleasant evening.

HORSE'S PREDICAMENT.

Fell Through a Platform and Was Astride a Beam When Found.

One day last week one horse of a valuable team owned by John Morton, the ice dealer, met with an accident that nearly caused the loss of its life. Sometime before 6 o'clock in the morning the animal got out of its stall and backed out on a platform used as a place to wash wagons. The heavy weight of the animal caused a break in the platform, and the animal fell through astride of some beams. He remained in that position until 4 o'clock, when he was discovered by the men when he went to feed the horses. Mr. Morton was called and together with the aid of a veterinary surgeon the horse was extricated from his position. After several hours' hard work the horse was put in a fair way to recovery. This team is a very valuable one, as Mr. Morton paid $400 for the two horses.

To Observe First Anniversary.

SENATOR KEAN FOR THE OLD TICKET.

Believes McKinley and Hobart Are Winners in 1900.

SAYS JERSEY IS FOR G. O. P.

THINKS HIS PARTY IS IN FINE FIGHTING TRIM.

The Senator Says Its Leaders are in Harmony and Will go Into the Battle Next Year With a Solid Front and Every Prospect of Success—Names Delegates at Large to National Success.

In an interview given out recently Senator John Kean is quoted as follows:

"You may quote me, if you wish, as saying that there is a practically unanimous sentiment in the Republican party in this State in favor of the renomination of McKinley and Hobart. The State convention, I believe, will send a solid delegation for their support. Every Republican should be proud of the record President McKinley has made, while Mr. Hobart has shown consummate tact and ability as the presiding officer of the Senate, and is the most popular vice-president we have ever had. It was because of his earnest, conscientious discharge of public duties that Mr. Hobart's health was impaired, but I hear that he is rapidly regaining strength and vigor, and I expect to see him again with Major McKinley heading the Republican ticket. That cannot help but be a winning ticket in 1900."

"How about New Jersey? Can the State be relied upon for a Republican majority next year?" Senator Kean was asked.

"With McKinley and Hobart, without doubt. In 1896 we carried the State by 87,092 plurality. That, of course, was a tremendous landslide, due largely to the Democratic slump on the silver issue. New Jersey is a sound money State, and so long as our friends the enemy continue to incorporate 16 to 1 in their platform there will be no danger of the State going Democratic at a National election. Mr. Hobart will, of course, add strength to the ticket, and New Jersey can be depended upon to roll up a handsome Republican majority.

"The Republican party in New Jersey was never in better fighting trim than it is at present. It has control of the State government and a large majority of the county offices, and is not rent with discord or wrangling with factional fights, as is the Democracy. Its leaders are in harmony, and it will go into the battle in 1900 with a solid front and with every prospect of success. The delegates-at-large to the Republican National convention will be United States Senator Sewell, United States Senator Kean, Franklin Murphy, chairman of the State Committee, and Barker Gummere, of Trenton. General Sewell will be chairman of the delegation."

TO CONTINUE THEIR MEETINGS.

Hot Weather Not Allowed to Interfere With Endeavor Work.

The monthly business meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Park Avenue Baptist church was held Thursday at the home of Miss Myra Runyon, of Lafayette place.

The usual reports were read and routine business transacted. After the business had been finished a social hour was enjoyed. Among other items of business brought up was the subject of discontinuing the Friday evening prayer meetings during the summer.

All through the hot months the attendance at these meetings is slim, and some of the members have thought it would be a good thing to omit them. That was not the opinion of the majority at the meeting, however, and it was decided to continue them as usual. The monthly business meetings will not be held, but will be postponed until September 7th.

Epworth League Officers.

The annual business meeting of the Epworth League of the First M. E. church was held Friday night. Officers for the coming year were elected as follows: President, Mrs. Harry Gee; first vice-president, Miss Jennie Davis; second vice-president, Mrs. David Dunavan; third vice-president, James A. Stafford; fourth vice-president, Miss Louella Crowther; secretary, Charles W. Sprague; treasurer, Albert Steiner.

Leased His Cottage.

A LICENSED SALOON FOR WEST END.

Council Grants the App ication of Michael Walsh.

THREE NEGATIVE VOTERS.

THE LICENSE HAS BEEN STRONGLY OPPOSED FOR YEARS.

Reputable Residents Say That It Will Be Better for the Community—Council Has no Authority to Extend Time for Payment of Martin Act Back Taxes —Trouble Over Assessments on Property.

Although the regular June meeting of the Common Council was not a long one there were several important matters considered and decided. All the members were present. One of the most important matters taken up was the license application of Michael Walsh to open a saloon on Grant avenue, where Michael Watson has been located. The action that induced this was on the part of a number of citizens, head by George O. Stevens, James Davis, Wm. Gray, Jacob Case and others, in which they stated that they had no personal interest, but they thought it would lessen the illegal sale of liquor in the West End.

On the strength of this petition, Mr Smith called up the application, and moved that it be granted. On the vote Messrs. Buckle, Coriell, Hetfield, Homan, Liefke, Smith and Tolles were in the affirmative, while Messrs. Andrews, Barrows, VanElsterweden and Mellick voted in the negative.

The fight for a saloon legally licensed in that part of town has been going on for a long time, and the granting of it breaks the strong opposition made for years.

The Council also granted a liquor license to Major Coleman for the Hotel Hunterston. Mr. Andrews voted against the application for a liquor license, but voted for the inn and tavern license.

Mr. Mellick reported on the petition of R. O. Howell and others asking for an extension of time for the payment of assessments under the Martin Act, and stated that he had learned that such power does not lay with the Council. He said that such action could only be taken by the Legislature, and inasmuch as the city could not sell within six months after the enforcement of the act, he thought that was sufficient time. He moved that a copy of his report be sent to the petitioners. Mr. Mellick also reported that he had conferred with Corporation Counsel Marsh regarding the several amounts and names on the list of delinquents affected by the Martin Act, and some few errors in amounts had been discovered. He stated that Mr. Marsh was carefully going over the list and would have it perfectly correct.

Mr. Coriell in a resolution secured three new fire hydrants for the West End of the city, one at South Second street and Clinton avenue, another one near Astor place, and the third on West Seventh street. This resolution provides for the extension of water mains which, When completed, will give the city two additional hydrants granted by a former Council. These hydrants could not be located on account of the mains not being extended.

L. C. Smith, of Newark, a living decendant of the Laing family, asked the Council to change the name of Lane avenue to Laing avenue. The matter was referred to the proper committee.

Building Inspector Doane reported that during the past month seventeen building permits had been granted. A petition was received from Chas. H. Mand, in which he asked the Council to apply his salary $317.40, as assessor, toward his own taxes. The matter was referred to the proper committee.

Winfield S. Angleman, as counsel for owners of property located on Sherman avenue, West Fifth street and St. Mary's avenue, asked that the Council adjust the differences that seem to the owners apparent as regards the assessments made by the city. In one case it appears that the property has been assessed twice, and that one assessment had been paid. In the other cases there seems to be differences which the owners would like to have adjusted. The matter was referred to the committee on assessment and collection of taxes.

A petition was received from Mrs. Marguerite W. Swaim, of West Front street, in which she asked the Council for $100 damages the result of a break in a gas main by one of Patsy Christmas's men when a storm sewer was being located through Plainfield avenue and across Front street. She claimed that the escaping gas had ruined some valuable flowers, including a century plant, that it had made her and members of the family ill, and she thought that she was entitled to $100 and that the city should pay it. The matter was referred to the committee on streets and sewers.

At the request of the committee from Miantonomoh Tribe, I. O. R. M., asking Council to appoint a committee of three to meet with the general committee that meets this evening to arrange for a Fourth of July celebration, President Andrews appointed J. F. Buckle, Henry Leifke and Frank Smith. Following this request was one from the Mayor asking the Council to appoint a committee of three to meet with the Plainfield Sanitary Company to discuss matters of collecting garbage, etc. President Andrews appointed R. I. Tolles, Walter L. Hetfield and J. P. Homan as a committee.

Mayor Rockfellow appointed as special patrolmen Chas. Flynn and Chas. McCarthy and the appointments were confirmed by the Council.

A remonstrance was received from residents of Orchard place against the erection of another icehouse on the site of the one recently destroyed by fire, which was owned by Brady Bros., and they asked the Council to cause the house to be erected at a greater distance from other houses than they decided to allow the icehouse to be erected. This matter was referred to the fire and building committee.

After the bills presented were audited and ordered paid the Council adjourned.

WRONG KIND OF MUSIC.

FORMER MAYOR SAUNDERS BERATED PIANO MAN.

The Latter was Wesley Brokaw, and Now He Accuses Mr. Saunders of Assaulting Him Last Saturday Night.

Former Mayor Wm. L. Saunders, of Washington Park, was served with a warrant last Monday for his arrest on a charge of assault and battery, preferred by Wesley B. Brokaw, the piano and music dealer on East Front street. The warrant was issued by Justice Nash, and the defendant will be required to appear and answer the charge.

Brokaw alleges that former Mayor Saunders entered his place of business Saturday night and, after having a wordy contest about the rental of a piano, struck him in the face and knocked his hat to the floor. Besides this the scrap caused a commotion and attracted a large number of sightseers, much to the embarrassment of the piano dealer.

Abusive language is also cited in the complaint. Mr. Brokaw has retained Lawyer I. L. Brady to defend his interests.

Former Mayor Saunders' version of the affair is as follows:

"I made no assault on Mr. Brokaw. I simply told him in very plain English what I thought of him. He offers to rent pianos to the people of this town, and he made an agreement to deliver one at my barn last Saturday evening, between 4 and 5 o'clock, to be used in an entertainment given by the little children of the neighborhood. I incidentally discovered at a late hour that he intended to go back on his agreement without notifying us in time to get a piano elsewhere. I went to his store and he admitted that he did not intend to keep his agreement, unless I paid him more money than agreed, whereupon I shook my finger in his face and denounced him as unfit to do business among honest people."

VOLUNTEERS IN MISSION WORK.

An Interesting Line of Discussion at the Y. M. C. A.

J. W. Gavett presided at the meeting of the Volunteer League held at the Y. M. C. A. last Monday. Interesting accounts were given by William D. Murray regarding the international convention recently held at Grand Rapids, Mich. A letter was received from E. B. Taylor, of Coal Run, O., chairman of the international convention, thanking the local association for the interest manifested in the work. Philip S. Suffern also read a paper on "Missionary Work in China," which was highly interesting. The lesson was from the first thirteen chapters of the Acts. The Bible lesson for the next meeting will be "Jonah, the Missionary." It is expected that Theophilus Bond will be present and read a paper on "Europe in Turkey."

CALL MEN DRILLED.

Firemen Given a Chance to Show What They Can Do.

The firemen from headquarters took the truck for a drill last Monday. The truck was drawn up to Berckman street to the Lincoln School, where the sixty-five foot extension ladder was raised, and under the direction of Acting Chief Jennings call men were sent to the extreme topmost rung. The drill was one of the most successful ones ever held. It is expected that these drills will be held at frequent intervals during the summer.

Dog Recovered Lost Pocketbook.

Basking Ridge, June 6.—Garret S. Voorhees, who lives near this place, last week lost a pocketbook which contained $27 in bills, some keys and important papers. Mr. Voorhees offered a reward of $5 for the recovery of the property. Saturday night Fred A. Nelson, proprietor of the Washington House, was sitting out on his front porch when Prince, his little fox terrier, came and laid a pocketbook at his feet. Nelson found the pocketbook was the one lost by Voorhees.

FRITZ EXONERATED BY A JURY TRIAL.

Examination Was an Exciting One Tuesday Morning.

RACY EVIDENCE OFFERED.

TESTIMONY TOOK UP ALL THE MORNING.

Coroner DeMott and the Horse Dealer Had Some Excited Words About a Debt But the Jury Decided That There Was No Cause for Action in the Charge of Profanity—The Names of the Jurymen

A trial of more than passing note was started last Tuesday before Recorder Long, of the borough, wherein Henry DeMott, a borough undertaker, and Adam Fritz, a well-known horse dealer, are contesting rights over alleged profanity, which is alleged to have been uttered last Wednesday in the vicinity of Mr. DeMott's place on Somerset street.

The case is being tried before the Recorder and a jury of twelve men, who are Edward Mundy, Chas. Emmons, Theo. Stites, John Cooper, Geo. Conover, Louis Smalley, Wm. White, Louis Wyckoff, N. W. Conklin, Edward Wyckoff, P. McKeough and O. W. Ulrick. The latter is a resident of this city, but all agreed that he could serve as a juror.

The plaintiff was represented by Lawyer J. P. D. Kirch, while William DeMeza acted in a similar capacity for the defendant. The trial was held in the borough court room, where a large crowd assembled. The intense heat did not seem to affect those present who were very anxious to hear the case.

The facts of the case seem to be that the undertaker owes Fritz $9 balance for a horse sold him. According to the testimony Fritz had called about fifty time and tried to get this $9, Last week Wednesday he called for that purpose, and the undertaker re*marked that he did not have the* money, but might raise it before night. The word led to another, and Mr. DeMott claimed that Mr. Fritz repeatedly cussed and applied profane epithets to him, and after he left the premises he rode up and down and shaking his fist and threatening to strike him. Mr. DeMott was the first witness called and then followed Peter Hansen, a young man employed by Mr. DeMott, and several others, all of whom testified that Mr. Fritz did swear at Mr. DeMott.

On the other hand Mr. Fritz had a number of witnesses to prove that Mr. DeMott was the aggressor, that he provoked the trouble and followed Mr. Fritz from the place into the street and in a measure made him angry.

During the trial there were many amusing incidents, and the cuss words alleged to have been uttered were repeatedly called out in the endeavors of the lawyers to learn exactly what was said.

At times affairs became exciting and exclamations of "Shut up," and "Mind your business," were frequently heard from each lawyer, all of which kept the crowd in good humor so that they failed to mind the heat.

The case was given to the jury about 11:30 o'clock and they were out only a short time when they returned with a verdict of no cause for action.

Canal Trade May be Revived.

The Newark Evening News in commenting on the recent inspection of the Delaware & Raritan canal, by an official of the Chesapeake & Albemarle Canal, says: "It is possible that the development of the lumber traffic may restore the Delaware & Raritan canal to some of its old-time prosperity. As it will not interfere to any great extent with the Pennsylvania Railroad's freight-carrying, that corporation, which owns the canal, will have no object in charging extortionate tolls or putting obstacles in the way of the project's success. On the contrary, it will be altogether to the company's interests to foster and encourage the play. Such a revival of industry on the canal would mean much added prosperity for Bordentown and New Brunswick, its termini, and incidentally would be of appreciable benefit to considerable surrounding territory."

DIVERSIONS IN HAVANA.

There Is Variety Enough to Suit the Tastes of All Classes.

THEIR SHOPPING FEVER.

Life at the Hotels Is Costly and the Visitor Receives Very Little for His Money.

Different Types of Humanity Seen on the Streets—American Maidens and Senoritas in Mantillas—The Hunt for Relics and Valuable Antiques—Points of Interest About the City.

Naturally, unless they be traveling in pairs or in groups, no two people visiting Havana will follow quite the same program in their occupations or their sight-seeing, says a writer in the Indianapolis News. The mercantile man will call upon buyer or sellers and pass his day in talking business. The politician, or, if he prefers the term, the statesman, will probably call at official headquarters and be steered in certain conventional directions for the obtaining of that knowledge of the affairs of the island which he seeks for his guidance among the information of his constituents. Ladies will go shopping on Obispo street, hoping for fetch and bargains in filigree and thread lace. Newspaper correspondents will lie in bed all day and go to the theater in the evening. That is all they have to do, as they lie in bed they absorb local color and news matter through their pores. That is the way news is obtained.

But there is a certain general program which all will follow, certain things which most will probably see. They will get up at 8 or 9 o'clock in the morning. If it should not be able to testify, from any personal observation, that anybody ever does get up before that time. It is possible that some may do so. For the sake of being definite, let us assume that the visitor has more money than brains, and is staying at the Inglaterra, as I am. Let me say, in parenthesis, that after some twenty-five years of hotel life, I know of few places where one can get so little real satisfaction for so large a sum of money as he can in Havana hotels. And the Inglaterra heads the list. It is a place where one pays five good American dollars a day for a tiled floor, an iron bedstead, and two meals a day. It does not materially differ from any others in the probability of an opportunity for obtaining value for one's bill.

The passers on the street are a jumble of all kinds. American maidens in jaunty sailor hats and trim shirt waists and skirts that hang at the ankle, think a skirt ought to hang alternate with dark-eyed and much bedowdered senoritas in mantillas, look across mantillas and furbelows, which the jaunty girl from the States declares to be frightful, though the face is "awfully pretty." Sightseeing Americans, all kinds of workmen. Spanish clerks and business men. Yankee soldiers, move up and down on errands of pleasure, business, curiosity, or idleness. The beggars are a nuisance which should have been removed long ago. It is an entertaining panorama while the novelty lasts. Excursions may be made upon side streets, but Obispo is the center of the shopping district. Many visitors look for antique relics of the Cuban war, and rake the pawnshops for the valuable antiques pawned by the wealthy in days of stress, and forfeited by non-redemption. But the market has long been exhausted in both directions. Now and then one has found a trifling bargain, but the field is now almost hopeless.

Should the visitor prefer a drive to points of interest, he will, if he be wise and prudent, make a well-understood contract with the cabman before starting. He will do amazingly well if he sets off for less than a dollar and a half an hour for a one-horse carriage.

There are a few principal points of interest and much of the city itself is novel and quaint. There are queer corners and odd old streets scattered about, and while there is much of monotony about the sights of the streets, there are many flashes of color and type which are both curious and artistic. One may drive down the broad Prado, northward to La Punta (the Point), and from the old fortifications upon the low-lying shore, look across the harbor entrance to what is known in guide-book parlance as "Old Morro's frowning walls" on the opposite shore. Above the latter stands the high tower of the Morro light. I am told that it is 150 feet from water-level to the apex of the tower. Yet during a heavy storm and wind recently I saw the water again and again break, not in spray, but in volumes upon its very summit, falling like an elastic story, but it is capable of proof by many witnesses and a number of cameras.

From La Punta one may drive westward along the coast to Vedado, some three miles out of the city. The drive is more interesting than charming, except for the water pictures. From the shady little suburb, now the official headquarters of the Governor-General, one may drive, if not hypercritical about roadways, up the hill and across fields to Havana's beautiful necropolis, named for the great discoverer, Christobal Colon, and by its massive triple-arched portal. The firemen's monument is a noble and beautiful shaft, and the little plot in which the victims of the Maine lie buried has its own appeal to the American visitor. Outside the main inclosure is another, large and high-walled. It is a burial-place of the poor and the heretic. Those having a taste for the gruesome may "feed fat" their taste for horrors by inspecting the huge pile of bones and grinning skulls to be seen in the second inclosure, and may even chance to be the eye-witness of burial customs which shock and revolt more sensitive souls.

In Germany the man must be eighteen years of age before he can legally marry.

In Portugal a boy of fourteen is considered marriageable and a woman of twelve.

In Greece the man must have at least fourteen summers and the woman twelve.

GAMBLING IN PORTO RICO.

There is Plenty of It But it is Less Open Than Formerly.

THE FAVORITE SPORT.

Cockfighting, For Which Every Village Has its Arena and Contests Take Place Every Sunday.

Game Roosters Which Are Worth Two Hundred Dollars—Even a Priest Used to Have its Cockpit—Other Pastimes of the Natives—Professional Gamblers Reap a Harvest at the Mayaguez Fair.

The men and boys of Porto Rico are born gamblers, and they have not given up their favorite pastime since the introduction of American rule. Now they carry on their games of chance less publicly than in the days of Captain-General Macias, and so they scarcely attract the attention of the Yankee traveller. In order to see them he must peek into the backroom of the rum shop, hunt among the hogsheads at the wharf, watch the counter of the mountain roadhouse and also hire a negro lad for a copper to point out the cockpit.

Cockfighting is the principal island sport. From November until April, which is the season, these contests take place every Sunday and holiday, and always at the ecclesiastical benefice. For an arena every village, however small or far up in the mountains, has its cockpit, covered with a thatched roof to keep out the sun in the dry and the rain in the wet season. On the rough board seats the spectators make their bets, and incidentally yell themselves hoarse. Often they make so much noise that even the birds get frightened. In betting the men never deposit their money. All wagers are settled at the close of the afternoon fights. If a man wants to back the smaller bird for a peso, by way of illustration, he merely adds to the general confusion by calling at the top of his voice, "A peso on the baby." His oats or eyes then must catch an answer to his cry. San Juan, the capital, is so crowded a city that no room is left within the walls for a cockpit. Sportsmen there must pay 10 coppers for a ride in a small native sailboat across the harbor to Catana, where an American flag waves above the pit. In Ponce, on the other hand, the cockpit is in Castillo street, only a few rods from the headquarters of Lieut.-Col. Hood, in the centre of the town. Jose Nebo, owner and manager of the birds and pit, is a wealthy old Spaniard. Behind the rickety board fence he keeps more than a hundred game birds, worth from $5 to $200 each. The latter is the rooster which he is willing to match against all comers, he has, in fact, refused $200. Half a dozen negroes take care of his birds and their backs and feathers, polish the natural spurs, and keep the string by which all birds are fastened adjusted properly on the leg. Frequently the pit is open to the public two days in the week, Sundays and Mondays. He charges an admission fee of 25 cents, five more than the San Juan price. Ponce, which is the capital of a sporting town, has still another pit at the bay settlement.

In the smaller villages and towns, where, according to the native sportsmen, some of the best fights take place, the pit and birds are not always owned by the same man. At Aguadilla, a town of 6,000 population on the west coast, for example, Ramon Molinary is owner of the pit, and his brothers, sisters, nephews and nieces have the birds. Indeed, the family has 400 birds, whose total value is more than $5,000. Along the western coast, the natives often hold fights between the birds of two towns for a purse perhaps of $50, $75 or $100. Such contests, held not more than once a month, usually have an admission fee ranging from 10 cents to civilians and soldiers alike. Further north, in the picturesque mountain village of Utuado, even the town priest has been known to sport the fee. Henry, had cockfights for their amusement in the jail.

Although cockfighting is the great island sport, the natives also have other pastimes. In the back rooms of rum shops monte is a popular card game. At Ponce another widely played game is styled the Ponce table, or parlor billiards. Shot by a spring, an ivory ball rolls to the top of an inclined plane, like a slanting billiard table surface, and there the returning knocks it from one to nine duck pins. Players bet either on the total number knocked down or on the odd or even number to fall.

At Mayaguez, a pretty town on the west coast, the professional gamblers reap a harvest in copper and silver every winter at the Feste de Candelaria. For more than a week the market, which is by far the best in the island, is overrun with thimble games, three shells, prize-package tables and all games of such description. No prohibitory law is enforced against the fakirs. Therefore, like the New England country fair shapers, they offer the farmer a variety of ways in which to lose his money.

In Ponce the soldiers have a poker den of their own. Half a block from the old Spanish barracks, the place is distinguishable from the private houses only by a sign, which reads, "American Bakery and Lunch Room." True, in the front room New England cakes, pies and doughnuts are sold, but in the rear room, up a flight, is a complete roulette and poker layout. Stud poker here is the favorite game. An infantry First Sergeant deals on the table cloth, and takes from 25 cents from every dollar of the stakes for the house percentage. No Spanish silver is played.

One American gambling outfit is in full operation at San Juan. A little back button, when pressed, brings a secret door from the staircase, and, after an inspection by the bartender or to the den. Although in the wholesale business district, the interior is furnished comfortably with imported rugs, chairs and tables. The decorations include potted banana and orange tree shrubs, huge palms and the Red, White and Blue. As for games, the house has hazard for dice throwers, poker tables, a faro bank, and roulette.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D., said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would bless the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabule, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be at the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was obtained as a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time I did not get the desired results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended so highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $2 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I should consider no more if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview the present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which would appear by name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure it takes great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case is the means of relieving some other person similarly afflicted to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was entitled to it.

PUSHING ROAD FROM PATERSON TO TRENTON

Route of the Midland Railroad Has Been All Staked Out.

ONLY 28 MILES TO BUILD.

WORK OF CONSTRUCTION WILL BE BEGUN SOON.

Eleven Miles Between Whitehouse and Flemington and Seventeen Miles Between Morristown and Paterson, by Way of Caldwell—Rail Communication With Twenty Towns to Be Established.

Morristown, June 14—After several months of hard labor the staking out of the proposed route of the new Midland Railroad, to connect Paterson with Trenton via Morristown, has been completed by Civil Engineer J. E. Melick and his corps of surveyors. The new railroad will bisect diagonally the northern section of the State, and but twenty-eight miles of railroad are necessary to be constructed to carry out the designs of the promoters.

The railroad will open up new sections of the State, and by intersecting the main lines of older railroads will form connecting links for railroad traffic, the necessity for which has been long felt. The first railroads built in New Jersey naturally ran from the large western cities across the State to Newark and New York. Communities that happened to be off these lines, lying perhaps midway between two such lines of travel, stood still in growth and saw newer communities spring up which have not yet stopped growing.

Eleven years ago ground was broken for the first part of the new Midland Railroad at Whitehouse, making a junction with the Central Railroad of New Jersey. This connection permits all rail traffic over the following roads: Baltimore and Ohio, Philadelphia and Reading, Lehigh Valley and Pennsylvania and Flemington, which place is only eleven miles from Whitehouse. By the hardest kind of work, and with but little financial assistance, a railroad was pushed through from Whitehouse to Morristown. Farmers along the line furnished supplies and assisted in the work, for which they accepted stock of the company in payment. Today the road, which is known as the Rockaway Valley Railroad, does a paying business shipping farmers produce to market centres and returning freights of merchandise. A large portion of the freight received in Morristown arrives over the Rockaway Valley Railroad daily.

The construction of the eleven miles of railroad between Whitehouse and Flemington, and the building of the seventeen miles of road between Morristown and Paterson, via Caldwell, where connection will be made for Newark, will make a direct beeline from Paterson to Trenton, also making closer connections with the county seats of Passaic, Essex, Morris, Somerset, Hunterdon and Mercer counties, as well as with the State capital.

Careful estimates have been made of the freight and passenger business along the proposed line, and Mr. Melick says the most conservative have arrived at the opinion that within four years the road will pay for itself. The proposed new road will open railroad communication with twenty communities, besides having the effect of reducing transportation rates that now are so high that but little profit is left for the farmers.

Engineer Melick, having completed his surveys, expects soon to be able to begin work on the extension of the line, the construction of which is being financiered by Messrs. Haines Brothers, 100 Broadway, New York.

Spring Lake Filling Up.

Spring lake, belonging to John I. Holly, on the road leading from Park avenue to South Plainfield, is slowly filling up again, and will soon be the beautiful sheet of water so much admired by all passing it. The earthen bank on the lower end of it recently gave way, on account of the overflow channel becoming clogged up, and the living springs, from which the pond is fed, filled it so full that the embankment gave way and emptied the pond. The icehouse on the side of the lake has collapsed from old age and inattention and is no longer used for storing ice. It should be moved now, as it looks unsightly.

Service for Veterans.

Next Sunday afternoon at the W. C. T. U. rooms there will be a service for the G. A. R., of this city, and all persons residing in this city, who are veterans of the Spanish-American war. Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, pastor of Monroe Avenue church, will make an interesting address and a full attendance of veterans is desired.

THE COMBINE GROWS.

NORTH JERSEY LINES TO BE ORGANIZED WITH $4,000,000 CAPITAL.

Chandler W. Riker, of the Plainfield Street Railway Company, is at the Head of the Great Trolley Corporation

Newark, June 14.—A new street railway combination with a capitalization of $4,000,000 will be organized as soon as the courts confirm the sale of the New Jersey Electric Railway Company's property which last Saturday was transferred to Chandler W. Riker, one of the biggest stockholders in the Plainfield Street Railway Company, for $1,500,000.

The new corporporation will be called the White Line Traction Company, and is to control, it is said, all the Passaic lines not owned by the North Jersey Street Railway Company, and also control the New Jersey Electric Railway Company, the Paterson, Passaic and Rutherford Electric Railway Company, the Hoboken and Rutherford Electric Railway Company and the North Hudson Street Railway Company. This will bring the street railways of Northern New Jersey under control of three big corporations—the White Line Traction Company, North Jersey Street Railway Company and the Orange and Passaic Valley Railway Company.

As the same capitalists practically own each system, all will unite into one company, it is said, by next fall or winter. Vice-President Hobart, Bernard M. Shanley, of this city, and E. F. C. Young, of Jersey City, are leading factors in the latest deal, and are the real incorporators of the White Line Traction Company, which filed papers with the Essex County Clerk last Friday. In addition to its $4,000,000 capital stock, the new company may issue $4,000,000 bonds.

SWINDLES BICYCLISTS.

PRETENDED AGENT GETS MONEY FOR L. A. W.

Officers of the Organization Are Not on His Trail and if Captured He Will be Pushed to Full Extent of the Law.

Thomas L. Davis, alias William E. Hammond, a swindler notorious to the officials of the League of American Wheelmen, is working throughout New Jersey, and the State officers of that organization are hot on his trail and hope to repay his efforts by a dose of Jersey justice. Hammond's method is to represent himself as a agent of the League and secure paid-up applications for membership. A letter to J. T. Tatterall, Secretary-Treasurer of the L. A. W., says:

"William E. Hammond, the notorious swindler who has been securing applications all over New York State for the L. A. W. and keeping the money, is now at work over in your State, working under the 'nom de plume" of Thomas L. Davis, giving address at 91 Montgomery street, Jersey City. We have received four complaints so far from people in your section that have been duped. I would suggest that you try and get your consuls on his track, and see if you can be more successful in locating him than we have been. His latest recruit is Louis Meyer, Jr., 469 Central avenue, Jersey City; he was swindled on the 17th of May."

League officials in this State will appreciate any clue that may be furnished them of Davis' whereabouts.

GIFT TO FIRE LADDIES.

Graceful and Fraternal Act of Engine Company Members.

Eight members of Engine Co., No. 2, went to Perth Amboy last Tuesday and presented Lincoln Hose Co., No. 1, with three handsome pictures and the old ballot-box used by the company for so many years. The boys were royally entertained at the house of Lincoln hose, where a clambake had been prepared especially for the occasion. Robert Eick, of No. 2, made the presentation speech. The fire ladies report a very enjoyable time. The pictures and ballot-box will be preserved as souvenirs. They are the last of the effects belonging to members of Engine No. 2, which has now disbanded owing to the department being formed into a paid system.

FOUR HOURS IN DITCH IN DYING CONDITION

Sad Fate That Overtook Young Man on the Track.

WAS WALKING TO 'FRISCO.

STRUCK BY FREIGHT TRAIN AND FATALLY INJURED.

Without Money or Friends in the East, William Cosgrove was Tramping it to His Home on the Pacific Coast—In Helpless Condition Beside a Tracks From 1 to 5 Yesterday a. m.

One of the most interesting cases ever treated at Muhlenberg Hospital is now detained at that institution, and the physicians in charge cannot give any hope for recovery.

William Cosgrove, aged 19 years, is the patient. His home is in San Francisco. His father is dead, but he has a mother, brother and sisters, all of whom reside in SanFrancisco. Young Cosgrove has been tramping for sometime past in the hopes of getting something to do. He was unsuccessful, and as a last resort he started Monday to go home. As a method of reaching there he intended to walk.

Tuesday evening he passed through Plainfield.

About 1 o'clock yesterday a.m ,while he was nearing Dunellen, a westbound freight train came along at a high rate of speed, and before the young man could get out of the way he was struck and thrown a considerable distance.

He remained where he fell until 5 o'clock in the morning when he was found by some people who happened to be in that vicinity. A horse and wagon was secured and he was brought to the hospital about 7 o'clock.

An examination was at once made and it was learned that Cosgrove was suffering from a compound fracture of the left leg, and also a fracture of the spine. It is the fracture of the spine that makes recovery impossible, and no hopes of his recovery is entertained.

The engineer of the freight evidently did not know that he had struck anyone for it is said that he did not stop his train. If he had known of the accident he would surely have brought his train to a stop. Those in charge of the hospital have notified the boy's mother.

TROLLEY SCARED HORSE.

Narrow Escape From Serious Injuries of Two Men in a Buggy.

Two men residing in the vicinity of Bound Brook had a narrow escape from serious injury Tuesday afternoon while driving home. They had reached Lincoln when a trolley car in charge of Motorman Thomas Collins put in an appearance. The horse immediately became frightened and began kicking. The inmates of the buggy were thrown out and the wagon was smashed to kindling wood. The horse became frantic and finally got away, and for all that is known he is still running, while the men were left by the roadside with what was left of their horse. The harness was also wrecked to a considerable extent.

People who were riding in the trolley car say that the motorman could scarcely be expected to prevent the accident, as the horse became unmanageable so quick that help was impossible. That the men were not killed is a mystery to all who saw the accident. The names of the motorman and conductor were taken, also those of several passengers on the car.

Mr. Collins is the same motorman that ran the car that struck and killed a horse belonging to Mr. Rogers, of New Market, several months ago. However, he is considered a careful man on the car. The names of the two men in yesterday's wreck could not be ascertained.

G. A. R. MEN ENTERTAINED

ELIZABETH VETERANS GIVEN A GOOD TIME BY PLAINFIELD COMRADES.

Pleasant Remarks Indulged in by Both Hosts and Visitors—A Potato Race Made Lots of Amusement for All.

Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., together with the members of the Woman's Relief Corps, joined Tuesday evening in having a good time. They also entertained members of Kirkpatrick and Dahlgren Posts, of Elizabeth, and several members of the Ladies' Aid Society from that city. Post No. 73 held a short meeting first, after which the visitors were invited to the room, where everyone had a good time. Commander C. B. Stephens, of Post 73, presided, and seated beside him were Mrs. E. C. Morse, president of the Woman's Relief Corps, and Mrs. Cannon, president of the Ladies' Aid Society, of Elizabeth.

After a few remarks by Commander Stephens, Past Department Commander W. C. Smith was introduced and made a few happy remarks. Other remarks were made by Comrades Oakley, Walsh, Ball, of Elizabeth, while Mrs. Morse, of the local corps, and Mrs. Cannon, of Elizabeth, made appropriate remarks. Mrs. Morse recited a pleasing selection in connection with her remarks.

Other features of the programme was a piano solo by Miss Jennie Smith, several recitations by Miss Josie Murphy, and a vocal solo by Miss Cannon. The closing feature was a potato race, and this proved very exciting to all. Miss Cannon, of Elizabeth, won first prize, securing a beautiful plate, while her father received the booby prize, a comical toy. This closed the programme, after which the members of the Woman's Relief Corps served ice cream and cake to all present, and the balance of the evening was passed in a sociable manner.

PATRIOTISM TO ABOUND.

GLORIOUS FOURTH AT MOUNTAIN PARK INN.

Mrs. Darling, Founder of the Daughters of American Revolution, Will Be Prominent in the Celebration.

Mountain Park Inn will be a centre of patriotism July 4th. Old Glory will wave on the Washingtonville heights and will mark the occasion and give enthusiastic ardor to the welcome extended to Mrs. Reeves, the well-known and successful manager of the new "Inn," which has already received the approval of New York society.

Mrs. Flora Adams Darling, well known to the Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution, is a guest for the season. As Founder General of the Hereditary Societies of Descendants from the Founders and Patriots of the Colonial Revolutionary Periods of the Republic, Mrs. Darling's extended acquaintance and knowledge of historic facts is heard around the world much like "the first gun of the Revolution." It is a recognized truth that wherever she is found a wave of patriotism follows.

Mrs. Darling's brother, John Quincy Adams, with his family, will spend July at the "Inn." Mr. Adams is secretary of "The Betsy Ross Flag House Association," also the Founders of Order of Founders and Patriots of America. He is to deliver the address July 4th. The Declaration of Independence will be read. Mrs. Darling will read an original poem and present to the "Mountain Park Inn" a picture of the birth of our Nation's flag, which will be supplemented by "The Story of the Flag," by the regent of the Betsy Ross Chapter of the Daughters of the Revolution, Mrs LeRoy Sunderland Smith, who is a guest of the hotel for July.

Madame Valda, a celebrated artist known in both worlds as a prima donna and colleague of Patti, will be present and sing "The Star Spangled Banner" as only Valda can sing "The Song of Glory."

The occasion is limited to friends of the guests and to those who receive invitations from Mrs. Reeves.

TROLLEY WILL PASS CITY OF THE DEAD.

Feasible Plan Presented to Hillside Cemetery Association.

ON THE WAY TO METUCHEN.

ARLINGTON AVENUE ROUTE NOW PRACTICALLY ASSURED.

Set of Plans Presented to Directors of the Cemetery Association Tuesday Night and Approved by Them—To Pass Oval Track and the Hillside Golf Links—Will Open a New Territory.

H. C. VanEmburgh, representing the Plainfield Street Railway Company, appeared before the stockholders of the Hillside Cemetery Association, at their annual meeting Tuesday, and presented a plan for the extension of the trolley road out Arlington avenue from West Fourth street to the city limits which is expected to assure the success of the enterprise. The great difficulty that the street railway company has had to cope with in making this extension is objection of the cemetery association.

As planned now the route is laid out Arlington avenue to Randolph road. It will run over this latter thoroughfare past the Crescent Oval racing track to a point east of S. F. Randolph's residence. There it is intended to have it turn to the south and run over a new street to be built eight feet wide to the property of Alexander Randolph.

There the road will curve to the east and skirt the north side of the property owned by the Hillside Cemetery Association and finally tap Woodland avenue. From there it will run to the city limits at the edge of Middlesex county, passing the golf grounds of the Hillside Golf Club.

The plans presented met with the approval of the directors of the cemetery association, who said that they would sign the necessary consents under such an arrangement. This means that the line will be built in a short time.

It is only a matter of a short time before the line will be built through Middlesex county to connect with the Brunswick Traction Company's road at Metuchen, which would give the latter company connections with Plainfield in two directions—Dunellen and Metuchen—and will eventually connect Plainfield with all the towns of Northern New Jersey having trolley roads.

Besides Mr. VanEmburgh, E. H. Gaddis and Lawyer Charles M. Moffett were at the meeting as representatives of the trolley company.

Protect Our Food.

The doctors inform us that alum is a poison, and that alum baking powders should be avoided because they make the food unwholesome. Prominent hygienists, who have given the matter most study, regard these powders as an evil that should be suppressed by state action. In Minnesota and Wisconsin alum powders are not permitted to be sold unless they are branded to warn consumers of their true character, while in the District of Columbia the authorities have under the direction of Congress, adopted regulations to prohibit the use of alum in bread altogether.

Are not the people of other states, as well as those of Minnesota and Wisconsin, entitled to warning of a danger which is apparently menacing them at close hand, is not the whole country entitled to absolute protection, as the people of the District of Columbia are protected, by legislation which is entirely prohibitive?

Until we can have protection in the form of a statute, how can our state boards of health, state analysts or food commissions better serve the public than by publishing in the newspapers from time to time the names of the baking powders which they find to be made from alum?

Meantime, it will aid the housewife in designating the alum powders to remember that all powders sold at twenty-five cents or less per pound are of this dangerous class. Pure cream of tartar powders are usually sold at from forty-five to fifty cents a pound.

EFFECTS OF DROUGHT.

HIGHER PRICES IN VIEW FOR ARTICLES OF FOOD.

Poultry is Already Dearer in Price, and Vegetables are Not as Plenty as They Should be at This Season.

The effects of the drought are being felt in the markets of the city, as housewives and others will soon discover in the way of the higher prices they will have to pay for various articles of food. Poultry is already dearer than usual at this season of the year, and market poulterers say it is going higher. The reason for this, they say, is that large numbers of young chickens are being killed by the heat, and shipments to the city are small.

Vegetables and fruits have suffered considerable damage from the drought. Whole fields of vegetables, such as cauliflower, spinach and lettuce, which are of slow growth, have been scorched and withered, and the supply of small fruits has been materially curtailed. Dealers are sending to Canada for vegetables, and they say that prices will be high throughout the season, as it is too late for the home farmers to attempt to supply the demand.

The drought has even affected butter, the marketmen say. The heat and lack of moisture have made the grass "weedy," and "weedy" butter is going to be the result. Such good butter as there may be will cost more than the usual summer prices.

"With the exception of lamb, the drought will not materially affect the quality or price of meat this season," said a butcher yesterday. "The effect will be felt next year, however, when there will be a lot of poor meat on the market, and I believe it will cost as much, if not more, than good meat does now."

PARK CLUB'S FOURTH.

A PRIVATE CELEBRATION OF THE DAY DECIDED ON.

No Intention of Antagonizing the General Celebration—The Usual Fine Fireworks Display Will be Held in the Evening.

There was a meeting of the board of governors of the Park Club Tuesday evening and all the members were present. The question of adhering to former custom and holding the usual Fourth of July celebration was introduced and it was unanimously agreed to hold it as usual.

A committee, consisting of W. J. Boome, E. S. Hooley, E. M. French, E. T. Wilson and H. D. Hibbard, was appointed to make complete arrangements for the celebration. There will be an afternoon and evening programme of special interest. Of course, the fireworks will be in the evening, and they will be a very fine display.

The committee has no idea of antagonizing the big celebration to be held in this city, but do not feel as though they ought to give up their celebration for the other. B. A. Hegeman, Jr., who is an ex-officio member of the committee, will have general supervision of the celebration.

Mr. Hunt, a new resident in Washington Park, was elected a member of the club at the meeting last night.

A number of the tribes of the district were represented on the board. The Great Chief performed the adoption ceremony upon one candidate. After the council finished its business a collation was served the braves and the pipe of peace indulged in. The visiting Red Men report a pleasant time.

LEFT HIS FORT TO APPEAR IN COURT.

"Count" VanNess Asks for a Hearing by Judge Runyon.

CASE TO BE HEARD MONDAY.

VANNESS' ASSISTANT ALSO WANTED BY POLICE.

But Roundsman Frederickson Was Not Able to Locate Him—"Count" Was Late in Getting to Court—Accompanied by His Lawyer—VanNess Says That He Is Not an Obstructionist.

The city officials found it necessary yesterday a. m. to send Roundsman Frederickson to the improvised home of "Count" John K. VanNess on the surveyed route of the Scotch Plains extension of the local trolley system, to serve a warrant of arrest on the "Count" in order to get him into City Court to answer to the charge of shooting firearms within the city limits last Saturday night while trying to get the proper range for his cannon to annihilate any trolley employes who should try to invade his property.

Even the officer's visit did not have the effect of bringing the "Count" into court on time. After waiting for half an hour for the offender to appear the court adjourned, but just then the "Count" drove up in his barouche, accompanied by his lawyer, George Ball, Judge Runyon reconvened court at once and the "Count" was arraigned.

After both he and his lawyer had spent some minutes in studious reading of the complaint and ordinance, which it is alleged he violated, Attorney Ball stated that he desired to enter a plea of not guilty for the "Count," and ask for an examination at a later date. Judge Runyon set Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock as the time, and the "Count" was released on his recognizance.

Besides the charge against the "Count" another complaint of a similar kind has been issued against William Hunter, a colored man employed by the combative property-holder. The warrant for his arrest was given to Roundsman Frederickson, but when the officer arrived at the "Count's" shanty-like domicile the colored man was nowhere to be found. He had flew the coop. He is charged with helping the "Count" to fire the cannon Saturday night.

After court adjourned the "Count" spread the map of his property before Chief Grant and with a wealth of picturesque and emphatic language explained the situation and told the Chief that the trolley company was all wrong in the stand they had taken against him.

"I am not an obstructionist," declared the "Count," "all I want is fair treatment."

Information from Elizabeth is to the effect that the land Van Ness is defending against the trolley company does not belong to him, but to a John Marsh, of Scotch Plains. A $3,000 mortgage is held against the property by a son of Assemblyman Martin, of Hunterdon county, and there are also other mortgages on record. Colonel Hine, who is interested in securing the right of way for the trolley company, says that a deed for the property will be delivered to him, as the company has purchased the property in dispute.

VALUABLE THIMBLES

Gold, Silver and Jewels Used in Their Construction.

The first thimble seen in England was made in London less than two hundred years ago by a metal worker named John Lofting. He acquired a large fortune and great fame in the manufacture of the new accessory to the needle worker's art. The implement was at first called a thumb boot and was worn on the thumb. Lofting's thimbles were made of either iron or brass, and specimens of them are extant, many of which are preserved as heirlooms. Gold, silver, iron, steel, pearl, celluloid and sometimes glass are utilized in making thimbles nowadays.

In China, the ladies of high class use very dainty thimbles. Some are carved from enormous pearls, with bands of fine gold, on which are engraved all sorts of fantastic things, the etchings of which serve for catching the needle, as the holes of the outside barbarians thimbles do. The thimble always has a mother-of-pearl case. With the thimble the Chinese lady always has a delicate pair of scissors of the finest steel, in a sheath of pearl, and a pearl needle case. The articles are all enclosed in an exquisitely inlaid case of the purest mother-of-pearl.

The manufacture of thimbles is simple enough. Dies of the different sizes are used, into which the metal, whether gold, silver, or steel, is pressed. The semi-perforations, finishing and polishing or tempering, are done afterwards. Celluloid is moulded. The best thimbles are said to be made in France.

The Queen of Siam has a thimble which was a present from her royal husband. It is made of gold, in the form of a lotus, the lotus being the royal flower—and is thickly studded with diamonds, so arranged as to form her name and the date of her marriage. This gift was equal to an order that the ladies of Siam should use thimbles, and they have used them since.

Queen Victoria's Devotion to Her Dead.

Queen Victoria sleeps in one of those large and almost square wooden beds, which are used as a feature of many English households. The Queen occupies one side of the bed, and on the other side, which during his lifetime was occupied by her husband, the Prince Consort, there hangs at the head, above the pillows, a large frame portraying the features of the Prince lying dead—photographed, in fact, just before he was placed in the coffin.

Above this picture hangs a large memorial wreath, and beside it is a watchpocket containing the Prince's watch. This watchpocket has its counterpart in the watchpocket above the Queen's pillow containing her own watch. The memorial wreath, as well as the watchpocket and watch of the Prince, and his rather grim portrait, accompany the Queen on all her travels, and form part of her bedroom equipment wherever she may happen to be staying.

His Release From Mary.

Mary E. Lease, being what they call an "illiterate," is no longer a resident of Kansas, although "Charley," the husband, still remains as a clerk in that drug store at Wichita. Mary has not returned since she went to New York during the campaign of 1896. She is now lecturing on Joan of Arc somewhere in the east—a character she would like to emulate, says the Chicago Record. Her daughter, who has a good deal of dramatic power and used to recite poems at conventions, and was expecting to make fame and fortune on the stage in the great play, "The Curse of Gold," is now the only comfort of her father. The son is in the East with the mother, acting as her business agent.

Not Necessary to Lay Every Day.

A young woman came into a fortune and promptly hunted up a country house, where she played the role of chatelaine to the manner born according to her own ideas of the part. One day some of her old-time friends came to see her, and she condescended to show them all over the place.

"What beautiful chickens!" exclaimed the visitors when they came to the poultry yard.

"Yes. All prize birds!" haughtily explained the hostess.

"Do they lay every day?"

"Oh, they could, of course; but," grandiloquently, "in our position it isn't necessary for them to do so."

Women's Hats in Church.

Apropos of the question as to whether or not women should remove their hats in church, a Lexington (Mo.) man suggests a return to the good old custom under which the men sat on one side of the church and the women on the other.

"In that way," he says, "the ladies could keep their heads clear of their big hats. Ladies who remove their hats out of courtesy to those who sit behind them could, of course, sit where they choose, but others would have the full benefit of attempting to see the preacher through a jungle of feathers and gewgaws."

Judicious Education Pays Best.

Teach your daughter drawing, painting, music, etc., if you have enough money to allow it, but teach her something otherwise she is only wasting time in pursuing such studies, when that time might be spent in studying something by which she could earn her living. Should she have a taste for reading, give her every opportunity and select for her books that will give the best and most practical information on her favorite subjects. Teach her to choose her companions according to their morals and habits, not according to the amount of money they possess. Teach her to live within her income and encourage in her the desire to save. Teach her to say "Yes" and "No" only when she means them, and that when she makes a promise she must keep it. Teach her how mean it is to gossip and talk scandal. In short, teach your daughter to be a real lady.

FASHION NOTES.

Novelties For the Up to Date Tea Table.

An indispensable adjunct to the 5 o'clock tea table is the plate of preserved fruits. These fruits are served on fine Sevres or Saxony china and are taken with a gold fork. The teacloth is almost entirely composed of rich guipure and is laid over red silk. There is also a fancy for black or brown bread sandwiches, cut very thin, of course. The German aniseed bread is often used.

Separate bits of guipure are worn with summer costumes and can be used with different gowns for variety. The bolero is still highly fashionable in all its forms, and when it has a lining the pocket, which is now impossible to the skirt because of its clinging smoothness, may be placed inside the left part of the bolero for the reception of the little purse and the handkerchief. The coin purse of gold or silver links is the favorite at present and is made in all sizes down to a purse only large enough to contain three or four gold dollars.

The gown of which an illustration is given is of hortensia taffeta. The skirt, which rests upon the floor at the back, is trimmed with two flounces of plaited hortensia mousseline de soie with a ruffled lining. Above each flounce is a band of guipure insertion and a band of black satin. The bodices are arranged to simulate a tunic. The corsage, of guipure over hortensia taffeta, has a plaited guimpe of mousseline de soie and a bertha of the same material. The little plastron and the collar are of guipure over taffeta, trimmed with a satin band, as are the cuffs of the close sleeves. The belt and bows are of black satin. The hat of hortensia straw is trimmed with hortensia tulle and white feathers.

mingled. Satin is, as ever, the favorite material, and the veil is either point lace or tulle, according to fancy. Veils are far more becoming than lace as a veil and for this reason is frequently preferred even by the wealthiest brides. Lace forms an attractive ornament for the gown itself, however, and softens the luster of the satin agreeably.

Toques of tulle, mousseline de soie and lace are very much worn, either with a brim or of the turban shape. Soft, fancy tulle is often mingled with mousseline de soie, twisted and interwoven to form a puffy drapery. These toques require very little trimming, a tall spray of flowers, a bow of ribbon and an ornament or a group of feathers being quite sufficient. If there is a brim, it is usually undulating, and a portion of the trimming is placed so as to rest upon the hair. Buckles are a frequent ornament and are of steel or rhinestone as a rule.

A picture is given of an attractive new model, called the Marie Stuart. It is of cream straw and is lined with shirred tulle to match. Cream tulle forms a large chou in front, and at the side is a spray of pink roses, rising from a chou of black velvet loops, retained by a gold buckle. At the left side of the back is a chou of tulle, at the right a chou of black velvet.

JEWELS.

Their Language and Properties as Talismans.

The turquoise, in spite of its tendency to change color, is the emblem of sincerity, confidence, truth, tenderness and friendship and brings good fortune. It has also a beneficial effect upon the sight and is one of the most esteemed gems of the orientals.

The sapphire symbolizes justice and loyalty, beauty and nobility. It signifies warmth and a pure conscience and is in France a favorite stone for the engagement ring, its color indicating candor, goodness and all the simple virtues.

The emerald was placed under the tongue by soothsayers of old before they pronounced their oracular utterances. It clears the mind, facilitates the acquirement of learning and gives strength, activity and energy. It symbolizes charity, joy and abundance.

Earrings seem to have disappeared entirely, even studs of the smallest variety.

CREPON GOWN.

Doubtless the revolution of fashion will cause them to return to favor, but at present they may be left out of the reckoning. Long jeweled chains are still in favor, while rings were never more numerous. These rings are always so tasteful, however, for in order to be effective rings must be of value and kept in brilliant condition.

The cut shows a costume having a skirt of ilsis pink taffeta covered with old point. Over this is a plaited tunic of crepon, bordered with black velvet bands. The crepon bodice has a blouse front of three box plaits and a square yoke of old point, ornamented with puffings of crepon, bands of black velvet, fastened by crystal buttons, outline a bolero. The elbow sleeves are of old point, trimmed with velvet bands and finished by a plaiting of pink crepon.

FASHION ITEMS.

Pretty Cravats and New Silk Shirt Waists.

Cravats are often very long, the ends falling below the waist. For example, a model in white tulle, trimmed with fine lace, has long ends which are caught in the black satin belt by a cluster of parma violets. Bons of feathers are still in great demand, but the newest are composed of entire ostrich tips, not of the separate detached fibers.

Most of the new silk shirt waists of the plainer class have accompanying cravats of the same silk, finishing the high collar. The waists themselves are plaited, tucked or corded in patterns, instead of being ornamented, as used to be, the case, and the shirt sleeve, with its stiffened cuff, is not infrequently replaced by the ordinary sleeve with a bell shaped wrist. Some of the most attractive of these waists are of pearl gray, putty color or a light mode tint, and are very cool and refined looking. The cravat of silk is detachable, so that in its stead one of tulle or lace may be worn.

A walking costume in the tailor made style is illustrated. It is of gray satin cloth, the skirt being quite plain. The bolero is finished in a novel way with a stitched circular ruffle of cloth, which expands to form revers and collar, the edge being cut in scallops. The bolero is closed by a large crystal button. The sleeves have a stitched band near the top and another at the flaring wrists. The hat is trimmed with roses, white lilacs and a black and white mottled feather.

Lavender.

Lavender is an English production and is cultivated about Hertford, Surrey and several other districts. Its name—"lavandula," from "lavare," to wash, indicates its use, which was perfuming the baths of wealthy people. Its flowers are considered excellent for disorders of the head and nerves. There are districts of lavender fields in Spain and north Africa, where it thrives mostly on high sea levels.

WOMEN'S REALM

PIN CUSHIONS

The Number Necessary to Perfect Happiness is Quite Surprising.

The number of pin cushions apparently necessary to perfect happiness in these days is quite surprising; but they are such dainty little affairs, and, after all, so very useful for holding the many different kinds of pins, that the fashion is not so foolish a one as might be thought. Oddly enough, some of the very prettiest pin cushions made are never used. They grace handsome dressing tables, but there is always a pin tray put beside them, in which the pins are supposed to be put rather than into the small piece of satin or brocade so handsomely embroidered as to be a work of art. The ribbon work on white satin brightened with fine gold bullion is one of the most exquisite little things imaginable; they are quite small and round but are not used except for very handsome jeweled stick pins. Then a pretty style of cushion is of fine line embroidered with the Dresden patterns in colored silks, and trimmed with a wide lace ruffle and very tiny bows of ribbon.

There are, moreover, the satin pin cushion covered with a square of linen also embroidered in small delights, this last is one of the most useful of all for, if the silks are of the wash kind, the cover can be laundered at any time.

The mattress pin cushion, while not new, is still as fashionable as ever, and is one of the most useful cushions ever invented. It should not be made over half an inch thick, and should be made of bits of satin ribbon and quilted, or tufted with buttons, like the mattress. The pins of all sizes can be put on the top and bottom, while at the sides are the safety pins, and also the hat pins. Then a pretty style of a number can be carried at once in these useful little cushions. The round cushion is also a favorite, covered with gold thread, and made with the top of brocade silk, and the bottom of velvet, or vice versa, can be used on any fancy table, and is really quite pretty, particularly well on the old mahogany tables.

The prettiest toilet tables are those covered with the dotted Swiss over some color and trimmed with lace, and on these tables nothing looks half so pretty as the pin cushions, covered to match. They should not be large and should have little bows of ribbon at the corners. Large pin cushions are quite out of fashion, partly because of the number of silver articles that are now laid on the tables, and which leave very little room for the cushions, and partly because used for stuffing pin cushions cotton of a very fine quality is considered much better. Bran was given up long ago, because of the dust, and of it that the best cushions were very soon destroyed.—Harper's Bazar.

Few Women Walk Well.

"She dresses well," somebody said of a certain woman, in the Philadelphia inquirer. She was generally conceded to be the swellest looking member of a mountain house party.

"No; she walks well," was the laconic criticism substituted by a man who had quietly observed and discovered the trend—the soul—of this woman's chic.

And that it was and nothing more. Her trunks furnished only the most nupretentious gowns, her handboxes only the plainest of millinery. And in straw and mull, "but she carried herself" with a poise which was bewitching. There was a suave and stately in the very swirl of her skirt ruffles as she swept along.

When she walked she created—not a sensation, but an impression. In contrast to her free, elastic steps, other women seemed to hobble. They depended upon the swish and rustle of their taffeta linings to give "style" to their promenade up and down the hotel piazzas, but "style" traveled in the footsteps of the woman who knew how to manage her feet.

Whether the average graceless carriage comes from carelessness or bad shoes, it is hard to say, but watch the approach of a lot of women, and you will be in luck if you find one of the crowd who is anything but a shoddy walker.

A young matron was telling about three girls she chaperoned last summer.

"They literally walked their way into the most exclusive circle of the hotel. They had all taken a thorough course of physical culture and you had only to look at them to know it. I used to bridle with pleasure when those girls walked the length of the dining room. Everyone else either marched along minced along, or strode along, but my girls—well, I can't tell you how they did it, but they walked."

The Secret of Beauty.

The most helpful and agreeable bath is that of tepid water. Few persons can stand absolutely cold baths, and no matter how strong one may be such a bath should not be indulged in unless a thorough rubbing is taken afterward. To speak plainly, it must be remembered that while a cold bath may be more or less invigorating, it is not cleansing. The latter quality, which depends almost entirely upon the care given to the general health.

The girl who is up late at night, gives her nerves a rubbing indulges in various stimulants, bathes but seldom and exercises less is certain to have either a sallow complexion, a skin or one covered with disagreeable looking black and red spots. She should avoid many sweets and much pastry and not allow herself to become a slave either to tea or coffee any more, than she would to some vicious drug or strong stimulant. She should also remember that unless she is in good condition internally she will be anything but a pleasant object to look upon externally.

FASHIONABLE SKIRTS.

The Best Usage Demands Short Ones For the Street.

The length of skirts depends upon the usage for which they are intended. By the best dressed women a trailing gown is not worn for walking in the streets, although multitudes of such dragging costumes are daily seen sweeping up the debris of the pavement and disseminating microbes wherever they go. These are the apparel of women who are not of the first order of elegance, however, and who have no discrimination as to the fitness of things. Trailing gowns are intended for house and carriage wear, and for the street promenade the regulation walking skirt is the proper attire. It is a popular fallacy among men that women dress simply with the idea of pleasing the masculine eye. As the masculine eye is proverbially ignorant in such matters, dressing to please it would be a much simpler task than its dressing in accordance with the general taste of the feminine public. The average man has his preference in the color for a woman's dress, usually quite irrespective of her complexion, and he likes his feminine belongings to "look like other women," but beyond that his notions of dress are chaotic. With one accord, however, men are disgusted with the trailing street gown, because it sweeps up and retains the filth of the road with such insistent obviousness.

The picture shows two petticoats. The first is of brocade, having a deep circular flounce with black lace insertion and a black lace ruffle. Bows of taffeta head the flounce and a full ruffle finishes the lace ruffle. The second petticoat is of pink glace taffeta, with a circular flounce corded lengthwise, the flounce having a ruffle headed with corded ruffles and bows of mousseline de soie.

THE WARDROBE.

Pale Gray and Mode Colors For Warm Weather.

Silver gray gowns trimmed with white are seen among the most refined summer models, and the combination is certainly very delicate and charming. Gowns of palest fawn, ecru or tan, also adorned with shades of jewel guipure, are very charming and in their very quietness appeal to eyes satiated with the brilliant colors which have prevailed so long and still prevail.

The hostess at a reception wears as elegant a gown as she can command to do honor to her guests. If she is wealthy she has a special costume for the occasion, but if she is of moderate means she adopts some light skirt with an ornamental bodice, or even a black gown, made gay with dainty colored accessories—cravats and vest or chemisette. Gloves are no longer worn for remaining in the house, their place being taken by numerous rings. The coiffure is, however, quite elaborate, the favorite style showing the hair parted in front in bandeaux, held in place by a fillet of jewels, while at the back it is arranged in loops at the back of the neck, instead of on the top of the head, as is usually the case.

The cut shows a short jacket of beige cloth, the back being tight, the front open. A decoration of stitched straps and braiding follows the edges and the seams, and the top of the sleeves is corded. They are revers and a vaists collar, faced with plaited beige silk. The cravat is of embroidered mousseline de soie, the hat of mixed straw, trimmed with flowers and choux of tulle.

The Oldest Chessmen.

Probably the oldest chessmen known to exist are an almost complete set which is preserved in the East Indian museum, London. They were excavated about 30 years ago on the site of the city of Brahmanabad, in Sind, which was destroyed by an earthquake in the eighth century. They are black and white, made of ivory and ebony, turned and plain in character, without ornament. The kings and queens are about three inches high, the pawns one inch and the other pieces of intermediate heights. Fragments of a chess board of the same materials were found with them.

FASHION HINTS.

Summer Fancies in Stationery and Other Matters.

Walking skirts just touch the ground. Skirts of more formal costumes—for visiting, etc.—are a little longer. Ceremonious gowns require a train which differs in length according to the age of the person who is to wear it. An old lady has a longer train for the same occasion than a middle aged one, while a young unmarried woman should have no train at all, according to French fashions.

Blue stationery with a white crest or cipher is fashionable, as are also gray and green of the same style. White ink is provided for writing on colored paper with white trimmings, but dark designs—wine, green or deep blue—are sometimes used instead of white when ink and sealing wax are chosen to match.

Soft materials are most sought after for summer wool gowns, and dark blue is a favorite color. Soft silks, especially foulard, are also much liked, and, besides the favorite blue with white dots, there are a charming shade of heliotrope and another of pale tan, also with white designs, which are very fashionable.

The cut shows a gown of mauve silk, the trained skirt having three flounces of mauve mousseline de soie bordered with ruches of the same material. The drop flounce is draped at the side under a chou. The tunic of guipure de venise is closed at the side. The pointed bodice, of point de venise over mauve silk, has a drapery of silk across the upper part, draped at the side by pearl buttons and coquilles of mousseline de soie. The sleeves of mousseline de soie are shirred at the top. The toque is of mauve and mauve silk and is trimmed with mauve flowers and black feathers.

WHAT TO WEAR.

Hints With Regard to the Summer Wardrobe.

With tailor made costumes taffeta cravats are worn to relieve the severity of the general effect. The ends are often decorated with an application of lace or guipure, with additional trimmings of bands of velvet or satin. These cravats may have a fancy collar to match or may be worn with a linen collar.

Soft taffetas, crepes de chine and silk crepons compose the most elaborate summer gowns, delicate, clinging and fragile looking to the last degree. Tucks and bands of open insertion are favorite decorations for the skirt, the same ornaments appearing on the bodice, which often has a guimpe of mousseline de soie. The cuffs are frequently of guipure over silk. These soft, crapy materials lend themselves wonderfully well to the tunic fashion and impart an almost classical effect to the drapery.

Thin, satin finished cloths, lightweight velvets and a numerous company of delicate wool materials vie with silks in the domain of summer gowns and are no mean rivals, veiling, cashmere and canvas composing very attractive toilets.

The cut shows a new model in cloth jacket. It is of red cloth and is tight and plain, buttoning to the left side with wooden buttons. The body forms a point back and front, and there are long double basques sewed on, bordered with stitching, which also finishes the whole garment. The sleeves are tight, and there is a valois collar. The black straw hat is trimmed with red ribbon and red roses.

Household Talks

"MUSTARD TO MIX."

A Forehanded Hostess Had Everything Ready But the Mustard.

The phrase became a household watchword and the countersign with us after reading a domestic story thirty years ago. I do not recall the name of the author who dropped the seed into good and fruitful soil, says Marion Harland in the New York Herald, but here is the blessing insured to them who sow beside all waters.

The tale was of a fidgetty housekeeper—one of the sort stigmatized in rough parlance of the sensible vulgar as "nasty particular." A friend, calling upon her soon after breakfast, found her closeted beside herself with worry because guests she had expected at noon had telegraphed that they would be with her at eleven o'clock that morning. Distracted Martha "could never in the world be ready for them. There was so much to do that she did not know what to take hold of first. It was enough to drive a woman out of her senses, &c., &c., &c."

"But what have you to do?"

"Do! Do! Do! Why—everything!"

The visitor drew off her gloves.

"I will stay and help you. Shan't I get the spare room ready?"

A gesture of dissent.

"As if I would have put that off until to-day!"

"Can I help about the luncheon?"

"Well! I should be rash indeed of myself if the cook hadn't her orders and materials and all before this!"

"Perhaps I could dust the parlors or polish silver? or—" glancing around the well appointed eating room "see where the luncheon table was already laid—"I might arrange the flowers in it—and fruit."

It finally transpired that the franic and "forehanded" hostess could specify but one thing that remained to be done which was absolutely necessary in order for the visitors—she had mustard to mix for the luncheon. She never mixed mustard long before it was used—"it is so dry and hard when kept."

Thenceforward, in one family at least, "mustard to mix," was the synonym for needless hurry and flurry and worry. When we learned intermezzotinty, it was the caballistic formula that caused a precipitate settlement of many a muddy whirl of anxieties, and the tranquil return to chamber the name of which was Peace."

Half of the perturbations that chase the housekeeper "clean out of her senses" are as needless and unnecessary as that beset the heroine of our wee song of a story. That other American Martha who cried out on Monday morning: "Whizzing! whizzing! Fly round! Washday! Baking on Wednesday! Bless my life, half the week gone and nothing done!" is hardly a caricature of the average housewife. She is the whirlwind that throws the weightier matters of the law of life out of plumb, and raises such a dust of mistaken duties and possible hindrances that the blinded victim can see nothing aright.

One of the fixed principles of the universe is that two objects cannot occupy the same space at the same time. Another, which we are more slow to admit, is that no two duties are cast for one and the same hour. The throngs of homely tasks that obscure our toiler's vision in the anticipation of "another day's work," drifting and dancing like the flies in the sun—a flood of elusive moths—have really sequence and order. Let her take hold of her astral or inner self by the shoulders and hold herself steady until she can weigh and classify the important atoms. The pretty fairy tale of the task set for Cinderella by her wicked stepmother supplies another and a pat illustration. The poor girl had to sort a room full of feathers of all colors and sizes. After laboring vainly for hours, she called tearfully for her fairy lover, who, with one stroke of his wand, laid each kind in a separate heap by itself.

Your wand—and my wand—dear Martha, is the cool, long breath of sober reflection that gives us time to say—"All these things shall be done at once. Some of the less important can be laid over into the convenient season which must fall to the lot of even an American housekeeper. I must keep each in its place. 'I will—a strong 'will,' a long 'will' and many 'wills' altogether—'I will think of but one thing at a time, and do it as if there were nothing else in the world for me to do.'

The discipline of thought and nerves that must attend upon such a moral and mental effort will train lawless impulses and teach concentration of thought as well as the much vaunted higher mathematics could. Work need not, of necessity, be worry. Industry does not imply haste.

"Count five and twenty, Tattyceram!" entreated Mr. Meagles, when the foundling's temper was likely to get away from her.

In the same tone of affectionate warning I pass on my homely test of facts and values—"Mustard to mix." Whatever else you have to do finally have to do, and to do to-day. Second, having screened and sifted the mass, assort the ore before you begin to smelt it—and yourself!

Never Correct Without Cause.

In correcting the little ones try to arouse their moral sense, showing that they should not be ashamed of their conduct, and the withholding of some little treat or of some delicacy at tea time is a deterrent in many mild cases; but never put a child to bed or give dry bread is not right, as it may prove injurious to growing children. Never punish for any trifling matter annoying it may be. A child may break a valuable vase owing to the weakness of his little fingers, but this should not be punished, while if he throws a two-penny tumbler down in a rage or out of naughtiness this is a deserved punishment. Have sympathy with the little ones, and try to see things with their eyes, which is the only way of being just to them. Let us not forget the dictum of the father of the great philosopher, Locke: —"Remove hope and fear, and there is an end of all discipline."

OUR LITTLE FOLKS

SHE NEVER WAS A BOY.

When I come home the other night
With an ugly lo-kin' eye
That I had got in a fight;
Poor ma commenced to cry.
But when I told pa how it was
He clapped his hands for joy.
And told me I'd done badly, cause
Once he had been a boy.

"Boys will be boys," I heard him say;
"They won't be otherwise,
And the one that learns to fight his way
Is the one that wins the prize;
When I was little me fighted, was
My greatest earthly joy—"
But ma, she kept on cryin', cause
She never was a boy.

My golly, I'd hate to be
A girl with fluffy hair,
And always prim as A, B, C,
With clothes too clean to wear!
When ma was small I s'pose she was
Red-cheeked and sweet and coy—
But, oh, the fun that missed her 'cause
She never was a boy.

A Boy Against a Fleet.

Late in the month of December, 1778, Thomas Inis and his son, Rose, then about 16 years old, were on one of the small marsh islands which lie in the frith of the Savannah river, Savannah was then a small town, held by the American army of patriots and the war of the revolution was in full progress throughout the colonies.

From the information furnished me it does not appear what Mr. Inis and Rose were doing on the marsh; but they had a sailboat anchored in a creek, and for some reason Mr. Inis took the boat ashore and returned in it to Savannah, leaving his son alone on the island until he should come back.

It seems that Rose had some provisions and a gun with him, for I infer it was wild fowl shooting that had tempted the twain down the river. At all events, Rose was left alone and his father had been gone nearly an hour when a large English vessel, tall masted and heavily armed, appeared in a broad bayou or creek a mile from the island. It was one of a strong fleet come to attack Savannah.

Rose knew, as soon as he saw the ship, just what it meant, and his predicament became serious to the point, so far as escaping capture was concerned, especially when a little later there came a small, sloop-rigged open boat, containing a boat's crew of seven men, which anchored almost exactly where his own boat had lain when his father took it.

All these Rose was on a bit of hummock land, where a line of straggling trees and bushes grew near a narrow tide channel of the marsh. He quickly hid himself and watched, while the officer and crew came ashore, and it soon appeared that they were a party sent from the fleet, probably to look for an eligible place upon which to establish a camp.

Doubtless Rose, being but a boy, exaggerated the danger, and became unduly excited, wrought upon by the collections of stories he had heard of British cruelty to prisoners. Still, his feelings were his property of which was to happen, for, when Savannah was taken, unarmed citizens were bayonetted in the streets by the brutal soldiers of the king.

Rose was no coward, however; on the contrary, he came of a stock whose chief characteristic was the fighting spirit, and he was a patriot from boy to crown. He looked to the priming of his gun, examined the edge of the flint to be sure that it was duly sharp, for he had not come out to take wing out a fight, and he even preferred death to capture.

Meanwhile the British party had made a brief survey of the little bend near the boat. Apparently the officer was not quite satisfied. He had, perhaps, seen the tracks made by Mr. Inis and Rose, and was making his precautions by carefully reconnoitering. Rose quickly forsaw that he would be tracked up and found. As his danger grew, however, so did his pluck, with increased space. He held his gun ready, while he lay in a tuft of scrub palmetros, and he thought with lightning swiftness of what he should do when the last emergency came.

The party of British separated into two squads, one passing east of Rose, the other to the west of him. Evidently the intention was to beat the marsh in a systematic way. It would not be long before one on the other squad would come to the flank of his bit of hummock land, cross his trail and so discover him. The time for action of some sort would not be greatly delayed. Rose revolved the situation in his mind, never once losing sight of the deliberately advancing soldiers.

The point of land, partly concealed was perhaps the highest part of the little island, and it gave him a wide view of marsh lands and breeze-tossed waters and rounded Isles and distant mainland. Three war vessels were now in sight over toward Tybee some miles away. What was to be done must be done. It was one lone boy against the whole fleet of Commodore Parker.

A truly brave spirit is never without one good idea at least at a trying time. Rose Inis caught the one bold chance as it offered. It was a desperate suggestion, and it called for a tremendous exertion of energy and coolness, a strength and a daring almost impossible.

The directions taken led the two British squads further and further apart and at the same time farther and farther from the boat, which, with sail flapping, lay close by the shore of the creek. As it afterward turned out, the officer was a topographical engineer and his actual purpose was to find, if possible, a short route by either land or water for the defenses of Savannah. But Rose Inis felt sure that he was being tracked and now a suddenly formed plan of escape took active possession of his mind.

With but a moment's consideration he seized his gun and ran straight for the British sailboat. As he sped along he stooped as much as he could, in order to hide behind clumps of palmetto and patches of tall marsh grass. The alert soldiers soon saw him, however, and the one nearest him yelled to him to stop. Instead of obeying the order Rose doubled his effort to reach the boat.

Bang! went the Briton's gun and it's ball whizzed in the grass close to Rose's legs. All the men and the same moment gave chase to the flying boy, who, when he reached the creek, plunged in, holding to stock that the lock was out of the water and swam to the boat. Out of breath and terribly excited Rose scrambled abroad, first tumbling his gun over the gunwhale to the bottom of the boat.

It was now work for dear life. Rose was a clever sailor and knew just how to go at the business in hand. He hauled in the little anchor and sprang to the sail, loosened it, grabbed the tiller and got into the breeze. Meanwhile the men were thoroughly alarmed officer and men, shooting, panting, gesticulating.

The breeze was fresh and favorable. It took the sail with a vigorous sweep. She leaned low and sprang along beautifully. Rose had lost his hat and his hair was all disheveled; the perspiration poured down his face. One came the soldiers and at the water's edge they lost some time in confused running back and forth. Then by order of the commander they fell to reloading their guns. Every minute, every second, was precious to the brave boy.

Fortunately for him army muskets in those days were but rude weapons with a very short range. Two hundred yards could not be accurately shot over with them and already the swift little boat was a good hundred yards out and flying down the creek to the broad arm of the river.

"Fire!" cried the officer.

A volley rattled spitefully; but not a bullet struck the heroic boy. One event though the sail, two hit the boat. Then the soldiers ran frantically along the shore until they reached impassable mud. Here they were compelled to stand and give over the chase.

Rose knew every waterway in all that region and seeing the masts of the British fleet, he took a course to avoid the vessels. But in doing this he presently fell into a cross channel which lost him the breeze and he had to row for more than a mile.

Meantime the thing had been heard on board the fleet and the nearest vessel sailed up and tried to discover the cause. It was too late. Rose made his way to Savannah and was afterward in the thick of the fight when the town fell into the enemy's hands. Nor did he give up, even then. With his father he served in a body of private in the little patriot army and served until the successful close of the glorious war. His wife was a long and happy one and although he never became a distinguished man, he enjoyed to the end of his days the esteem and respect of all who knew him. He often told the story substantially as I have written it.

A Wonderful Floating Snail.

There is a small snail which is so fond of the sea that it never comes to land and it builds such a capital boat for itself and its eggs that whilst large ships are sinking and steamers are making for the storm, it tosses about in perfect safety.

The little snail is of violet color and is therefore called Janthina; it has a small shell and there projects from the under part of the body a long, tongue-like piece of flesh. This is the raft, and it is built upon many air-filled bubbles, for it has compartments in it for air. It is broad and the air compartments are underneath, so that it cannot capsize.

Whenever the snail knows how to stow away its cargo, for the oldest eggs and those which hatch the soonest are placed on a beautiful little jelly fish, which has a flat, raft-like form with a pretty little sail upon it, and they congregate in multitudes when the sea is calm.

Sometimes specimens are washed upon the northwestern coast of France and when they are handled they give out a violet dye.

Japanese Street Tumblers.

The Japanese are the most wonderful tumblers and acrobats the world has known. They seem to be devoid of bones. The street tumblers in Japan are more dexterous than our professional tumbling band organs. They go from tea house to tea house, and perform the most marvelous feats all day, and never seem to feel the strain any more than if they were puppets.

WHEN TEDDY SMITH.

When Teddy Smith first put on pants,
He felt so very grand
He wouldn't mind his mother,
Or he wouldn't hold her hand.

But on the street he walked ahead,
And tried to whistle some,
He thought perhaps he'd go to war,
And fire an awful gun.

His mother mustn't spread his bread.
Nor cut things on his plate;
She mustn't say "No more, my dear!"
No matter what he ate.

So hard to please this gentleman
His loving mother tried.
It quite enlarged his dignity,
And swelled his lofty pride.

And all was brave, and all was well,
Until one summer said,
At 5 o'clock, "Of course, dear sir,
You'll go alone to bed!"

Ah, would you have me say what then
Befell the great big man?
For if you undertook to guess—
I hardly think you can!

He turned the corners of his mouth
Most fearfully awry,
He rubbed his grown-up fist awhile
Across his grown-up eye.

Then burying in his mother's lap
Both pride and manly joy,
He said in just the littlest voice,
"I guess I'm just a boy."

FAIRYLAND HUNTING

When Willie Spinkel and Georgie Goatskins used to sleep together Willie would often tell him of some of his wonderful deeds of bravery when he used to go hunting. Georgie heard him tell these stories a great many times and felt quite sure that Willie must be a very brave boy indeed.

One night when they were talking together, the beautiful fairy came along and asked them what they were doing and Georgie told her about all that Willie Spinkel had done and how brave he must be. The fairy smiled when she heard this and asked them if they would not both like to go hunting in Fairyland? Georgie was as pleased as possible, but Willie was not nearly so enthusiastic.

Well, it happened that the Wednesday following the two boys started out on a great hunting expedition in Fairyland. The fairy took them to the shores of a beautiful lake and there tied to a dock, made of the most delicious sugar candy, was a delightful sailboat, such as is never seen except in Fairyland.

The hull of the boat was made of chocolate and the beautiful decks were made of layer after layer of wintergreen lozenges. The mast was great tall sticks of hoarhound candy, very strong, and the main boom jack, sails of transparent butter scotch, with great strips of red, white and blue, all through them. These sails were hung from pieces of chewing gum. Altogether it was quite the most wonderful boat that Willie Spinkel and Georgie Goatskin had ever seen.

Willie said he wanted to be captain, so Georgie, who was always very generous, said he would act as mate. So Willie went to the stern of the boat and Georgie set the sails, and pretty soon they were sailing out in the beautiful lake before a good breeze.

After a while an island appeared in the distance, and Georgie, as he stood on the deck, called to Willie to sail in that direction and they would see if there was any hunting to be found there. Willie was very much afraid, but he steered for the island. When the little boat struck the beach the two boys found that the island was made of beautiful yellow jack. Georgie chipped off a piece with his knife and pronounced it "bully." While the boys were standing there they saw a lot of monkeys coming from some peanut bushes. Willie told Georgie to go and see what the matter was and he would stay and watch the boat.

When Georgie reached the peanut bushes he found a dear little pepper mint bunny. The rabbit explained to Georgie Goatskins that she was weeping copious tears because of the sudden loss of her youngest of seventeen children. Then when she explained that her baby boy had been cruelly stolen and eaten by a great wolf that lived in the deep woods this play very much afraid that he had an appetite for bunnie, and would return for another one that very night.

When Georgie Goatskins heard of this he was very angry and said: "By my goatskin coat of arms I will revenge this outrage." The bunny smiled through her tears at Georgie's brave language and seemed much comforted.

So Georgie, the brave and generous one, started for the forest armed with his two-bladed jack knife, both blades of which were broken. When he arrived at the edge of the woods he was very much surprised to find that all the trees were Christmas trees with candles on. It was getting pretty dark, and Georgie could not help thinking that Willie had left him on this island all alone, and perhaps his mother might be worrying about him too.

It was now getting very dark indeed, and he could hardly see. Suddenly he suddenly remembered that he was in a forest of Christmas trees. Striking a match, he lighted one of the candles on the tree nearest to him, and a gentle breeze blew them on the other candles on the tree, and on to the candles on the next tree, and so on until the whole forest was lighted up.

Suddenly he heard a dismal growl and he knew that the time for him to fight with his brave arms had come. Drawing his knife from his pocket, he carfully sharpened what was left of the big blade on his shoe and started forward. Before him stood the wolf in front of him with eyes that looked like coals of fire. Running forward he thrust the knife into the body of the wolf. The wolf gave one dismal cry and started to run, but Georgie caught hold of his tail and held on.

Although he held on for dear life the wolf kept on getting further and further away. It was certainly most remarkable, and he could not explain it until he saw that the wolf's tail was stretching and stretching. Georgie was so surprised at this that he hardly knew what to do, for he did not want the wolf to get away, so he took the tail and wound it around one of the Christmas trees, tied it, and then hurried after the wolf.

When he caught up with the wolf he said—"Because you killed the dear little bunny you must die." The wolf seemed quite heartbroken at this and Georgie asked him what was the matter. Then the wolf told him that he would die because he had to feed a large family at home, and if he was killed his oldest boy would have to leave school and support the family. Then he told Georgie that his oldest boy was doing so well in school that is seemed a shame to take him out, especially as he had just received ninety-five for spelling and eighty-seven for arithmetic, which showed progress over his examinations of the year before.

Georgie said he really did not want to take any boy out of school and if the wolf would sign a paper stating that he would never eat a meal a dear little bunny, he would spare his life. So the wolf signed the paper and then Georgie cut back and untied the wolf's tail, and then he understood why it had stretched so much, and that was because the wolf was made of licorice. He then looked up and saw a most peculiar looking bird. The bird was Georgie and said—but really that is quite another story.—New York Herald.

Monkey Listeners.

In India the people look upon the monkeys as sacred animals, and will not drive them away from their houses. As the monkeys are as plentiful as birds here, they sometimes become a great nuisance, which the people, however, bear without grumbling.

A minister who was preaching a sermon one Sunday in a village street in that country, on this subject, "About It" "Behind the house on the other side of the street there was a long row of trees growing in their back yards, the branches of which stretched out over the flat roofs."

"Happening to raise my eyes I saw many hundreds of these trees bend down toward the roofs, and saw the faces of some old jack monkeys looking out through the leaves. Soon some of them jumped down to see what their big brothers in the streets were doing as they stood gazing at these white men standing on the platform. Getting upon the front edges of the roof, they seated themselves with their hind feet hanging over and looked at the preacher, as they saw the people in the street doing.

"Other monkeys came, until there was a long row of them seated on the roofs. Then the monkeys began to walking along behind, looking for a place wide enough to get a seat. Not finding a place between two already seated, they sat down on the edge

Plainfield's Advancement.

The Plainfield Advancement Society has started under auspicious conditions inasmuch as those who have taken the initiative in the organization are imbued with progressive ideas and seem to be alert and willing to work to succeed. There is one serious obstacle, that the leaders should be warned of. That is the fact that an organization of such a character must be carefully and continuously groomed. It will not run itself because a few have got together and given it a title. It must have a membership that is aggressive and anxious to do something besides letting the other fellow do it. That has been the ailment of similar associations for years past; and it is an ill that makes mugwumps every good intention and causes every worthy scheme to collapse. However, the charter members seems to have started in the right spirit and it is more than likely that with a little prodding and encouragement now and then they will stick to the work of making Plainfield a greater town until benefits are to be seen and appreciated.

It is a fact that those Plainfielders whose business interests are entirely centered in town have long recognized the need of greater industrial activity here. Factories help the laborer, the house owner, the merchant; in fact, they give to a town prosperity that cannot be secured through any other channels. The proposition made by Mr. Drake for the conversion of land in the western part of the city into factory sites under such circumstances as will undoubtedly induce manufacturing concerns to establish themselves here, is one that should immediately appeal to all classes. A little careful thought about the project, viewing the conditions as they actually exist, will show that it is not a visionary scheme. It is eminently practical if the townspeople will take hold of it in the right manner and right spirit. With such purposes as the Plainfield Advancement Society propose to evidence in their work a great deal ought to be accomplished along this line.

The question of advertising, which has played a prominent part in the considerations of the preliminary plans for organization of the society, is one that presents an unlimited field for effort. No great or successful business man nowadays expects to get along without advertising; publicity is as necessary as clerks. And what is true of a single individual in town is true of the town as a whole, if its improvement and advancement is growth and character is to be undertaken. There are thousands of people within a radius of twenty-five miles of Plainfield that are seeking homes in just such a town as this is and the only effective way to reach them is by printer's ink. The number that may be induced to come here through personal appeals or information of townsmen is a bagatelle; the number that might be induced to inspect the town's advantages by advertising its claims in public print and other avenues of publicity is only limited by the number who have eyes to read.

Here, then, are two propositions for the Advancement Society to work on, both of a practical and popular kind, and if success may be attained through either one, the members may feel that they have accomplished a great deal.

Mr. Scudder Trotted Out.

Though the Westfield Republican is politically inclined as its title indicates it has the presumption to trot out a Democratic candidate in the person of Mulford Scudder, of Westfield, for the nomination of Sheriff in Union county. The Republican says: "Although Freeholder Swain, of Summit, and Jacob Glaser, of Elizabeth, are anxious to run for Senator on the Democratic ticket, the noblest Roman of them all is Mulford M. Scudder, of Westfield. If we are to have any kind of a decent campaign, let the unterrified put in the field a man who stands in his party as Senator Cross does in the Republican ranks. Scudder is a fighter, and it would be a merry war with our townsman in the lists against the excellent lawyer of Elizabeth."

Paterson hopes to be a first-class city after the next census is completed. The population of the city is now estimated to be considerable over 100,000. The change of the class of the city will necessitate many changes in the municipal government.

DRINK GRAIN-O

after you have considered that you ought not to drink coffee. It is not a medicine but does order it, because it is healthful. Invigorating and appetizing. It is made from pure grains and has that rich seal brown color and costs like the finest grades of coffee and costs about 1-4 as much. Children like it and thrive on it because it is a genuine food-drink containing nothing but nourishment. Ask your grocer for Grain-O, the new food drink. 15 and 25c.

Better Postal Facilities.

Just at a time when Plainfield business men are awakening to advance the general interests of the town, it is opportune that the increase of three letter-carriers should be allowed the local postoffice. It has long been recognized that Plainfield is in serious need of this increased postal service, and now that the Department has granted it the citizens ought to congratulate themselves and feel highly stelled over the matter.

To secure such a favor from the Postoffice Department at Washington is no easy job for the ones who undertake it. The Washington officials are flooded with hundreds of just such applications for increased facilities, but they are able to grant comparatively few of them—not because the service does not demand them, but from the lack of ample revenues. If it had not been for the active interest of Congressman Fowler it is doubtful if the extra letter-carriers would have been allowed. Mr. Fowler brought every influence that was possible to bear on the Department officials, and worked hard himself, to bring about a favorable result.

Favoring Prompt Taxpayer.

The Orange Journal observes that delinquent taxpayers are favored by a reduction of the interest penalty from time to time, but there has been no way whereby the prompt payer of taxes could receive a rebate. By the passage of a law by the recent Legislature, however, it is within the power of municipal authorities to favor the prompt taxpayer and make it an object for all to pay their taxes without delay. The law is as follows:

1. It shall be lawful for the Common Council or other governing body of any municipality of this State to provide by ordinance or resolution that any person paying taxes in such municipality in the year in which said taxes are or shall be assessed, and between the time when the tax duplicate shall have been delivered to the collector of taxes and the day on which by law taxes become delinquent in said municipalities, may be allowed a discount at a rate of not exceeding 6 percentum per annum from the date of such payment to the day on which taxes become delinquent as aforesaid.

2. This act shall be construed to apply as well to taxes assessed or to be assessed during the present year as to all taxes to be hereafter assessed; and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect immediately.

The Journal thinks the Legislature was certainly right in acting on the theory that the prompt taxpayer is entitled to as much consideration as the delinquent.

One view of the situation in the Philippines is taken by the Newark Call in the following: "It will prove most unfortunate if the rumors of troubles between President Schurman and General Otis are true. The inclination will be to put most faith in the soldier, especially as he seems to be well supported by other American authority in the Philippines. The difference would embarrass the Government somewhat, but it would be quite as bad in its effects upon President Schurman and the university of which he is chief. It was a matter of much surprise when he entered upon the duty of Commissioner to the Philippines. His work at Cornell must necessarily suffer, and there was every probability that his new post, would cause controversy, from which the college interests could scarcely hope to escape.

The Jersey editor of The Tribune has the following pleasant word to say for Assemblyman Murray, but undoubtedly it will be gall and wormwood to many other Union county Republican leaders who do not like Mr. Murray's independence: "Some papers are saying that there is opposition to the renomination of Assemblyman Roger F. Murray, of Plainfield, because of his independence and of his fight in the last Legislature against the telephone monopoly. It is just because Mr. Murray showed such zeal and activity that the voters of Union county will see that he is sent back to Trenton, where he is valuable as a champion of the rights of the people. The lobbyists don't like him, but 'the third house.'"

The Chicago Times-Heard, which has been making an estimate of the population of the country at the next census in 1900, puts that of New Jersey 2,027,000 as against 1,444,933 in 1890. Then, in population, this State ranked number eighteen, but, according to the estimate of the above journal, she will next year rank ahead of Virginia and Alabama, which at the last census, were ahead of New Jersey. The total estimate for all the states and territories, is 80,000,000, and that of the Philippines and Porto Rico added would make 90,000,000.

Orange has taken the first step towards owning the water supply plant of its city, the Council last night passing a resolution that the necessary resolutions and ordinances be prepared to bring about such a result. In this connection we are reminded that it is about time Plainfield took some decisive steps along the same line. We have heard plenty of talk, but no action of substance.

There is no more worthy charity than the Babies' Camp. Help it along.

An Important Decision.

In the course of time and courts New Jersey has witnessed many damage suits that were based on novel claims, but it is doubtful if there was ever one more unusual than that brought against the Mountain Water Company by the Scotch Plains firm as a test suit representing the association of mill owners along that stream from Summit to Plainfield.

On the face of the question at issue in the action it would seem that it would be almost an impossibility to obtain damages against the defendants. The idea that any firm, or set of firms, could mulct another commercial enterprise for sinking wells and drawing water from the ground owned by them, is one that looks presumptious. But next to the highest tribunal of law in New Jersey has declared that it is not, providing the taking of this water by percolation is proven to be depleting the source of a stream of water along which certain rights and values have been established for years.

This decision of the Supreme Court in favor of the plaintiffs in the case in question is an important one, and will establish a precedent that will undoubtedly be reflected in other suits based on similar claims.

Along this line of thought the idea is forced upon the mind that if the Mountain Water Company is liable for damages for diverting the natural source of Green brook, then the Plainfield Water Supply Company may be held responsible for the same condition of things with Cedar brook. There is not the slightest doubt but that the local company's wells at Netherwood affect the source of Cedar brook and the millions of gallons of water pumped from them has resulted in making Cedar brook a tiny, sluggish stream in comparison to its condition in former years. Of course, there are no extensive mill rights along Cedar brook, but there were values dependable upon the volume of water in the stream as important, in proportion, to the possessors of them as those that existed along Green brook.

The decision of the Supreme Court raises the question: Is the Plainfield Water Supply Company liable to damages the same as the Mountain Water Company?

To Fight the Trusts.

A lengthy letter has been received by Governor Voorhees from Governor Joseph D. Sayers, of Texas, inviting New Jersey's Chief Magistrate and Attorney-General Grey to a conference of Governors and Attorney-Generals at St. Louis September 20th, to consider the question of trusts. According to his Excellency of the Lone Star State, the trust is to be discussed with a view of adopting some method to "force those in existence into dissolution, and also of preventing their further creation." Governor Sayers is of the opinion that if twenty states will combine to down the trusts, the desired result will be easily accomplished.

Governor Voorhees says that he will give the letter due consideration before replying to it. As New Jersey is just now growing rich through its chartering and taxing of trusts, it is doubtful if her Governor will participate in the conference.

From present indications New Jersey will not be one of the twenty in the combine.

Admiral Upshur, who first suggested the gift of a residence in Washington to Admiral Dewey, has written a letter in which he says his idea was not that the house purchased for the purpose should become the personal property of the Admiral and pass to his heirs, but that it should be retained as the permanent home of the ranking officer of the Navy. The revised edition of the suggestion is a good one.

With the heavy increase which the State is likely to have in its State fund balance at the end of the year there is a fair prospect that an appropriation will be made next winter for enlarging the State House. The State fund balance will probably run very close to $1,500,000, thanks to the trusts that have taken advantage of New Jersey's friendly laws to become incorporated here. But is it worth the stigma that attaches to the State as a result of the business?

There is a word a truth in what the late Henry Ward Beecher says about newspapers: "A newspaper is a window through which men look out on all that is going on in the world. Without a newspaper, a man is shut up in a small room, and knows little or nothing of what is happening outside of himself. A good newspaper will keep a man in sympathy with the world's current history. It is an ever-unfolding encyclopedia, an unbound book forever issuing and never finished."

AN EXCITING ROAD RACE.

ROUTE WAS UPPER EAST FRONT STREET TO FANWOOD AND BACK.

Henry Angerbauer Was the Promoter of the Event, Which Attracted a Big Crowd—Charles Dodd the Winner.

There was a big crowd of wheelmen and much excitement on East Front street last Monday at the starting of the road race which was promoted by Henry Angerbauer. The run was from opposite Farragut avenue on East Front street to Fanwood and return, a distance of about five miles.

Among those who participated were Charles Dean, Albert Marsh, Edward Duck, Lawrence Benner, James Montross, Joe Johnson, Jeppe Jorenson, of this city, and Charles Dodd, of Elizabeth.

Dean was given a minute and a half handicap and was the first to start. Matthew Sweeney was starter.

The men finished in this order: Dodd, first, time, 17 minutes, 33 seconds; Sorenseen, 17 minutes, 33½ seconds; Benner, 18 minutes, 34 seconds; Duck, 18 minutes, 35 seconds.

The prizes consisted of two nickel plated bicycle lanterns for the man making the best time and being first in. A china tea set was given for the second prize. It is possible that another road race will be held on the afternoon of July 4th.

TOO MUCH BEER.

An Italian Suffered a Scalp Wound as a Result of Intoxication.

Frank Blumby, aged 35 years, an Italian, was taken to the hospital last Monday in the ambulance suffering with a scalp wound caused by falling off of the railroad embankment. To use Blumby's own words he said that he "had too much beer," and this no doubt accounts for the accident. He also says that he has only been intoxicated twice since coming to this country some years ago. The wound he received in the head is not a serious one and he will only be detained at the hospital a short time. Blumby is a married man and has three children. His home is on Cottage place.

The private school conducted by Miss Scribner and Miss Green closed Friday last for the summer vacation. There were two graduates, Miss Margaret Goddard and Miss Charlotte Suydam, both of this city. DUNELLEN POSTMASTER

ADAM DEALAMAN TO SUCCEED CHARLES CORIELL.

Latter Will Retire on Account of the Charges Made Against Him—The New Appointee is a Grocery Merchant.

Dunellen, June 13—It is practically settled that Adam Dealaman, the grocer, will be postmaster of this borough to succeed Charles Coriell, who was relieved from the position for misappropriating $535 of the Government money. This appointment will meet with the approval of Dunellen residents, who have the highest regard for the fitness and special adaptation of Mr. Dealaman for the position of postmaster.

In connection with this appointment a few things are brought to mind in connection with the appointment of Mr. Coriell by the President. Among the candidates for the position at that time was Mr. Dealaman, who was led to allow his name to be used. On his petition he had the names of a majority of the prominent workers in the Republican party at this place, and he was urged to push forward his claims. He did so, but a few days before the appointment was made Mr. Dealaman secured evidence that made him believe that Mr. Coriell would get the plum, and such was the case.

Since Mr. Coriell has been out of the office the position has been filled by Dr. Brakeley, who is one of Mr. Coriell's bondsmen. The man securing the office is obliged to furnish bonds for $8,000. Mr. Dealaman does not intend to change the present location of the office, preferring to keep it entirely separate from his business, and he will keep the office where it is. It is not likely that Miss Gaskill, the efficient assistant at the office, will be removed, for she has much knowledge concerning the office and is a valuable person to assist in the work of conducting it. Mr. Dealaman is receiving congratulations from his numerous friends upon his success in securing the position, and there is no doubt but what the efficient service of the office will be strictly maintained during his administration.

MONSTER TROLLEY INTERESTS MERGED.

Final Move in Consolidation of North New Jersey Lines.

MISSING LINK PICKED UP.

CHANCELER W. RIKER PURCHASES THE "WHITE LINE."

With the Acquisition of the Trolley Lines Controlled by This Company the Last Bar to a General Consolidation is Said to Have Been Removed — Plainfield Concerned in It.

Though the promoters of the Plainfield Street Railway Company and its counterpart, the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company, have all along publicly protested that these systems of trolley roads were to remain distinct from the other trolley interests of New Jersey, what is looked upon as next to the final step in the ultimate consolidation of all the trolley lines of North Jersey was consummated Saturday, when the New Jersey Electric Railway Company, whose traction lines run from Hoboken to Singac, was sold on a foreclosure sale at Secaucus for $1,500,000. And none other than Chandler W. Riker, one of the principal owners of the Plainfield road, was the man who bought the road and is taking steps to consolidate the lines of Northern New Jersey into one vast corporation, which will make one of the greatest street railway systems under one head in the country.

The Mercantile Trust Company, of New York, held the mortgage on the company. Chandler W. Riker, of Newark, was the only bidder, and at the start named the price at which he bought in the company. The sale was opened at 10 o'clock by James E. Howell, acting special master in chancery.

In reply to a question concerning the company for whom the purchase was made, Mr. Riker replied that he had made the purchase for himself. When the sale is confirmed by the court the company will be transferred to some corporation.

Among those present at the sale were Uzal A. McCarter, Thomas N. McCarter, Jr., Mr. Howell and Mr. Riker, of Newark, and E. C. Jones, of New York. The New Jersey Electric Company's line was known as the "White Line." In the court's order fixing the sale it was stipulated that the price should not be less than $1,000,000.

While the mileage and rolling stock of the New Jersey Electric Company, as originally constructed by that company, is small, it actually controls by lease of lines and purchase of bonds and stocks the entire property of all the trolley lines connecting Hudson and Passaic counties, including about twenty-six miles of street railroad.

This property has long been referred to as the "missing link," in the ultimate consideration of the North Jersey Street Railway Company, Orange and Passaic Valley Company and North Hudson Company. When the latter concern passed into control of the Shanley syndicate an effort was made to buy in the stock of the "White Line," and it was partially successful.

STOLEN BY THE WAYSIDE.

Westfield Man Left His Bicycle for a Little While and it Was Stolen.

Scotch Plains, June 12—Jos. Singer, of Westfield, had occasion to leave his bicycle standing along Park avenue Sunday evening for a short time. When he returned the wheel was missing. Inquiry developed the fact that a stranger, apparently a novice at the art, was seen pedaling toward Plainfield only a few minutes before the discovery of the loss.

The man kept in the shade of the trees along the road as much as possible as though to hide his identity. Mr. Singer does not know the number of the wheel, and the only mark for identification is that it is a Cleveland with the name plate taken off. The chance of his recovering his property is rather slim.

MILLIONS FOR DRAKES.

THIRD GENERATION OF A FAMILY EXPECT TO BE MADE RICH.

Twenty Descendants in This Vicinity Declare Their Right to Have a Share in an Estate Worth Several Millions.

About twenty persons more or less interested in the estate of the late Francis Drake, who once resided in Metuchen, met at the home of Mrs. Brice, in New Durham, the other day, to make their affidavits before Justice Moss, who had been taken there for that purpose by William A. Silence, of Oak Tree, acting in the interest of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Lane, of Oak Tree, who is a sister of Mrs. Brice, of New Durham, and Mrs. Sutton, of Bonbamton, the three old ladies being descendants in the third generation from Francis Drake, who is said to have left an estate in New York city worth millions of dollars. The affidavits of the three sisters and others claiming to be interested in the property were taken, as were those of Mr. Brice and Joel Bloomfield, both of whom had been employed by Francis Drake.

The affidavits were taken in pursuance of an advertisement issued by a Dr. Drake, from some Western State.

CRUISE OF RESERVES.

JERSEY JACK TARS TO GO TO SEA ON THE PRAIRIE.

It is Not Certain That There Will be a Large Turnout This Year on Account of Niggardly Treatment of the State.

The New Jersey Naval Reserves, Battalion of the East, which includes the Plainfield boys, received information last week that they would take their annual cruise during the week beginning Wednesday, July 19th. The cruise is to be taken on the auxiliary cruiser Prairie, which was used by the Massachusetts Reserves during the war with Spain. The Prairie is now cruising with the Virginia Reserves and is working her way up the coast gradually.

It is not certain that there will be a large turnout of Jerseymen when the Prairie gets here, for of all the States in the Union where there are Naval Reserve organizations, New Jersey is said to be the only one that does not pay the Reserves when on cruise. The National Guardsmen are paid while at Sea Girt, and no provision whatever is made to reimburse the sailormen for wages they may loose while on the cruise. The Battalion of the East of New Jersey has made in all four cruises, including the cruise last year while on the blockade off Cuba. The State paid the men nothing except for the last cruise, and the members of the battalion are not inclined to go out this year in large number.

The Newark division should send over sixty men when the Prairie arrives, but if forty go aboard the officers will consider themselves fortunate. It was expected that the State would come forward and treat the Reserves as similar organizations are treated elsewhere, after the excellent service done off Cuba, but somehow the politicians at Trenton did not rise to the occasion, and as a result many of the boys will stay at home.

A Restful Spot.

Plainfield people and others in search of a quiet restful place to spend a few days, a few weeks or the summer, are reminded of the VanOver House at Lake Hopatcong, conducted for many years by Mrs. M. J. Tygar. Last winter the old house burned down and this summer a new and modern house has been erected in its place. It is not a hotel, but a boarding house where home comforts are dispensed to all alike. The location is just far enough away from the lake and railroad station to make it a very desirable place to rest and enjoy delightful scenery, as well as a good table.

HEALTH THREATENED BY GREEN BROOK.

Drought Depletes the Volume of Water in the Stream.

RAIN ONLY TO REMEDY IT.

MANY HOLES THAT CAUSE A NAUSEATING STENCH TO ARISE.

Boards of Health Unable to Cope With the Present Situation—Householders in the Vicinity of the Stream Get Frequent Whiffs of the Smell—Lack of Water May Cause Trouble on the Central.

Green brook has for some years been the eyesore of the Boards of Health of this city and borough, and several attempts have been made to purify its channels so that there would be no likelihood of its breeding disease by reason of the impurities that arise from its waters. The bad condition of the stream was usually brought about by the substances that were sewered into it from properties skirting either side, but these offenses have largely been eradicated by the persistent and aggressive work of the health officials

Now, however, another cause is making the brook a disagreeable feature to people who live in proximity to it is the drouth. The continued dry weather has had the effect of greatly depleting the volume of water in the channel of the stream and at some points what was once called a sparkling, babbling rush of the brook is now nothing but slimy and stagnated water, over which a cloud of insects, bred by filth, hover. The atmosphere in the vicinity of these pest holes—and they are numerous all along the stream as it runs through the city—is permeated with a nauseating smell that invades the houses in the vicinity every time there is a brisk breeze to carry it along.

It is a condition that is not easily remedied by artificial means. A good hard rain of several hours duration, which will fill the brook again to its normal volume, is about the only thing that will have the right effect.

The condition of the brook is only one of the many disagreeable and disastrous features of the lack of rain but it is a serious one.

Last Monday's New York Hearld printed the following in connection with the low water in Green brook:

"There are no signs of a rainfall here yet, and it looks as if the Central Railroad of New Jersey would have serious trouble at the Green brook tanks, where the express trains of the Philadelphia and Reading and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroads take water while at full speed. Green brook is the only point between Jersey City and Philadelphia where they can do this.

"Absence of water at this point means that a stop must be made to fill the engine tanks at either Cranford or Yardley, where always the supply is limited and the water of poor quality for boilers. For several days Green brook, from which the water is pumped up into tanks between the tracks, has been getting lower, and today the stream, ordinarily from fifty to sixty feet wide, is only about three feet across. In anticipation of such a condition, the railroad lately put in a pumping engine and attempted to form a reservoir by damming up the brook, but the lack of water has made their efforts futile. There is now apparently less than one day's supply at Green brook, and in the event of the brook going dry, there is less than one hour's supply of water."

Early crops in this neighborhood have been ruined by drought, and farmers have stopped work. Many people have no water in their cisterns or wells. Most of the mountain brooks are dry and the Raritan river is lower now than ever before, it is stated.

MUST NOT DIVERT WATER FROM BROOK.

Important Decision In Supreme Court This Morning.

NOVEL AND EXPERT CLAIM.

SOURCE OF GREEN BROOK EFFECTED BY PERCOLATION

On the Result of this Suit Depends the Starting of Damage Suits That Will Aggregate Over $100,000—It Was Bitterly Fought by Water Company in Somerset Court a Year Ago.

Trenton, June 12.—The Supreme Court this morning handed down a decision in the case of Harper, Hollingsworth & Darby, of Scotch Plains, against the Mountain Water Company, of Summit, confirming the verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, found in the Somerset County Court a year ago, for damages amounting to between $500 and $600. On the result of this action depended the starting of a number of other suits for damages against the water company, the aggregate of which will amount to over $100,000.

It was claimed that Mountain Water Company was diverting the natural source of supply of water in Green brook by percolation to their own commercial use and constantly depleting the volume of water in Green brook so that the mills along that stream were unable to depend on it for power. It was one of the most novel claims ever brought before a New Jersey court. The water company did not draw their supply direct from the brook, but pumped it out of wells sank at points where it was claimed the water should naturally flow to Green brook.

Two years ago all the mill owners from Plainfield to Summit decided to form ad association to compel the water company to desist its practices. The case of Harper, Hollingsworth & Darby was selected for the fight in court. It was tried a year ago before Supreme Court Judge Magie in Somerville. It was bitterly fought by the water company, much expert evidence being heard and the trial lasting nearly a month. The jury brought in a verdict in favor of plaintiffs, and the case was immediately appealed.

Senator Reed, of Reed & Coddington, of this city, represented the plaintiffs, and Riker & Riker, of Newark, the defendants.

Now that the case has been decided in favor of the plaintiffs by the Supreme Court the other damage suits will be immediately instituted by Reed & Coddington.

MEMORIAL SERVICE IN HONOR OF LATE REV. A. M. POWELL.

Letters Paying Tribute to Him Read From Many Prominent People in Reform Work—Great Loss to Friends.

The memorial services held Sunday afternoon at the Friends' meeting house on Watchung avenue out of respect to the memory of the late-lamented Aaron M. Powell, of East Sixth street, were attended by a large and appreciative audience who revered the memory of this good man, whose philanthropic work will be cherished by all classes. After a short period of silent prayer William D. Williams read a selection from the Bible. Then William M. Jackson, of New York, in a few words, introduced George P. Hallock, who read letters from Rev. Lyman K. Abbott, Miss Grace Dodge, William Lloyd Garrison and Commodore Eldridge T. Gerry, president of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, of New York. Letters were also read by Mrs. Edward Rushmore and Mrs. A. J. Gavett from Mrs. Elizabeth Powell Bond, Miss Jackson, Dr. O. Edward Janney, W. D. Williams, A. H. Nickerson, Elias H. Underhill, Charles Underhill and Isaac Miller, all of whom spoke feelingly of the grand work the good man had been engaged in while at the head of the Friends' meeting in this city for so many years. His death was, indeed, a great loss to the society and it is keenly felt by all. The meeting closed by Miss Rushmore reading the very appropriate poem by Tennyson, entitled "Crossing the Bar."

CANNON TO REPEL TROLLEY INVASION.

A Desperate Resort of "Count" John K. VanNess.

GETTING THE RIGHT RANGE.

TESTING THE WEAPON CAUSED HIM TO BE ARRESTED.

Shooting the Cannon Saturday Night Attracted the Attention of Patrolman McCarthy and He Arrested the "Count" for Violating City Ordinances—Mr. VanNess Seems Bound to Win.

"Count" J. K. VanNess was arrested Monday on the formal charge of shooting firearms within the city limits without a permit, but behind the legal offense is a story of what is proving to be one of the most novel and desperate attempts to repel the progress of a trolley road over a certain territory that has ever been recorded in New Jersey.

When the Plainfield Street Railway Company commenced to make arrangements to extend their line to Scotch Plains they selected a route, after leaving East Second street, that runs over private property. Among the properties was that occupied by VanNess. The company secured consents for the right of way from the people they supposed to be owners of the property, but did not consult the "Count" in the plans. There is where they made a mistake. As soon as they got ready to start actual work in making the roadbed VanNess appeared upon the scene claiming to own the property. He declared that the company was trying to usurp his rights as a property owner, and that he did not propose to allow them to cross the property. He notified the officials of the company to that effect. The company made no attempt to touch the "Count's" property, but nearly every day the latter visited the Italian workmen in the vicinity and upbraided them for proposing to invade his land. VanNess declared that he had planted dynamite along the proposed route of the trolley on his property, to which was attached electric wires running to his house, and that the first man to strike a spade into his land would be blown to atoms. This threat was not realized, however, but it was followed by an obstacle that was far more formidable to cope with.

This was the erection of a small, frame structure directly on the line of the survey route, in which the "Count" said he intended to reside in the future. He moved a few household goods into the structure and last Thursday he and his wife took up their residence in it, leaving a commodious, well furnished house on another part of the property to occupy it.

The Street Railway Company has steadily prosecuted their work of building the road and Saturday the workmen came in sight of the Van Ness' unique abode. In the meantime, however, the "Count" had secured a brass cannon which he planted directly in front of the shanty, its mouth pointing towards the route of the trolley. With this cannon the "Count" declared that he proposed to desperately repel any invasion of his property by the trolley people.

Saturday night he loaded it up with buckshot and powder, and tried to get the exact range of the spot where he anticipated the invasion of railway employes would be made. Then he fired it off. The range was not exactly as he tried it over again three more times. In the meantime, Patrolman McCarthy heard the boom of a cannon. He hurried in the direction of the noise and came upon the "Count" as the latter was about to fire the cannon again. The patrolman asked why he was shooting the cannon off in violation of the city ordinances. VanNess said that he was getting the weapon in shape to protect his property from the trolley people, whom he proposed to shoot down like Spaniards if they crossed the dividing line of his property.

The patrolman could not see the matter in the same light that VanNess did and he placed him under arrest. He was told to appear in court last Monday, but he failed to do so.

The "Count" has been through many exciting encounters in his day, and as he is a man who will resort to extraordinary means to carry his point there is a great deal of interest centered in the case to see whether or not he will actually resort to shot and powder to keep the trolley people off his land.

CAUGHT A SWARM OF BEES.

The Tribe Captured on a Bush by George Wyckoff Yesterday.

A large swarm of bees, numbering several thousand, was captured Sunday on North avenue by George Wyckoff almost directly in front of his house. The bees swarmed first on the limb of a tree and made a bunch as large a peck measure. Then the queen bee suddenly evacuated that spot and lit on a bush, where the rest of the tribe followed her. It took two hours to capture the swarm, which was done after much work with boxes, molasses and other things supposed to tickle the palate of the bee.

ELABORATE DECORATIONS.

SERMONS PREACHED APPROPRIATE TO THE DAY.

Pulpits Surrounded With Flowers and Made to Look Bright and Summer-Like—Recitations and Songs Rendered by Scholars of Various Sunday-Schools —Music Was a Special Feature.

MONROE AVENUE CHURCH.

The special exercises held at the Monroe Avenue M. E. church Sunday were of an interesting character. In the morning a special sermon was given to the children by Rev. Arthur Crane, the evangelist. In the afternoon there was regular Children's Day exercises. A feature of the afternoon programme was an illustrated talk given by O. S. Rogers, of this city. Mr. Rogers used chemicals to illustrate the Christian life and the life of sinfulness. This was followed with a short address by the paster, Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, which the children enjoyed greatly. Assistant Superintendent Edward Beekman was in charge of the exercises. The decorations consisted of flowers and greens and were admired by all.

GRACE M. E. CHURCH.

The Children's Day exercises at Grace M. E. church were held Sunday morning, and there was a large attendance of members of the church and Sunday-school. The platform was attractively decorated with flowers and roses, presenting a pretty scene. Superintendent John Valiant was in charge of the programme which consisted of the following recitations and songs. Recitations, "Roses and Lilies," school; "The First Children's Day," Ettie Rutledge; "Dolly's Broken Arm," Helen Ross; "God's Voices," Bessie Taft; "The Child and the Rose," school; "Children's Day," Mariam Pierson; "The Children," Helen Ross; song, "Just a Pansy," Edna Sebring; anthem, choir; motion song, "God Knows," school; exercise by the Flower Band. The last number was an exercise entitled "A Cluster of Blossoms," by seven girls in the school. After the rendition of the above programme there was a short interesting address by Superintendent Valiant, and the paster, Rev. J. W. Gardner, preached a helpful sermon to the children.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The Children's Day exercises at the First Presbyterian church Sunday morning, were of an interesting character. The services were held in the church auditorium, which was decorated with an abundance of flowers and potted plants placed in and about the pulpit and platform, while the National colors were conspicuous over the front of the organ. Seated upon the platform was the pastor, Rev. Charles E. Herring, and at his right was E. M. Cave, the superintendent of the Sunday-school, and on his left R. H. Radford, the assistant superintendent.

W. H. Miller presided at the organ and rendered a voluntary selection as the children of the Sunday-school filed in and took their seats. The exercises were opened with singing, followed by prayer by the pastor. Mr. Radford lead the responsive reading. After the hymn, "I Will Praise the Lord," eight scholars of the primary department gave a song recitation entitled "My Beautiful Teacher." Those who participated in this exercise were: Henrietta Englehart, Helen Gifford, Lillie Smith, Helen George, Anna Tompkin, Agnes Yergensen, Mabel Towaley, Mary Cook. The school then rendered the hymn "I Must Tell Jesus." Louis Slocum, Edward Abbott, Charles Aller, Orlando Lounsbury and George Morrison were then called forward and presented by Superintent Radford with certificates promoting them from the primary to the main department. An interesting letter was read from Dr. J. A. Worden, the head of the Presbyterian Sunday-school publication work, enlisting the efforts of the school in behalf of the project to secure a half a million scholars in the Presbyterian Sunday-schools by April 1901. The pastor then gave a short talk to the children on the parable of the sparrow, taking his text from Luke 12; 6, and Matthew; 31. Louis Slocum, from Miss Hand's Fellows' class in the primary, was presented with a book for good department and attending Sunday-school every Sunday in the year past.

FIRST METHODIST CHURCH.

Children's Day exercises at the First Methodist church on West Front street were held at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon. There was a large attendance of children. The pulpit and platform contained an ambundance of flowers and potted plants, which gave an inviting appearance to the scene. The children of the Sunday-school occupied seats at the front of the auditorium. Rev. W. C. Snodgrass, pastor of the church, assisted J. W. Jackson, the superintendent, in conducting the services. The principal features of the occasion, besides the singing of hymns by the school, was a duet by Marcella Lyros and Kathryn Sminck, and recitations by Hannah Bingaman, Francis Rittenhouse, George Rittenhouse, Gladys Peck, Edna Kennedy, Kathryn Sminck, Gertie Geier and Gertrude Anderson. Superintendent Jackson stated that during the year there had been an attendance of 271, of whom 85 were visitors. Rev. G. W. Gardener, pastor of Grace M. E. church, delivered a short address to the children on the subject of "Lions." Before the exercises closed a collection was taken for the benefit of the educational and missions fund of the M. E. Church Society.

MT. OLIVE BAPTIST CHURCH.

Sunday afternoon Children's Day exercises were held at the session of the Sunday-school. There was a large attendance and an enjoyable programme was presented under the direction of Superintendent M. C. Dobbins. The programme is as follows: Recitations, Florence Miller, Cathe Mitchell, Annie Rose, Mattie Green, E. Wilson, Mamie Doyle, Bertha Hill, Hay Kline, Edward Berm, Maude Green, Hattie Wood; chorus, "Hail Day of Gladness;" vocal solo, Maude Green; vocal duets, M. Kline and H. Wood; Cathe Mitchell and Annie Conant

After the rendition of the programme two interesting addresses were made. The first one by Geo. H. Bachelor, superintendent of the First Baptist church Sunday school, and the other address was by Rev. E. E. Jackson, pastor of the church.

Those who took part in the programme and gave the various recitations and songs, were drilled by Miss Maynard, and to her much credit is due, she also played the piano during the exercises.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Children's Day exercises at the First Baptist church Sunday morning were of a pleasing character and the attendance was quite large. They were held in the Sunday-school room at 10 o'clock and were in charge of Superintendent G. H. Batchelor. The platform was prettily decorated with flowers, while a large American flag was suspended over the platform in the rear. Howard Case presided at the piano and songs appropriate to the day were sung by the scholars. The usual opening devotional exercises were held and during the service there were songs by the Primary school entitled "Little Feet Be Careful" and "Children's Part." Features of the programme were two recitations. The first one was given by Josephine Serrell and the second one, "God's Little Ones," was by Beulah Van Winkle.

Miss Carlson, superintendent of the Primary department, was in charge of the several parts taken by that department, and her training showed effective work.

After these exercises the Sunday-school scholars adjourned to the main part of the church and occupied seats in the gallery. At this service Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes preached an earnest and powerful discourse to the children. There was also special music by the choir, consisting of anthems, solos, etc. The decorations in the church were greatly admired for their beauty.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

The celebration of Children's Day at the Congregational church took place at the usual hour for morning service. The sermon was by the pastor, Rev. Charles Lyman Goodrich. The subject was "The Fly," and Mr. Goodrich told his audience many entertaining facts about the lively little insect, and drew helpful lessons from his doings. One little girl was christened, and two boys, seven years old, who were baptized by the pastor in infancy, received copies of the Bible from him. Two musical numbers, a selection from "Lohengrin" and Thome's "Simple Aveu," were rendered by the instrumental trio of the church, Mrs. B. T. Barnes, organ; Mrs. M. E. Dwight, piano, and P. Ludwig Conde, violin. The Primary department sang two songs, and a graduating class, consisting of five girls and four boys, recited the Commandments, and the Books of the Old Testament.

CRESCENT AVENUE CHURCH.

A service especially for the young people was held at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church at 10:30 Sunday morning. The church was tastefully trimmed with daisies and peonies, and a very large congregation was in attendance. The sermon was by the pastor, Rev. Dr. William R. Richards, and was from the text "They returned into Galilee, to their own city, Nazareth." Luke 2, 39. Dr. Richards told of the journey of Mary and Joseph, with their little son, to Jerusalem, and their return to Nazareth, but an especially interesting part of his address was his description of his own visit to the town, during his late trip abroad, and his experiences there. The children of the Primary department of the Sunday-school were seated in the choir, and sang a number of songs very sweetly. A vocal solo by Charles L. Lewis was a pleasing feature of the programme. Several little children whose parents are members of the church were brought forward to be christened, the presenting of the little ones to the Saviour being especially fitted to form a part of the Children's Day service.

PARK AVENUE BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Sunday-school of the Park Avenue Baptist church held their Children's Day service at 7:45 in the evening. Mrs. Alice Spangenberg Runyon, superintendent of the school, presided, and the music was led by the school choir, consisting of Miss Ada Runyon, Miss Adelia Runyon, Wheaton S. Lowry and Thomas Adams Cuming. The pastor, Rev. John Wilbur Richardson, read the Scripture lesson and offered prayer, but the address of the evening was by Rev. Mr. Dorwood, of the Baptist church of Stelton. His text was "I am the light of the world," and his subject "Lights." Just before the address, a lighthouse exercise was given by Miss Cora Brokaw, Miss Emily Runyon, Walter Poole, Henry Cuming, Miss Henrietta Cuming, Herbert Brokaw and Miss Elizabeth Van-Winckle who built up a lighthouse on a table, the fountain being the rock Christ Jesus, the stones Faith, Hope and Love, and the beacon the cross. The Primary department had also a part in the service, two songs being sung by all the little ones, solo recitations being given by Martha Soper, Susie Whitney and David Smalley, a recitation for three children, by Jeannette Ingham, Flossie Moffett and Helen Bradley, a recitation for five children by Arline Brown, Robert Wyckoff, Mabel Stutzman, Gordon Moy and Reginald Purdy and a little song by Lillian Cuming.

WARREN CHAPEL.

Special services were held at Warren chapel Sunday afternoon consisting of recitations and songs by members of the Primary department, all of which were appropriate to Children's Day celebration. Superintendent Lovell was in charge and made a few remarks to the scholars. There were 281 scholars and teachers present, the largest attendance on a similar occasion. A feature of the exercises was an address by Rev. Dr. Richards, pastor of the Crescent Avenue church, who told about his trip to Palestine. Rev. J. O. McElvey, pastor of the chapel, also made a few appropriate remarks. The collection, amounting to $18, will be devoted to Sunday-school work in the west.

HOPE CHAPEL.

Superintendent Squires was in charge of the Children's Day exercises at Hope chapel and a very interesting programme was presented. Dr. W. R. Richards, pastor of Crescent Avenue church, was present and gave a very interesting talk to the scholars and teachers, after which he presented two pictures to the school. One was of Corinth, and the other of Mars Hill from which point St. Paul spoke. Both are beautiful pictures and they will be placed in the parlor of the new church soon to be erected. During the service all were much pleased with a beautiful contralto solo given by Miss Perry, of the Crescent Avenue church choir.

BROONNIER CHAPEL.

The Children's Day exercises at the Maroonnier Union chapel, at Oak Tree, Sunday, were highly interesting and pleased the large number of children as well as the older people who were present. Among the features of the services was the recitation, "Sing for Jesus," by Alice Eckfield; dialogues by fifteen children entitled "The Fairest Month of All," and "What the Flowers Said," by five children. The Children's Day greetings was given by Rebecca Terrill. Rev. M. E. Dwight delivered the address.

PLANNING FOR POLITICS.

Former Mayor Gilbert Chosen as Chairman of City Executive Committee.

A meeting of the city executive committee of the Republican organization in Plainfield was held Friday night for the approaching fall campaign.

Former Assemblyman W. R. Codington, who has been chairman for several years past, declined to continue in the position and handed in his resignation. Former Mayor Alexander Gilbert was elected to succeed Mr. Codington as chairman. Joseph A. Coward was re-elected secretary and treasurer of the committee.

The members of the committee indulged in considerable gossip about Union county politics, it being generally understood that Plainfield would capture at least one of the important nominations to be made this fall.

A Church Festival.

There was a pleasant evening passed Saturday night at the strawberry and ice cream festival held at the First Church of Christ, on Grove street. Some impromptu singing and instrumental music was supplied by Mr. and Mrs. McKane and other members of the church. The affair was a highly enjoyed, though the attendance was not large. The receipts were small.

—The new Y. M. C. A. building at Montclair, which cost $6,500, is now ready for occupancy.

THOMPSON SET ON BY SENATOR SEWELL.

An Interesting Meeting Between the Two Republicans.

WRONG KIND OF HARMONY.

BIG BOSS SAID TO HAVE CRITICISED LITTLE BOSS.

Jersey City News Tells an Interesting Piece of Inside Political News About the War Among Somerset County Republicans—Senator Sewell Would Not Use His Influence for Mr. Thompson.

The following very interesting political gossip about an alleged interview between Chancery Clerk Thompson and Senator Sewell, just as the latter was about to leave for Europe is printed by the Jersey City News:

Lewis A. Thompson, by the grace of John William Griggs occupant of the lucrative office of Clerk in Chancery, and by his own imagination Republican leader of Somerset, is talking for publication and very sweet and honeyed are his words.

"It's a mistake to believe the Republicans of Somerset are quarreling," he said recently to a Trenton newspaper man, "why, we are all brothers in a common cause and we will elect a Republican Senator without the shadow of a doubt"—and then Lewis A. beamed on the newspaper men as he used to beam on the ladies when he was in business in Somerset.

Mr. Thompson has not always talked in these honeyed accents. In fact it was not more than a month ago that Mr. Thompson's remarks about the situation in Somerset were fraught with acrimwood and gall. The mere mention to him of Senator Reed's name was sufficient to wrinkle his brow and cause him to frown as he used to when he found half of his spring stock on his hands in the fall. The cause of the great change is attributed to that rugged old Republican war horse, Gen. Sewell.

When the "Sage of Camden" sailed for Europe a few days ago one of the most conspicuous of the many beautiful floral tokens which encumbered his stateroom was one bearing the card of Mr. Thompson. It was good to look upon and attracted much attention. When the ruse transpired even of the General began to crow about him upon the steamer to bid him good-by, wish him good voyage and all that. conspicuous in the front rank was Mr. Thompson and one or two gentlemen of his faction, all smiles and scrapes, bobbing their heads and extending their hands to be shook by the great man of West Jersey. They were all expectancy and the thermometer of their hopes was somewhere in the neighborhood of fever heat. With the flowers and the prestige of having carried an election or two, they seemed to believe that the General would say something which would completely squelch the opposition of Senator Reed.

Their hopes dropped to the zero point when they saw the General. His face wore that awfully dignified look which always denotes that the General is "agin you," and means that you need ask no favors. He took Mr. Thompson's outstretched hand, bowed as an emperor might bow at a presentation, thanked him for his beautiful flowers and hoped that he was well.

It appears that Mr. Thompson could not or would not read these unmistakable signs and immediately blurted out something about the Somerset trouble.

The General straightened himself up to his Major-General's height and beckoned Mr. Thompson to one side. Then he went for him.

He told Mr. Thompson that he was making a great mistake in keeping up the fight in Somerset, that, in fact, he was doing no more or less than turning the county over to the Democrats. Mr. Thompson need not expect no help from him in his fight and if he wanted to help the Republican party and at the same time assist the General in getting another term in the United States Senate, he had better get back to Somerset and heal up the breach as soon as he could.

So this is the reason why Mr. Thompson is now talking harmony.

At Trinity Reformed Church.

Rev. George H. Stephens, of Berwick, Pa., preached in Trinity Reformed church Sunday morning and evening. In the morning his discourse was a very plain, practical illustration of the need and helpfulness of having God's Holy Spirit filling the hearts of Christian people, the preacher throwing his whole heart and soul into the sermon. His text was from Zacharian, fourth chapter, the latter part of the sixth verse—"Not by might, nor power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

At the evening service Mr. Stephens made a strong appeal for spreading the Gospel in heathen lands, basing his remarks on Christ's own command as contained in the two verses of the last chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS OF MARRIED LIFE.

Mr. and Mrs. Adam Fritz Celebrate Their Silver Anniversary.

ELEVEN CHILDREN BORN

TO THIS INTERESTING COUPLE, ALL OF WHOM ARE LIVING.

There Are Nine Girls and Two Boys, the Eldest Being About Twenty-three Years of Age and the Youngest is an Infant Named After Queen Victoria—Interesting Account of Family.

Mr and Mrs. Adam Fritz celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage Friday evening at their handsome home on Somerset street. The occasion was a most auspicious one from the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Fritz have raised a large family of children, all of whom are living at home and were present at the anniversary.

Adam Fritz and Charlotte Trust were married in Newark, N. J., June 9th, 1874. Mrs. Fritz was a native of New York city, while Mr. Fritz was born near this city. His father's name was Godfrey Fritz. When quite a young man Mr. Fritz went west and for a time was engaged in the cattle business on the frontier. He returned from the west nearly thirty years ago and took up his residence in this city. It was some time afterwards, however, that he concluded to settle down.

That the union of this couple has been a happy one is apparent to all their numerous friends. In the twenty five years of their married life eleven children have come to bring joy to the household. There are nine girls and two boys. Josephine Augusta, the eldest daughter, was born about 23 years ago. She is an accomplished young woman and counts many of Plainfield's best citizens among her dear friends. The youngest child is an infant about a year old, named Lucelle Victoria, in honor of Queen Victoria's diamond jubilee. The names of the other children in the order of their birth are: Lottie Anna, Caroline, Marguerite, Albert Godfrey, Emma Louise, Mary Elizabeth, Arthur Augustus, Adelaide Barbara, Eveline Antoinette.

All of the children were born in the borough either in the home at present occupied by the family or in the adjoining house, which was the first house in which Mr. and Mrs. Fritz began housekeeping. None of the members of the family have ever experienced any serious illness, the children seeming to have inherited the rugged constitution of their parents. Neither are any of the children married, but make their home with the old folks.

At the silver anniversary of their wedding last night the children had prepared a surprise for their parents, by presenting them with a silver tea service of a handsome pattern. The presentation speech was made by Rev. Geo. Hauser, pastor of the German Reformed church, of North Plainfield. Another interesting feature also of the happy event was the re marriage of the bride and groom of a quarter century ago.

The ceremony was performed by the pastor in the presence of a number of relatives from this city and abroad, besides some of their immediate friends and neighbors. The residence was prettily decorated for the occasion, a profusion of flowers and potted plants being in and about the parlors. An orchestra enlivened the occasion, which was heartily enjoyed by all. Mrs. Fritz was becomingly attired in a gown of lavender organdie, and it is safe to say looked as much the bride as she did on the day she plighted her troth just twenty-five years ago.

Among those present from out of town were Mrs. G. A. Weidermeyer, of Newark; Mrs. Victor Cook, Scranton, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. A. O. Trust, of North Carolina; Mrs. William Bonnemann and family, of Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Burrill, of Brooklyn; Mrs. Josephine Addison and son, of Brooklyn. The happy couple received many congratulations from a host of friends in this city and elsewhere.

Adam Fritz is a character in himself. He is impulsive and to some degree eccentric, but is considered a loyal friend and a fair enemy. He is blunt, outspoken, but withall strictly honest and upright in his dealings with his fellow-man. He boasts that he never did a dishonerable act in his life. By persistent energy he has gained a handsome competency. He is proud of his family, and he has a right to be for they are highly respected.

BIG DAY ON THE HILLSIDE.

THIRTEEN WOMEN CONTEST FOR SCHOONMAKER CUP.

A Member of the Suburban Club, of Elizabeth, Made an Excellent Score on the Mountain Links—Not Two Fair Contestants at the Park Club—Detailed Scores Made in Both Clubs.

The threatening weather of Saturday in a measure accounted for the rather limited attendance at the Park Golf Club course, although there was a good crowd on the links, and many were contesting for the Mrs. C. W. McCutchen cup, which is open to male members. In the ladies competition for the W. J. Buttfield cup there was a small number of contestants, and only two women recorded their scores. Miss Sadie M. Howell made the lowest net score, 60, while Miss Adelaide Ball's net score was 66.

The scores recorded in the contest for the Mrs. McCutchen cup are as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Gus Faber	106	3	102
G. S. Cooley	113	4	119

The course was in fine condition, the light rain having had a good effect on the grass. T. F. Looser, a member of the Suburban Club, of Elizabeth, was a visitor to the course, and he made two rounds in 104, which is one of the best scores made recently.

During the afternoon tea was served in the clubhouse by Mrs. E. T. Douglass, assisted by several members of the club.

Saturday was a big day on the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club grounds and the course was crowded with enthusiastic players. The threatening weather of the morning did not dampen the ardor of the thirteen women who entered the contest for the Schoonmaker cup, which was the event of the day. This was the third contest for the cup, which has to be played for five times. The one winning it one or more times is entitled to enter the final match play. This cup is played for twice a year, spring and fall, and the next play will be in October, while the fifth contest will come off next spring. In all there were nineteen entries for Saturday's play, but only thirteen played. The scores made are as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Miss VanHerwerden	142	36	106
Miss Corbin	126	12	114
Mrs. N. P. Rogers	119	0	119

Miss Cox	193	36	157
Miss Lee	201	36	165

During the afternoon there was the usual large crowd of enthusiasts on the course and the clubhouse was the scene of attraction for a host of people. Steward Ivamy was kept busy serving lunch, and in the evening a large number of people remained for dinner.

PORTO RICAN CHANCES.

DAVID B. GRAY TALKS OF HIS EXPERIENCES ON THE ISLAND.

He Has Just Returned From the New Possession While Acting as Second Engineer on United States Transport Dixie.

David B. Gray, second engineer of the United States transport Dixie, has been visiting his parents, 217 Grant avenue. He has been in Havana, Porto Rico and Manzanas. Mr. Gray spoke enthusiastically to a Press reporter regarding the improvements being made by the United States Government along the water front at Havana. He believes that with the great improvements now under way and the enterprises to be brought into the Islands by Americans it will be the means of making Havana and Porto Rico among the most prosperous of any of the possessions over which Uncle Sam has jurisdiction. Mr. Gray believes that at least Porto Rico will yet prove to be one of the best business centers in the world and a pleasant place in which to live.

He expects to leave on another cruise on or about the 16th inst., but to what country the Dixie will be ordered he has no knowledge.

Joined the Benedicts.

The many friends of Herbert Taylor, of Dunellen, will no doubt be surprised to learn that he has joined the ranks of the benedicts. His bride is none other than Miss Emma Laura Waglow, of New Market, a most estimable young woman with many friends, who will unite in wishing the young couple much joy. The marriage took place at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon and was performed by Rev. J. O McElvey, pastor of the Warren chapel, at the paster's residence. Mrs. Taylor, mother of the groom, witnessed the ceremony.

UNCLE SAM GRANTS THREE MORE CARRIERS

Better Postal Service Promised for Plainfield.

IN EFFECT SEPTEMBER 1ST.

POSTMASTER BIRD RECEIVED THE NEWS THURSDAY.

The Increased Service is Badly Needed in This City, as the Present Force is Unable to Do Satisfactory Work at All Times—Congressman Fowler Deserves Credit for His Work in the Matter.

Plainfield is certainly among the few highly favored places in New Jersey and just now she has plenty of reason to congratulate herself for Uncle Sam has looked down upon her with kindly favor and has granted three additional letter-carriers at the urgent and well-deserving request of Postmaster E. H. Bird. This good news reached Plainfield Thursday when Postmaster Bird received a letter from George M. Allen, of Washington, who is acting first assistant postmaster general. The letter is to the effect that Mr. Bird's request for additional carriers has been re-considered and he is authorized to nominate three additional men for appointment on September 1st of the present year. The letter also states that with the three additional men it is believed that Mr. Bird will be able to give such efficient service in the distribution of mail that it will remove all cause for complaint on the part of Plainfield residents.

Sometime ago Mr. Bird could have secured two additional carriers, but he knowing the condition of affairs was desirous of securing three in all, hence the temporary delay in the appointment of extra men.

It must be stated that to Congressman Fowler is due the entire credit for the increased number of carriers, and he has done exceedingly well by Plainfield. Of course, Postmaster Bird is entitled to credit for his persistent and pressing the needs of the Plainfield service before the Government, and too much cannot be said in praise of the efforts put forth by the Congressman from this district as well as the postmaster. That Plainfield is in need of the three extra men, no one will deny, and as stated in the letter it will have a tendency to remove nearly all if not all of the cause for complaint.

There are four men eligible to appointment, namely: Robert Tingley, Thomas Barnes, John Hinch and Edward Lynch, all of whom are now substitutes. It is wise that the appointment of the new men is not to be made before September 1st, for it made sooner it would interfere materially with the summer vacations of the present force which will consume July and August, and it would leave no one for substitute as at present.

The Government recently sent an inspector to this city to look the ground over and make recommendations, but he did not go over the ground personally, and was not favorable to any increase, in fact he thought Plainfield could only have two deliveries a day. This sort of service would not be tolerated at all in Plainfield, as most everyone realizes. Congressman Fowler made the matter a personal one and showed to the satisfaction of those in the postal department that the extra men were needed and thus they were secured.

With the increase of three men in the service will come a re districting of both carriers and the boroughs. The borough will at least have another carrier, and the territory will be so divided that the best obtainable results will be secured. During July and August the carriers will have vacation and by September 1st everything will be in readiness for the three new men. As yet Postmaster Bird has not decided who he will nominate for the positions, but he will do so in a short time. Any one of the three substitutes are perfectly capable, but it is quite likely that they will be selected according to their time of service.

COMPANY M OFFICERS.

Somerville Guardsmen Choose Their Commissioned Officers.

The election of non-commissioned officers of Company M, Second Regiment, formerly Company H, Third Regiment, in which was several Plainfielders during the late war, has been held. There was quite a spirited contest over the election. The commissioned officers remain the same: Captain, Gilbert S. Cook; First Lieutenant, John E Wherly; Second Lieutenant, Irving Weaver.

The officers elected are: First Sergeant, William Koehler; Second, Joseph Vickery; Third, Edich Houston; Fourth, Roy Houston; Fifth, Julius Sauter; First Corporal, H. MacAlexay; Second, Fred Hcagland; Third, Harry Seals; Fourth, Jacob Smith; Fifth, Bert Richardson.

The company expect their new equipments every day and will soon be measured for their new uniforms.

TO ADVANCE THE LOCAL INTERESTS.

Business Men Formed an Organization Last Night.

THEY ARE FULL OF ENERGY.

SILAS D. DRAKE PROPOSES A PLAN FOR GETTING FACTORIES.

Mayor Smalley Elected President of the Organization Which is to be Known as the "Plainfield Advancement Society"—Committee Appointed to Induce Lehigh to Come Here.

The Plainfield Advancement Society was formally organized Wednesday June 7 at a meeting of the business men of the city in Coward's Hall on East Front street. Though the intense heat kept many away those who did attend the meeting were enthusiastic and energetic over the work which is to be taken up—that of pushing Plainfield's advantages as a business and residential place before the world, as well as inducing people to locate here.

The meeting was called to order by Mayor Smalley, chairman of the previous meeting. He called for the report of the special committee appointed at the other meeting. Mayor Rockefellow, chairman of that committee, reported that it was the recommendation that a permanent organization be formed. The committee had discussed other matters, too, the most important of which was the suggestion of Silas D. Drake. Mr. Drake was called upon to explain his scheme.

Mr. Drake said that he believed that if the organization that was to be formed could induce the location of a few factories in Plainfield it would be the means of every man from the biggest merchant to the most lowly hod carrier, rising up and calling them blessed. What he proposed to do was to outline a plan by which this result could be brought about.

His idea was for the society, after it had got in working order, to negotiate with the owners of the property along the Central Railroad of New Jersey below Clinton avenue, to purchase the land at a reasonable price. Mr. Drake said that as the land is now situated, with no prospect of development into anything valuable because of certain obstacles that prevent such a thing in that section, it ought not to be valued at a high rate. He believed that a stock company could be organized for the purpose of securing control of this property at a nominal sum. After this had been done the thing to do would be to cut it up into lots. Then offer factory sites free to manufacturing concerns that would come here to locate on the property. The factory sites could well afford to be donated, because by the location of industries there workmen with their families would seek homes in that vicinity, the rest of the land would be enhanced in value two or three times more than what was paid for it, and so indirectly the free sites would pay for themselves. Beyond all this would be the inestimable benefit to the city as a whole.

Mr. Drake said that there was a tendency among many manufacturers to get out of the big cities and go to small places. He had found it easy to locate factories at Lincoln, where there was not much of anything, and he was very confident that with all the facilities that Plainfield could offer to such concerns, it would not be a hard job to get several factories to locate here in a short time if the plan was taken up in a thorough manner.

Following the remarks of Mr. Drake the work of forming a permanent organization was taken up. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Mayor N. B. Smalley, of the borough; vice-president, Mayor Geo. W. Rockfellow, of this city; secretary, James E. Martine; treasurer, Joseph B. Coward.

An executive committee of three members, consisting of Senator Charles A. Reed, James E. Martine and Charles Hand, was appointed by the president. Mr. Drake's suggestion was immediately referred to them.

Mr. Martine said that one of the most essential things for a movement that aims to improve and advance Plainfield was advertising. He recommended the appointment of a committee to look after this work. The president appointed W. W. St. John, Frank W. Runyon and Frank Rowley.

The question of railroads was then brought up and discussed enthusiastically for a few minutes. It was the general consensus of opinion that Plainfield was in serious need of better railway facilities in several respects. In this connection Elston M. French, who was chairman of the transportation committee of the Board, of Trade, stated that he believed that the Lehigh Valley Railroad was anxious and willing to build a spur to Plainfield, and that such a result would force the Central Railroad to make concessions very quick. It was decided that two railroad committees would be best—one to work with the Central and the other with the Lehigh.

On the former former Mayor Alexander Gilbert, J. D. Runyon and D. O. Ivins were appointed. On the other Elston M. French, B. A. Hegeman, Jr., and Charles Hand were appointed.

The question of a committee on a constitution and by-laws was then brought up and Mr. Smalley appointed the following to formulate such to be presented at the next meeting: Robert M. Clark, E. E. Pray, C. W. Runyon and W. W. St. John.

It was decided to hold the next meeting Tuesday evening, June 20th, when important matters will be brought up before the society.

FOR THE SWEET TOOTH.

FESTIVAL CONDUCTED BY YOUNG WOMEN'S CLUB.

The Event Held at the Rooms of the Club on West Front Street—Those Who Were in Charge of Affair.

A successful strawberry and ice cream festival and cake and candy sale was held Thursday afternoon and evening by the Young Women's Club at their rooms on West Front street. The pleasant rooms were prettily decorated with flowers, and filled with chairs and small tables. In the backroom was a tempting display of homemade candies, while in the front hall visitors found lemonade and ice water.

Mrs James Everett Kimball was in charge of the cake table during the afternoon, and Miss Kreger in the evening. Miss Whiton presided at the candy table during the afternoon, Miss Moraller relieving her in the evening. Miss Mary Wells and Miss Vroom acted as cashiers, and Miss Eastman and Miss Oakley had charge of the lemonade. The waitresses during the afternoon were Miss Whiton, Miss Cairnes, Miss Oakley and Miss Eastman, and during the evening Miss Konzert, Miss Shannon, Miss Feller, Miss Kane and Miss Christiansen. Miss Florence Waring was chairman of the decorating committee and Miss Lillian Estelle Oakley of the refreshment committee. A thriving business was done by the young women during both afternoon and evening, the proceeds of the affair being about $20.

MISS ROCAP'S SCHOOL CLOSED.

Appropriate Exercises Marked the End of the Year.

Miss Rocap's school for boys closed Friday, completing the eleventh year. The walls of the school room were hung with papers, showing the daily work of the pupils. They were remarkably well done. An impromptu programme was given for the parents as follows: Reading, "John Smith," George B. Yerkes; recitation, selections from Hiawatha, T. Murray Rushmore; recitation, "Tom's Soldiers," Frank A. Pope, Jr.; concert recitation, by school; reading, "The Village Blacksmith," Negley Farson; recitation, "Bout Twenty Miles Away," Howard J. Runyon, Jr.; reading, "Florence Nightingale," by Gordon Stuart; concert recitation, by school; reading, "The Boyhood of Grant," Walter C. Scott; reading, "The Drum," T. Murray Rushmore; reading, "The Language of Birds," Frank Pope, Jr.

LAST OF THE SEASON.

Pleasant Final Entertainment at the Park Club.

A large audience gathered at the Park Club last Thursday and enjoyed one of the best entertainments ever given by the club. This being the last affair for the season the house committee, consisting of Elston M. French, E. T. Wilson and H. D. Hibbard, provided an entertainment of high grade. Lieut. Hart, of the Naval Reserves, succeeded admirably in keeping the audience in the best of humor so that they entirely forgot the warm weather. His humorous stories and songs were fully enjoyed.

Miss Grace Overton also entertained the audience with a number of her best readings, which she gave in her usual pleasing manner. Altogether the affair was one of great pleasure and the committee was congratulated upon their efforts.

Mr. Anthony in Charge.

Endeavorers and those who expect to attend the Detroit convention of the State organizations, July 5th to 11th, are reminded that E. E. Anthony, of 444 West Front street, is chairman of the transportation committee, and any information as to details should be sent to him and he will cheerfully reply, and not to Rev. Ruby Warne, of Trenton, as published in several papers in the vicinity of Plainfield.

A Book Typewriter.

Surrogate Spencer has a book typewriter in use at his office, which is admirably adapted for keeping the records of the office in compact, concise and legible form, printing everything with such clear impression as to render the reading easy to any one and at the same time taking up much less space in the books than ordinary handwriting, however neatly that may be done.

JUST IN HIS TEENS; ENDED HIS OWN LIFE.

Fourteen Years Old, Westfield Boy Committed Suicide.

HUNG HIMSELF IN CELLAR.

FOUND BY HIS MOTHER AT 11 O'CLOCK THURSDAY NIGHT.

Suicide Carefully Planned, But No Apparent Reason for It—Doctor Said He Had Been Dead for Several Hours—Mother Crazed Over the Sad Fatality—Had Pains in His Head.

Without any apparent reason for his desperate act, Percy Cox, the fourteen-year-old son of the J. T. Cox, a carpenter, residing on New York avenue, committed suicide Thursday by hanging himself from a beam in the cellar of his father's house. The suicide was evidently carefully planned by the lad.

Thursday afternoon the boy left his home, and when he did not return for supper his parents thought that he was playing about town somewhere and would return in time to go to bed at a seasonable hour. His mother waited until 11 o'clock for him, but he did not put in an appearance. Then she instituted a search for him about the place. As a last resort she went into the cellar. There she was horrified to see, by the dim light of the lamp that she carried, the limp body of the boy hanging from a beam in the cellar. She immediately screamed for help and George Peak and C. A. Brown, neighbors, responded.

They found that the lad had driven a nail into the beam of the ceiling and taken a chain eighteen inches long and hooked an end link into it. Then he had wound the chain around his neck, and caught it in a loop with another nail. The distance to the floor was too short for him to hang suspended full length and he had evidently curled his legs up so as not to touch the cellar bottom. In this position he had slowly strangled to death. The chain had cut deep into his neck.

Dr. Sinclair was called after the body was taken down by the neighbors. He said that the boy had been dead for several hours. The mother was crazed over the discovery and is prostrated today.

A week ago the boy got into a fight with a schoolmate and was hit over the head with a heavy stick. Since then he has complained of pains in his head. It is thought that this might have turned his mind and caused him to end his own life.

A DISTINGUISHED PORTO RICAN.

Was the Guest of Dr. Carroll—Pleased With Plainfield.

Recently Senor Lucas Armadeo, of Porto Rico, visited Plainfield, accompanied by his son and an interpreter, and was the guest of Hon. H. K. Carroll, U. S. Special Commissioner to Porto Rico. He remained here one night. Senor Armadeo is a wealthy planter, and has an estate worth $150,000. His son is to enter a college in this country.

The Senor was driven about Plainfield and expressed the opinion that it is the most charming place he has visited. During his stay an interview was had before a stenographer and the statement of this most intelligent person added to the collection gathered from Porto Ricans. The conversation, questions and answers, being made through the interpreter, as Senor Armadeo speaks only Spanish.

ROAD TO BE BUILT.

An All-Rail Route From Paterson to Trenton.

J. E. Mellick, who is promoting a scheme to build a railroad from Paterson to Morristown and thence to Somerville to connect for Trenton, writes that the rumor that the project has been abandoned is untrue. "The route," he says, "would only require seventeen miles to be built to make an all-rail route from Paterson direct to Trenton, connecting the county seats of Passaic, Morris, Somerset, Hunterdon and Mercer counties, as well as the State Capital with a short rail line, thus saving both time and money to the traveling public. I wish simply to say that the road will be built as surveyed by me and that good financial parties have endorsed the scheme."

PITY FOR CONVICT WON HIM FREEDOM.

John Towers Released in Union County Court.

ACCUSED OF HORSE THEFT.

STOLE A RIG FROM DAN ROBERTS FOUR YEARS AGO.

Former Prosecutor Marsh, Who Secured the Indictment, Appeared for the Prisoner and Made a Plea for Clemency—Judge Thought the Ends of Justice Had Been Satisfied Already.

John S. Tower, who in May, 1896, was indicted for the larceny of a horse and carriage from Dan S. Roberts, of Plainfield, was arraigned before Judge Vail Thursday morning and sentence was suspended.

The case of Tower is one of peculiar interest, and has no parallel in the history of the criminal court of this county. Through the courtesy of Prosecutor English, former Senator Fred C. Marsh, who was prosecutor when Tower was indicted, was permitted to appear both on the side of justice and mercy.

Tower is 28 years of age. He has a genteel appearance, was dressed in light summer attire, and is probably the most intelligent and most interesting prisoner who was ever committed to the jail in this county. He is an electrical engineer, and an inventor of useful electrical appliances. In 1896 he was arrested in White Plains, N. Y., for the crime of horse stealing. There was a charge against him for offences in New York State, as well as the Roberts robbery. He was convicted of the New York robbery, but, as Mr. Marsh stated, the judge had doubts of the prisoner's guilt, and set the verdict aside. Then, when the requisition for the Roberts case arrived, Tower, rather than come back to Jersey, pleaded guilty to the New York charge, and he was sentenced to four years in sing Sing.

During his imprisonment he was a most exemplary prisoner. He was employed in the electric plant. He invented several valuable appliances; one is an automatic fire-alarm for hotels and another an incandescent lamp which renews its carbon.

Tower, in protesting his innocence, said that the horses were both stolen by a man named Hastings, who kept an exchange stable in Rochester, N. Y. While Tower was in prison he received a letter from Hastings, who asserted that he was dying at Cripple Creek, Col. In this letter Hastings made confession of the crimes charged against Tower. A charitable lady in Westchester, N. Y., went west and is now in Colorado looking up the history of Hastings.

Two months prior to his arrest in 1896, Tower married a very estimable young woman, and their child has never been out of the prisoner's sight. The young wife believed in her husband, and she had all things in readiness to welcome him to a pleasant home last week, when the prison doors were to be opened to him. But Prosecutor Marsh, who had kept record of the case, had Chief Tenney at the prison, and Tower was brought to this city Monday last and lodged in jail.

Tower's wife was in court yesterday morning, and she was accompanied by Judge Gibney, of the Westchester county bar. Through the courtesy of the Court, at request of Mr. Marsh, Judge Gibney was allowed to speak in behalf of Tower, and he made a very affecting plea, especially in behalf of the weeping young woman, the prisoner's wife.

Mr. Marsh also spoke eloquently for the prisoner, and said in his experience in court he never knew public officials to be so unanimous in saying that clemency should be extended a prisoner. If Tower was given his liberty he could provide for himself and family and benefit the world by his inventions.

Judge Vail, in view of the circumstances, said the court was satisfied that the ends of justice had been met in the punishment already inflicted and he suspended sentence.

The prisoner was placed under $500 bonds, his own recognizance being accepted, and he was released. He embraced his wife, and the scene was very affecting.

An Oratorio Concert.

An oratorio concert will be given by the choir of the First Baptist church in behalf of Muhlenberg Hospital on the evening of Tuesday, June 27th, at which time "The Stabat Mater," Rossini, and "The Redemption," Gounod, will be given under the personal direction of E. J. Fitzhugh, conductor. The entire proceeds of the concert will be given to Muhlenberg Hospital, and this being a worthy object no doubt the patronage will be very large. Seats are now on sale at Armstrong's, Shaw's and Randolph's pharmacies. The advertisement appears in another part of the paper.

Justice and Mrs. T. B. Crossley, of Duer street, are entertaining their daughter, Mrs. C. E. Scudder and son, of Newark.

IN THE THICKEST OF THE FILIPINO WAR.

Billy Egbert Tells of Soldiers Life in the Phillippines.

FUTILITY OF PARLEYING.

SAYS THAT THERE IS TOO MUCH DICKERING WITH "AGGIE."

The Only Way the War Can be Stopped is by the American Army Going in and Licking the Filipinos From the Word Go—Interesting Anecdote of General Charles King, Commander.

William H. Egbert, of this city, who has been in the Phillippine Islands for several months past as a private in Company L, First Washington Volunteers, has written a long letter to J. F. MacDonald, of East Front street, concerning his experiences and observations there. A portion of it is as follows:

Since my last letter to you on cartridge boxes we have had busy times, and have sustained losses that make the boys anxious to hear the word that the regiment is to be ordered home.

While lying at the position named we lost several men and had a number wounded. We were there about three weeks, and it was a continual skirmish day and night, and while we inflicted severe loss on the enemy our own losses only made us the more anxious to advance.

The forward movement brought us first to Guadalcupe, where one of the finest churches and convents on the Island was destroyed; from there to Santan, Pateron, Tagung and Pasig. All these places were taken in the order named in the course of three or four days.

At no time have we met with a repulse, invariably driving the enemy with severe loss; and yet the boys are not contented. Drive the Filipinos for miles and return to our lines, and the next morning find them back pecking at us with their Mausers, and all that has been accomplished counts for naught; summed up as a victory for us, but still several more good brave blueshirted boys laid to rest.

Only day before yesterday we lost four killed and had twelve wounded.

I wish some of the "powers that be" were here instead of in the States talking "Parley" and "Conciliation."

Both are very high sounding in theory but devilish poor articles in practice. There is a rumor afloat today to the effect that "Aggie" is negotiating for terms of peace; but we treat it as an army rumor, pure and simple. To us who have been in the field constantly for three months, the only peace, that is, lasting peace, that will come, will be that peace that is effected by a fight to a finish, not by talk and parley.

It would take an endless amount of space for me to write in detail of the many brave and daring acts that have been accomplished, not only by individuals but by companies, regiments, in fact by the entire Eighth Army Corps.

Let me mention one as a sample of many. Pateron is situated on an island about one half mile wide and three miles in length. When it become necessary to land troops there two companies, L and D, of the First Washington, crossed in two canoes, ten in each canoe, five trips being required, landing and driving out the enemy, knowing that there were 2,000 men a thousand and fifteen hundred troops there armed with Mauser rifles of the latest pattern.

We have had for a Brigade Commander General Charles King, prince of men. He returns to the States in a few days and sorry we are to lose him.

One sentence of his at the battle of Santa Ana will never be forgotten by the men of his command.

Sitting on his horse about the centre of his line, the boys by some natural instinct began moving forward, no command had been given to charge, but the move at first became faster. General King called "halt," the men kept moving, again he called "halt," still the men advanced. "Halt" he cried a third time and the men were almost at a charge—the General yelled "Go on, I will give one command that you will obey."

The care that has been given us by the Government I am glad to say has been excellent, we are not cursed with a "beef scandal" and when the fact is taken into consideration that we are in a strange climate 7,000 miles from home, nothing but praise can be given to the authorities.

I have thought often and seriously over what is called the "Phillippine question," "expansion," and what the papers term "Imperialism," and the more I study and think over the matter the farther I seem to be from a settled conviction. These Islands are wonderfully fertile. Timber of great value is here and there can be no doubt as to the existance of mineral, how reliable and in what quantities cannot at present be learned, Spanish records are of no use in making any estimate as to the wealth of the Islands in regard to any industry. Rope manufacture has been a leading industry and could be largely increased. The sugar and factory industries have given employment to large numbers of people; the culture of coffee will in time be a leading feature, and the rice crop is one of the mainstays of the Islands.

All of these industries are, so to speak, in their infancy and with the introduction of modern methods would be vastly increased, and there is no question as to the fixture of the Islands under the proper government. As I wrote you before the people are naturally quick to learn and are more intelligent than is generally believed.

I believe it will take years and entail a heavy expense before the Islands are what they should be—to be called a part of the grand old states of the Union.

When a lasting peace is declared there will be a fine field here for investment and business. But no man should come here without capital and plenty of nerve. If I had sufficient capital I should remain and follow my old calling of mining. But the question is "How long will it be before the U. S. Government will have things settled?"

The trouble is that our people move too slow. Quick and decisive action is what is necessary—some one whip the Filipinos into subjection at once or else "back down." With all the drawbacks I am strongly tempted to remain anyway and see the thing out. There is a smack of adventure about the future that seems to fit me. I shall, however, be governed by circumstances. Write to me whenever you can, and any old paper will be pounced on as a rare treat.

Very truly yours,
Wm. H. Egbert,
Manila.

C. E. CONVENTION.

Arrangements for the New Jersey Delegates to Detroit.

The Transportation Committee of the New Jersey Christian Endeavor Union has announced an itinerary for those attending the Detroit convention from July 5th to July 11th. The party from this section will leave the Pennsylvania Railroad station at Jersey City at 8 a. m. on July 3, and after joining a party at Bethlehem will arrive at Niagara Falls on the same evening. They will spend July 4th at the Falls, starting the following morning for Detroit.

The committee expects to be able to sell tickets for $22.50, including railroad fare both ways, hotel expenses at Niagara and a trolley ride to Lewiston and return by the Gorge route. Rooms have been secured for fifty persons at the Detroit Hotel at $1 and $1.50 per day, while those desiring can be accommodated at the higher grade hotels.

Those wishing to remain in Detroit after the convention to take the lake trips, or for other reasons, can have their tickets extended until August 31st, and the committee will make them a rebate of $3 on the price paid for ticket, by reason of their not using Watkins Glen on the return.

Information as to the details of the trip can be obtained from Rev. D. Ruby Warne, of Trenton Junction.

WANT $400 FOR A FOUNTAIN.

Loyal Temperance Legion Asking for Contribution.

The Loyal Temperance Legion, of this city, propose through their efforts to erect a public drinking fountain, to be located on one of the principal streets in this city, at a cost of not less than $400, and frequently entertainments are held to raise money for that purpose. Cards have been distributed about the city asking the recipient to help provide a place for thirsty men and animals, thereby meeting the demands of a long-needed charity. Pledges or checks will be received by the treasurer of the fountain fund, Mrs. D. S. Miller, 443 Orchard place. Mrs. E. K. Case is secretary of the Legion.

Contracts for New Church.

The contracts for erecting the new church edifice for the worshippers at Hope chapel have been given out and the work will be started at once. Seaman Williams will do the mason work, John Abbott the carpenter work, while Woolston & Buckle will do the painting. The wood will be done under the direct personal supervision of A. L. C. Marsh, the architect, and it is estimated that it will take five months to complete the building, which will seat about two hundred and fifty people.

Long Service Ended.

Charles D. Tull, who has been employed as clerk in the office of Superintendent Freeh, of the Central Railroad, has resigned his position. Mr. Tull has been connected with the company for thirty-eight years.

Pythian Decoration Day.

PRETTY SOCIETY EVENT.

MARRIAGE OF A POPULAR YOUNG COUPLE OF THIS CITY.

Frederick Napp Fish, Jr., and Miss Brakeley Abernethy, of This City, Made Man and Wife Wednesday June 7th—Beautiful Floral Display —Elaborate Costumes—Costly Presents.

One of the society events of the early summer months took place Wednesday, June 7th, in this city, when Miss Netta Brakeley Abernethy was joined in marriage with Frederick Knapp Fish, Jr. Miss Abernethy is the youngest daughter of Brigadier-General H. H. Abernethy and a member of the Board of Police Commissioners, but whose home is in this city during the summer months. She is a young woman of much personal charm and many accomplishments, and is a niece of Dr. F. H. Brakeley.

The groom is a popular young man and a representative of one of the most prominent families in Plainfield.

The ceremony was performed at about 4 o'clock at the home of the bride, 816 Seventh street, in the presence of the immediate relatives of the contracting parties and a few intimate friends.

Rev. J. W. Richardson, of the Park Avenue Baptist church performed the ceremony.

The floral decorations were beautiful and in perfect taste. While taking their vows the bride and groom stood beneath a bridal bower erected in the wheel window at the west end of the parlor. Suspended from the bower, which was formed of evergreens and southern smilax, was a wishbone made of white satin ribbon.

In the hallway was arranged a profusion of choice flowers, whose fragrance permeated the atmosphere of the handsome home. They consisted of peonies and daisies, while potted plants and ferns were conspicuous in various rooms throughout the lower part of the house. The stair rail was trimmed with smilax, while in the dining hall on the mantle was banked with American beauty roses, making a pretty effect and setting off to good advantage the handsomely decorated table with its costly silver and cut glassware.

Concealed behind a profusion of palms was stationed the well known orchestra of Prof. Cramer, of Jersey City, whose soft strains of music floated through the rooms after the ceremony and while congratulations were being extended.

The bride was richly gowned in a robe of white thread lace, an importation from Vienna. It was richly trimmed with white chiffon and tulle. She also wore a white veil caught together with orange blossoms and a diamond crescent, the gift of her affianced. She carried an exquisite bouquet composed of bridal roses and lilies of the valley.

Miss Katharine Shafer, of Brooklyn, was maid-of-honor. Her gown was of pink point de esprit with pink museline desoire over pink silk and decorated with garlands of beauty roses upon the overskirt. She also carried a bouquet of roses.

Lambert Fish, of this city, brother of the groom, was best man. The ushers were James Middledith, of Plainfield, Griswald Thompson, of New York, and Eugene Smith, of Orange.

A reception, extending from 5 to 7 o'clock, was given the guests after the ceremony.

In an upper reception room an extensive array of numerous, beautiful and costly presents were arranged for inspection.

Mr. and Mrs. Fish left on an early train to enjoy their honeymoon at the seashore. Upon their return they will reside in this city.

Case Discontinued.

The action brought in the District Court by Miss Mary Philbrook, the woman lawyer, and which was to have been argued Thursday before Judge Atwater at Elizabeth, has been discontinued. The suits in question had been brought against certain parties in Plainfield on contract. Miss Philbrook's suit was for damages alleged for illegally detaining goods on which she claimed to hold mortgages. Attorney Anglesman was counsel for the defendants.

An Exhaustive Report.

Hon. H. K. Carroll, commissioner to Porto Rico, who is now compiling his report to be submitted to President McKinley, estimates that the report will contain 500,000 words. It will be a most complete and exhaustive report.

Miss Agnes A. Minford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Minford, of Watchung avenue, who is attending school at "The Elms," Springfield, Mass., is expected to return for the summer vacation the last of this month.

SENATORS SEEK SECOND TERMS.

Aspect of the Situation in Several of the Counties.

THIRD TERM NOT ALLOWED.

SENATOR CROSS WILL PROBABLY BE RENOMINATED.

A Story Set in Circulation That He May be Appointed Chancery Clerk, But it is Said There is No Truth in It—Senator Ketcham, of Essex, Has Disappeared From List of Aspirants.

All of the Republican State Senators whose terms are to expire with the year are, with the exception of Ketcham, of Essex, candidates for re-election. Francis, of Monmouth; Cross, of Union; Reed, of Somerset; Stanger, of Gloucester; Miller, of Salem, and Johnson, of Camden, hope to help re-elect General Sewell to the United States Senate next January, and to be permitted to represent their respective constituencies at Trenton for another three years.

Ketcham's disappearance from the list of aspirants is because of his having been accorded two terms, and a third term is not to be thought of for even so capable and serviceable a man as he has proven himself to be. Even second terms in elective offices with three years of tenure are discouraged by the politicians, and some of the ambitious Senators may find their wings clipped by the primary voters.

Cross, of Union, may, however, be considered as an exception to the rule governing renominations. He has not had a full term. He went into the Senate last winter only to serve the last year of Governor Voorhees' unexpired term. Party usage—ordinary civility, in fact—entitled him to a nomination at the hands of the coming convention. It will not be possible to defeat him of it if he goes seriously into the poll. But, then, there are some folk in Union who would like to defeat him, and the story that he is to be made Clerk of the Court of Chancery by Governor Voorhees seems to have been set in circulation by them with a view to weakening his candidacy for the Senate. Those who are closest to him talk in a way indicating that he has no idea of withdrawing from the political contest.

It is not likely that Francis will meet with serious opposition in Monmouth. This is due chiefly to the fact that Monmouth is a Democratic county and the belief that a Republican nomination is not worth much there. At the same time the history of the county shows that the county has been more frequently represented in the Senate by Republicans than by Democrats. Francis, Bradley, Brown, Nevius and Applegate were her spokesmen on the senate floor for twelve of the last twenty years, and even the Democrats who have been seat to Trenton by her have been of the ultra-conservative kind, like the late Dr. Challis and George C. Beekman. Henry S. Terhune is the only out-and-out Democrat who has represented her since 1880, and when he ran for re-election, in 1893, Bradley defeated him. Mr. Terhune is still regarded as one of the strongest Democrats in the county. The certainty that Terhune is to be made the Democratic standard-bearer next fall may have frightened off all the ambitious Republicans and left Francis in command of the Republican field.

Dr. Stanger is threatened with some opposition to his candidacy in Gloucester. This is Speaker David O. Watkins' county. The Speaker was understood to be ambitious to succeed Stanger. When he was provided with the position of United States District Attorney that ended his candidacy, of course, and it was assumed that it also ended the opposition to Stanger. But Watkins no sooner retired than he shoved Pierson, the young man who has sat at his side in the Speaker's chair as a private secretary, forward as his substitute. Just what that hostile demonstration is going to amount to it is not possible as yet to say, but it does look virile, and the likelihood is that Stanger will be favored with a second nomination.

The conditions as to Essex and Somerset have undergone no recent change, except that Reed seems to have become more assured than ever of the nomination in Somerset. Clerk in Chancery Thompson, who was understood to be in opposition to him, seems to half concede now that he will be given a chance for a second term. It remains to be seen what the nomination will be worth to him. The factional split among the Somerset Republicans is a very serious one, and the Republicans are not so sure of carrying the county after all.

The Rest of June to Settle In.

The Plainfield people affected by the Martin Act have the balance of this month in which to settle their accounts with the collector, James A. Martin. Of late there have been few kicks, and generally speaking people have been settling up rather prompt.

"GOOD-BYE, YOU'LL SEE ME NO MORE," HE SAID

Bold Escape of Constable Gittleson's Prisoner.

HE TOOK RAPID LEG BAIL.

THE CONSTABLE UNABLE TO CATCH THE FUGITIVE.

Charles Bogart Accused of Assault and Battery—Constable Did Not Put Handcuffs on the Man, and as a Result He is Now Unable to Produce Him in Court as the Law Directs Him.

Charles Bogart, a big, good-natured young fellow, is a fugitive from justice. Just now he is wanted badly by Constable Gjettleson, from whose custody he made good his escape about 8:45 o'clock Tuesday a. m. Bogart was arrested Monday afternoon at Dunellen by the constable, who had a warrant for Bogart's apprehension, which had been issued by Justice of the Peace Mosher, of this city.

The charge against Bogart was assault and battery, preferred by Abram Wolfe, who charges this young Hercules with giving him a thrashing last Saturday night. The accused was lockup over night at the station house. At 8:30 o'clock Tuesday a. m. the constable arraigned his prisoner before Justice Mosher. Counselor William G. DeMeza was on hand to look after Bogart's interests, and at the lawyer's request an adjournment was granted until 9 o'clock that afternoon. Constable Gjettleson then started to take his man back to the lockup. Just as the officer and his prisoner reached the foot of the stairway, the latter was suddenly seized with an inspiration and made a dash for liberty.

"Goodby," said Bogart. "I'll see you later!"

Before the astonished guardian of the law could recover from his surprise the prisoner was sprinting up East Front street. By the time Constable Gjettleson could catch his breath and set his wits to work the big fellow had a start of several hundred yards. He was soon lost to sight, and all efforts of the officer to keep up with him were futile.

The first knowledge Justice Mosher had of the fact that Bogart had eluded the officer was when the constable came puffing up the long flight of stairs and dropping exhausted into a chair. Exclaimed: "He's gone! I couldn't catch him."

It is believed that Bogart is well out of the State by this time and will not be apprehended. When arraigned before the justice it is alleged that Bogart threatened Justice Mosher with bodily harm should he send him to jail.

Bogart has the reputation of being a hard character, and while in the station house is believed to have tampered with the padlock on the cell door, as it was with difficulty that the lock was opened when the constable went after him this morning.

RUNAWAY GIRL HOME.

JOSEPHINE SEADER TAKEN IN CUSTODY IN NEWARK.

Sent to Her Parents in North Plainfield—Says That She Does Not Know Where Mary Peterson Has Gone.

Josephine Seader, the 14-year-old daughter of Peter Seader, of North Plainfield, was arrested in Newark Monday by Policeman Early who found her on the street. When arraigned before Judge Lambert the girl admitted that she had run away from her home. She had been employed as a domestic by a family in North Plainfield but becoming dissatisfied with her work decided to seek a new home in another city.

Josie induced her friend, Mary Peterson, an orphan who lived with her uncle, William Pierson, to accompany her. They left home Sunday afternoon. Their absence greatly alarmed their parents and friends and a general alarm was sent out. It appears that the girls took a train for Newark.

When Josie left home Sunday she told the lady for whom she worked as domestic that she was going to the Mission Sunday-school. It appears that the girl parted company soon after reaching Newark and the whereabouts of the Peterson girl are unknown. The Seader girl was sent home to her parents.

Likes the Scenery.

John H. Wyeth, of Grove street, is the proud owner of a handsome rubber tired runabout and a stylish road horse. He is very fond of the scenery along the Raritan river and if he is able to take a vacation from his business during the hot weather he will probably spend it in Somerset county, near the county seat.

Mrs. DeMeza's Sister Dead.

Mrs. Samuel Gibson, of Paterson, a sister of Mrs. Charlotte DeMeza, of West Second street, this city, died Monday after a short illness. She is survived by a husband and one child. Mrs. Gibson was well known in this city where she had many friends.

WATSON DIDN'T SWEAR

One Time When He Badly Needed Assistance and Got It.

HE IS NOT A "CUSSER."

Says Hard Language Affords a Vent For Wrath Which is Better than Breaking Heads.

Boe'n's Mate Fuller the Champion Profane Man of Uncle Sam's Navy—With an Artistic Vocabulary Which Excited the Wonderment of All Within Hearing Distance—Tackled a Jammed Cartridge.

John Crittenden Watson does not belong to the list of "cussing officers," yet as a man-o'-war skipper he never had a man of his ship's company aft for swearing, nor was he singularly indulgent of the hard swearers forward.

"Hard language helps a man along occasionally," he has been known to say to one of his deck officers upon overhearing a stream of maledictions from the lips of some old flat foot working at a stubborn job forward, "but it never helps for the man to work off their wrath over fouled anchor chains in cuss words than to take it out of each other's hides."

Aboard one of the ships under Watson's command there was an old boy's mate named Fuller, who had the call throughout the whole navy as the champion profane man of the government's fleet of men-of-war, never raised his voice when he swore. He would simply stand back and quietly regard the inanimate object of his wrath—a bent belaying pin perhaps or a slack ridge rope—and then he would open up in an ordinary conversational tone. But the utterances he gave vent to were sulphurous. It always took Fuller a good five minutes to work off what he considered the necessary number of remarks on such occasions, and it always seemed, when he was through that he had quite exhausted his whole vocabulary of profanity. But this was a mistake. Every next time anything went wrong with a bit of Fuller's gear he would start in on a new line that would contain absolutely not a single repetition of any of his previous performances. It was always a source of wonder to Fuller's shipmates, even the old timers, where he picked up the new ones, all of which were of startling originality and force.

These shipmates related only one instance in which he found himself at a loss for words. He was with a bunting party from his ship, marching on the outskirts of Chemulpo, Korea. He stubbed his toe on a loose boulder in the road and fell on his face in the dust. He picked himself up and looked at the road. He opened his mouth to say something, but he had no words. He was dumb with wrath. Two or three times he attempted to begin, but it was no go. He was struck for once, so he pulled out a pistol and deliberately fired it into the air five times. He had to express his feelings in some way.

When Fuller was serving aboard Watson's ship, he was in good shape, and his frequent quiet outbursts upon the forward part of the ship keyed up with wonder as to what was coming next. One morning at big gun drill Captain Watson himself was superintending the exercise. One of the wooden cartridges became jammed in the breech of the 6-inch rifle to which he was devoting most of his attention. He wouldn't permit any of the gunner's mates around him to attempt to loosen the cartridge, but essayed the job himself. He tugged at the jammed cartridge and broke his finger nails over it, but it refused to come out. It was a pretty hot morning on deck, and the perspiration began to roll off his face in streams, but he persisted in trying to work out the cartridge, but looked as if he would like to say a bean were he a swearing man, but he wasn't a swearing man. When he had been at it for fifteen minutes or more the jammed cartridge with no success, he looked pretty helpless and miserable. He gave one final tug, but the stuck cartridge remained in the gun's breech. The skipper gathered himself together, mopped his forehead and looked at the gun.

"Confound it all," he broke out, "where's Fuller? Send me Fuller, somebody."

Fuller was on hand directly. He wasn't a gunner's mate, and he had nothing to do with the guns, but Watson wanted Fuller to tackle the jammed cartridge all the same.

"Fuller," said Watson, "try and get that dummy out of that gun."

Fuller looked at the stuck cartridge, and Watson retreated to the starboard side of the quarter deck. Fuller made two or three claws at the wooden cartridge, but it wouldn't come out. A gunner's mate could have got it out in a jiffy, but Fuller wasn't in that line of the service. He tugged away, but it was no go. Watson stood regarding the horizon on the starboard side of the quarter deck. Fuller spat on his hands and made one more try. The dummy didn't move a tenth of an inch. Then Fuller mopped his forehead with his handkerchief, clapped his cap on the back of his head, and opened up. It was great work, this performance of Fuller's, and no mistake. He eclipsed all of his former efforts. He stood with his hands on his sides, looking at the gun breech and saying things at it that no Morgan or Kidd or Teach or other brazen defying pirate could ever have equaled. The men stood around, looking at Fuller in open mouthed amazement. They couldn't make out what he was saying. They were all in English, but the combinations were weird. The peroration was frightful, although delivered in the mildest tone imaginable.

When Fuller finished, he mopped his forehead with his neckerchief again and walked over to his commanding officer, who was looking over the starboard rail, apparently thinking deeply. Fuller saluted.

"It's stuck proper, sir," said Fuller. "I can't get it adrift."

"Well," said Watson. "I didn't think you could, Fuller, but I needed you. Thanks. You did very well. Go forward."

A FAMOUS POISON CASE.

Anna Maria Zwanziger is a Name of Unpleasant Prominence in Crime.

SHE LIVED IN GERMANY.

Had a Reputation for Honesty and Probity Which Enabled Her to Secure Victims Very Easily.

Mental Constitution Peculiar—Had Passion for Poisoning—Her Crimes Only "Slight Errors"—Never Expressed Remorse or Repentance—Fortunate She was Discovered as She Could Not Control Passion.

In the so-called renaissance period of European civilization poison served many a purpose of political intrigue and personal vengeance. The demise of a victim was rarely followed by a judicial investigation save in instances where the ecclesiastical authorities found an opportunity to intervene.

In the early part of the nineteenth century there was a series of murders committed by a woman who have given to the name of Anna Maria Zwanziger an unpleasant prominence in the annals of crime. Anna Maria Zwanziger, nee Schoubeen, as she called herself, was living in 1807 in Baireuth supporting herself by knitting. Her reputation for probity and her exemplary mode of life induced Justice Glaser, who was at that time separated from his wife, to take her as his housekeeper in 1808. In July of that year Glaser reconciled to his wife, through the efforts, it seems, of Anna Schoubeen, but within a month after the wife's return she was suddenly taken sick, though a strong and healthy woman, and died in a few days. Anna now left Glaser's service and went to live in the house with Justice Grohmann. He was a sufferer from gout and was confined to his bed. In May, 1809 after an illness of eleven days, accompanied by strange symptoms, he died, and his housekeeper appeared inconsolable. Her good name and her skill as a nurse soon procured her another place, this time at Magistrate Gebhard's house, as nurse for his wife. Soon after her advent, Mme. Gebhard was seized with a violent illness and died in great agony. At different times within the next few months curious and suspicious symptoms—vomiting, anguish, etc.—visited several persons in the house, guests as well as members of the household.

Then a superstitious fear of the woman's unlucky presence, gradually deepening into distrust and suspicion, spread in the neighborhood, and Gebhard was induced to dismiss Anna from his service. He gave her, however, a written character for honesty and fidelity. But it was at her departure that strangers' influence were noticed. On the morning of that day, it was afterward remembered, she had exceeded the usual limits of her duties; she had filled the salt box from the barrel and had taken pains to make for the two maids some coffee, which they drank. Leaving the house with every sign of cheerfulness and affection, she took Gebhard's child in her arms as she said farewell and gave it a biscuit dipped in milk. Scarcely half an hour had elapsed since her departure when the child became alarmingly ill; in a few hours her mother was dead. Still in similar way, and the kitchen salt box, with the barrel, proved, upon examination, to contain a quantity of arsenic. When the house was thoroughly searched afterward a packet of arsenic was found in her pocket, and upon exhuming the bodies of Glaser, Grohmann and Gebhard distinct traces of arsenic were discovered in two of the three corpses. She was taken before a magistrate, but although the usual forms of criminal criminal procedure were strikingly brought out.

The circumstantial evidence of murder against her was by no means not strong. Now, the favorite German mode of obtaining results in criminal cases is by some means or other to extort a confession. This was here, evidently, only a confession could furnish the necessary evidence. According to the most approved methods, therefore, she was subjected to a long series of rigid examinations alone in the presence of the judge and a notary. All the cunning and subtlety of the judge were brought to bear, in order to entrap her into a confession, but for nearly six months, from October 29, 1809, until April 16, 1810, she absolutely denied every form of the charge against her. The fact that poison had been found in the two corpses was not announced to Anna Zwanziger until April 16. This produced the desired effect, for after two hours of stubborn composure, she broke down, wept, wrung her hands, and at length confessed to all the charges against her, add to several other crimes not hitherto dreamed of as natural deaths. On September 11, 1811, she suffered death at the block, and her name is celebrated throughout Germany as the most infamous poisoner ever known.

There can be no doubt that her mental constitution was peculiar. She had a passion for poisoning. She spoke of her deeds as only "slight errors" and "trifling offenses," never expressing any remorse or repentance. It was indeed fortunate for mankind, as she said, that she was to die, for she never could have ceased to poison.

A Deep Scheme

Together by our fire we sat.
Her hands were clasped in mine.
And in her musing face was that
Which spake a thought divine.

She turned a fearless glance to me
Which proved her trusting soul,
And then she breathed a little subtlety,

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT BEING PUSHED ALONG

Old Monument Committee Asked to Co-operate.

NUCLEUS FOR A BIG FUND.

OLD ASSOCIATION HAD BETWEEN $2,000 AND $3,000 PLEDGED.

Two Thousand Circulars Have Been Sent Out Appealing to Citizens for Subscriptions, But the Responses Thus Far Have Not Been Very Liberal—Miniature Monument May Be Secured.

Last Monday at the home of Rev. W. O. O'Donnell there was a meeting of the soldiers' monument committee. All the members were present and it can be considered that progress was made along the lines as originally mapped out.

In the first place it was decided that an effort should be made to have the old monument association call a meeting as soon as possible and to learn exactly what the old association did, what money they have in ther possession, and to secure a list of those who subscribed to the monument fund. At this meeting a representative of the present monument committee will be present so that it will be known exactly what takes place.

A motion was adopted that Nelson Runyon, of the old association, be requested call a meeting as soon as convenient. It was the sense of the meeting that if possible a limited number of people be encouraged to give $100 each to start the fund. This added to what is already in hand would prove as an incentive to others to give. So far as could be learned last evening the old association has about $200 in cash and between $2,000 and $3 000 in subscriptions. The Sons of Veterans have donated $200. These various amounts will assist materially in giving the scheme a boom.

The question of putting a float in the Fourth of July parade was discussed, but was not considered favorably. It was agreed, however, that if possible it would be wise to have some advertisement placed in the programme to be issued for that day.

An excellent idea was advanced by one of the members to the effect that a miniature monument be secured, about a fac-simile of the proposed monument, and have it placed on exhibition in the city, where everyone can see it.

Thus far 2,000 circulars have been sent out asking for subscriptions and in response some money has come in, but not so much as was anticipated. It is hoped that there will be a more liberal response. J. F. Buckle, of North avenue, is the treasurer, and he will gladly receive any amount a person desires to contribute.

SIGHTS SEEN IN ROME

AN INTERESTING LECTURE DELIVERED BY DR. RICHARDS.

Given for the Benefit of the Boys' Missionary Band of the Crescent Avenue Church—Illustrated by Stereopticon.

The interesting lecture given under the auspices of the Boys' Missionary Society of the Crescent Avenue church last Monday by Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, attracted a large and cultured audience to the chapel of the church. The lecture was on Ancient and Modern Rome. It was illustrated by stereopticon views and proved highly entertaining.

Previous to the lecture Mrs. Isaac Miller, who is sponsor for the boys in their good work, said that the object of the mission was to benefit those engaged in missionary work. She extended the thanks of the boys for the interest that had been shown by the people of Plainfield in the good work and expressed her gratitude for the interest manifested. The views consisted of scenes of the Coliseum, Palatine Hill, the Catacombs and several of the churches, whose beautiful architecture is considered the finest in the world, the palace of the Vatican—residence of Pope Leo, etc. Dr. Richards is a most entertaining person on all occasions, but his knowledge of this ancient city is broad and his description last evening of the many points of interest to be seen in Rome held the attention of his audience closely. Perhaps the most amusing portion of his lecture was his description of a fire in Rome and the primitive methods of the city fire department, which appeared on the scene of the threatened conflagration some little time after the blaze had been extinguished. The lecturer said the apparatus resembled not a little a toy fire engine and hook and ladder truck, which had the appearance of being more ornamental then useful.

Doing a Good Job.

Just at present the city is doing a good job of macadamizing on West Front street from Clinton avenue to the city line at Jefferson avenue. The work is being done under the direction of David Bowden. Plenty of stone is being used.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthropist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling, bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them especially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion, but for once he at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended so highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $2 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them long if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should publish her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be others just like me, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was." At the table above may be seen the package which some other person similarly afflicted to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how generally she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

"COUNT" EVACUATES FOR THE TROLLEY.

Settlement Made Between Railway Company and VanNess.

FIRST CAR HAS BEEN RUN.

TO GO AS FAR AS TROCHA ESTABLISHED BY THE "COUNT."

Civil Engineer VanEmburgh States That Cars Will Be Running to Scotch Plains By the Middle of Next Month—Large Gang of Men on "Count's" Property Yesterday Afternoon.

"Count" John K. VanNess, of East Front street, who has been holding up the Scotch Plains extension of the Plainfield Street Railway Company for the past two weeks by building a shanty on their route on his property, and planting a cannon in front of it with which to repel an invasion of trolley workmen, evacuated his position last night, having come to an agreement with the railway company. It is understood the company paid the "Count" about $1,500 for the right of way over his property.

Yesterday H. C. VanEmburgh, civil engineer for the railway company, put a gang of men to work staking out the route and this afternoon a large gang of workmen will start the work of grading the roadbed and laying the tracks. The gap left in the road by the defiant attitude of VanNess will be rapidly closed up and the partially completed tracks on either side tapped.

Next Saturday afternoon VanNess will be tried in city court for shooting firearms within the city limits, the offense being committed while he was getting the range of the spot where he expected that railway employes would invade his property in opposition to his commands.

Yesterday at 2 o'clock the first car to be run over the Scotch Plains extension of the street railway left the North Avenue station in charge of Superintendent John Adelman and a number of other railway officials and prominent citizens invited to make the trip. The car was run almost to spot where VanNess had compelled the workmen to stop laying rails.

Civil Engineer VanEmburgh stated yesterday that the rails would be laid all the way to Scotch Plains by the middle of next month and the cars running regularly.

Biker Went To It.

Newark, June 21.—Colonel Hine and Chandler W. Biker, of this city, yesterday refused to discuss the report that the Elizabeth and Westfield company had effected a compromise with the Kean interests. Colonel Hine petitioned the Springfield Township Committee, at a special meeting Monday night, for a franchise through the village from the Borough of Mountainside to the Millburn Township line. The application was filed and the Committee decided to hold a public meeting July 6th, in the Town Hall, when the conditions of the grant will be considered. Two routes are mapped out, one almost entirely through private property, and the other through the streets.

ARLINGTON AVENUE EXTENSION.

Street Committee Confer With Street Railway Representatives.

It was expected that the street committee of the Common Council and the representatives of the Plainfield Street Railway would come to some definite understanding last Tuesday regarding the Arlington avenue extension of the trolley road. A conference was held last evening and the subject discussed. Another meeting will be held Thursday night of next week when action will undoubtedly be taken.

Both Mr. Tolles and Mr. VanHerwerden were unable to be present at the meeting Tuesday, Mr. Barrows being the only member present. L. W. Serrell, Jr., and Superintendent John Arleman were present from the company.

ADVANCEMENT WILL BE THEIR EFFORT.

Business Men Now in Shape For Some Effective Work.

CONSTITUTION IS ADOPTED.

MEMBERSHIP FEE IS $1 AND ANNUAL DUES $3.

Former Judge W. A. Coddington Chosen Second Vice-President—Board of Directors to be Chosen in a Careful Manner —Mayor Smalley Willing to Start an Advertising Fund With Subscription of $50.

An important meeting of the Plainfield Advancement Association was held Tuesday in Coward's Hall and the constitutional machinery accepted and set in motion. The meeting was presided over by Mayor Smalley as president of the Association. It was attended better than the previous meetings, but not near as well as it would have been if the heavy shower had not prevailed just before the time for the gathering. However, the attendance was representative and plenty of enthusiasm was evidenced over the work in hand.

The first business brought up was the report on the constitution and by-laws, which was made by Judge Runyon as chairman of the special committee appointed to formulate them. The constitution was prepared in a concise and satisfactory form after a similar document of the Elizabeth Board of Trade. It provides for a president, two vice-presidents, a secretary, a treasurer and six directors—one from each of the four wards in the city and one from each of the two election districts in the borough. The officers are to serve ex-officio on the board of directors. A list of committees of a permanent character to cover manufactories and industries, advertising, discussion, etc., were also established. These committees are to be appointed by the president, by and with the consent of the board of directors.

The question of membership fee and dues was left blank by the special committee, and at the meeting last night this matter was brought up for discussion. It was recognized by all that the lowest sum that could be named for membership fee and dues would be advisable in order to get a large membership. It was finally decided to make the membership fee $1 and the dues $3 per year, to be paid in three installments on May 1st, September 1st and January 1st.

A report from the advertising committee appointed at the last meeting was made by W. W. St. John, chairman of that committee. He stated that the committee had met and discussed informally advertising plans. But the subject involved so many ideas and such important plans for raising money to carry them out does nothing definite was done, and until something that the committee was assured of being successful and satisfactory plan had been devised it was suffice to report that progress had been made.

At this point the matter of electing the additional officers required by the constitution was brought up. Former Judge W. A. Coddington was chosen second vice-president. As the board of directors is a most important part of the constitutional machinery of the association, it was decided to appoint a special committee to select available and practical members for this board, and to report at the next meeting. City Judge Runyon, Assessor Elsten M. French and Assessor Charles H. Hand were appointed to constitute this committee.

A letter was read from Silas Dewey Drake in which he stated that he would be glad to aid the association in any way possible by his advice. He forced especially to the fact that he would be able to locate some high class factories here as soon as the land for free sites could be procured.

At this point considerable informal discussion took place. Mayor Smalley made a few remarks urging everyone to take a willing hand in the work before them—the advancement of Plainfield interests in every manner possible. He said that he had assumed the office of president reluctantly, but he was willing to assume responsibilities and that he should do everything possible to progress the work undertaken.

Speaking of the proposed fund for advertising purposes, Mr. Smalley said that he was was willing to start the subscriptions with $50 and he had no doubt but that every business man in the city would be willing to contribute $5 and upwards for such a purpose.

James E. Martine spoke on the question of lower railroad fares, and related an episode that he experienced

REFRESHING DOWNPOUR

HEAVY SHOWER WAS MOST WELCOME TUESDAY EVENING.

Accompanied by Much Wind, Lighting and Thunder—Rain Did an Immense Amount of Good to Everything.

The steady down pour of rain last Tuesday was most welcome. Many residents of Plainfield and vicinity felt so delighted that some were even possessed of a desire to stand out in the refreshing shower. The storm was preceded by a heavy wind, which blew fitful gusts of hot air and dust into the eyes and everywhere. Following the wind came several sharp flashes of lightning, accompanied by low rumbling peals of thunder. Then came the rain. At first with a heavy sprinkle and finally with a swish and a dash that was truly inviting after the hot sultry day. All nature seemed to smile at the drenching it was receiving and even vegetation raised its head heavenward as if in mute benediction at the baptism. As the rain increased so did the furry of the storm.

Terrific flashes of lightning, magnificent in their awful aspect, followed in close succession, while the loud thunder, as it crashed after each flash, depicted Heaven's artillery and caused a shudder to creep down the spines of nervous people. During the prevalence of the storm and as it passed to the south the sun sank in the horrison, its setting rays throwing a red glare against the firmanent making a most beautiful picture, greatly admired by all who noticed it. The shower was the heaviest experienced this season. It was highly beneficial and most welcome.

FIELD OF RYE ON FIRE.

SWATH 400 YARDS WIDE CUT TO STOP THE FLAMES.

Fire Started by a Spark From a Locomotive—Neighbors Turned Out to Prevent Blaze From Going Further.

Bound Brook, June 21.—James P. Malloy, a young man who has been successful as a milkman and farmer at Gaitville, near this place, suffered heavy losses yesterday afternoon and evening. About 4 o'clock in the afternoon sparks from a locomotive on the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, which runs close to his farm, set fire to his large field of rye, and to save most of it it was necessary to cut a swath 400 yards wide across the field. By doing this the largest part of the field was saved. Malloy had the assistance of the neighbors, and all hands had to work hard for several hours.

Last evening about 11 o'clock five of Mr. Malloy's valuable cows wandered from the field and trespassed on the railroad tracks. The result was that four of them were instantly killed by a fast freight, and the fifth one was injured so badly that it had to be killed. This is a severe loss to Mr. Malloy and it will cripple him greatly in his business.

TO ATTEND A DEDICATION.

Trinity Commandery to Participate in Ceremonies at New Brunswick.

Trinity Commandery, Knights Templar, has accepted an invitation to be present at the dedication of the new temple of Temple Commandery, of New Brunswick, which takes place Wednesday, June 28th.

The field day to be held at Asbury Park, August 24th, is expected to be a grand affair. There will be eighteen commanderies in line with bands. On that day Trinity Commandery will give an excursion to that city, and it is expected that the Plainfield Sir Knights will have at least seventy swords in line. The local Sir Knights will be accompanied by the Queen City Band.

The last conclave of the season was held at the asylum Monday evening. No further conclaves will be held until the first Monday evening in September.

Deacon Conway Preached.

Rev. Scott Wallace and Deacon Spencer Conway, of this city, have returned from Providence, R. I., as delegates to the New England State Convention. While at Providence Spencer Conway preached a sermon in the Decket church. It made such an impression that he was urged to remain a week longer, but was compelled to return home.

School Teachers Worried

New Brunswick, June 21.—It is understood that the local Board of Education has decided that it is time to introduce younger blood to the corps of teachers. Some of the older teachers are greatly exercised over the matter and have set about making a lively fight to be retained.

BIG CELEBRATION QUITE PROBABLE.

Plainfield Will Witness an Old-Fashioned Fourth.

NAVAL RESERVES EXPECTED

DISPLAY OF FIRE WORKS TO BE MADE ON GIRAUD AVENUE.

What the Various Committees Had to Report at Tuesday Evening's Meeting—More Than Thirty Business Firms Have Asked for Places in the Line of Parade—Many Floats are Promised.

Reports received from some of the committees at last Tuesday's meeting of the general committee of the Fourth of July celebration gave evidence that the success of the affair is assured.

Already thirty two business firms have asked for places in the line of parade. This number is outside of the lodges and organizations. Many of these firms will have floats.

Chairman Ulrich, of the executive committee reported that partial arrangements had been made for the fireworks display. The site selected was on Giraud avenue, just across the brook, where there was a large lot suitable for the display, and as it was quite centrally located the committee believed it would be satisfactory to the public.

The Park Club, he said, had decided not to have an exhibition of fireworks as had been anticipated, but would lend its aid towards the success of the proposed celebration.

As to the visit of the Naval Reserves Mr. Ulrich said that the Governor had granted permission for the Reserves to visit Plainfield on July 4th providing that transportation was furnished from Hoboken and return and entertainment provided for the men while here. Dr. Simpson, he said had informed him that as Commander Irving and some of the officers of the Reserves had many friends among the citizens of Plainfield he believed that that fact had much to do with the possibility of the Reserves being guests of the city on that day of the celebration. Mr. Ulrich said he had been given to understand that if the Naval Reserves come they will be entertained by the Woman's Relief Corps of the G. A. R.

Efforts had been made to secure Gov. Voorhees' presence in Plainfield on the Fourth, but they had failed. The committee had then sought to enlist the kind offices of Congressman Fowler but that gentleman declined owing to a previous engagement. There was however, fair prospects of securing Col. Chas. N Fuller, of Jersey City, as orator of the day, but no definite arragements had as yet been perfected.

The chairman of the executive committee reported that the Queen City Band of 23 pieces had been engaged for the afternoon and evening at a cost of $145, which was a figure comparatively less than was paid four years ago.

Several bids have been received for the fireworks but as yet no award had been made for this display.

The Knights of Pythias reported that they had engaged the Crescent Rink in which to entertain their guests from out of town. In the event of storm weather, however, the Knights would be pleased to place it at the disposal of the executive committee to use as they deem proper.

Chairman Newcorn said that Mayor Smalley had acted upon the suggestion that the Park club unite in one general celebration as regards the fireworks, but whether the club would decide to donate the amount of money it annually expends in its pyrotechnic display he was not proposed to state. The question to be submitted to the board of governors.

In regard to the floats the chairman wished to have the Press call the attention of those who are to make a display in this direction to be careful in the construction of the floats that they be not too high so as to retard the progress of the parade by coming in contact with the railroad viaducts, telegraph or electric light wires, etc.

The printing committee reported that the large colored posters printed by The Press had been received and that they would be posted today along the line of the railroad and in the adjacent villages and cities.

The parade committee has not yet designated the line of march, but they would do so in a few days.

Chairman Ulrich called attention to the fact that the Fourth of July is but two weeks off and it was highly important that every member of each committee should use his utmost endeavors to carry into effect the work

ONCE WEALTHY MAN NOW A CITY PAUPER.

Sad Fate in Life That Has Come to Isaac Bird.

HAS NO FRIENDS OR MONEY.

HAS BEEN COMMITTED TO THE CITY INDUSTRIAL HOME.

The Old Man is Utterly Friendless and Helpless and Was Living in Squalor and Filth Until Health Inspector Addis Called the Attention of Mayor Rockfellow to His Case.

In a squalid place that probably has no equal in this city, Isaac Bird, once wealthy and a man of influence, has been living for the past three months. The place is near the raceway back of French's mill. When a local representative visited the place Tuesday he found things in the worst possible condition. Two small rooms, with not one convenience to make life worth living, this aged man has occupied for sometime. For a time a divorced woman shared the misery of the hovel, but five weeks ago her somewhat dull sense of cleanliness was aroused and she departed for another place.

Mr. Bird is a veteran of the Civil War and since he left his native home near Mt. Bethel he has been on the road to decline. He possesses a few things which were placed in his two rooms, and here he tried to eke out an existence the best he could. Occasionally someone would steal into his rooms and if they saw anything worth having they would walk away with it. This sort of thing has been going for sometime, until one day the attention of Mrs. W. A. Woodruff, agent for the Charity Organized Aid Association, was called to the matter. She learned he had been a soldier in the Civil War and thought possibly it was a case for the local G. A. R. The case was brought to their attention, but it was out of their jurisdiction. Overseer of the Poor Hansen was then spoken to, and after he investigated it thought that it was out of his realm, as he had heard that the man belonged to North Plainfield. Thus the case was allowed to drag along as best it could.

Finally, someone spoke to Health Inspector Addis, whose duties are to see that perfect sanitation is maintained. He visited Mr. Bird, and at once learned that he was in this city and should be cared for by Plainfield. He asked Mayor Rockfellow to accompany him to Bird's home. His Honor was surprised beyond measure at what he saw. He at once summoned Overseer Hansen to his office and gave him instructions as to what to do. He told him to take the man from that place, remove him to the industrial home, buy him a suit of clothes, and see that he had a good bath.

The man was taken to the Home yesterday, but in a little while he got away and was found on Greenbrook road. He objected to going back, saying that he could not pay rent for both places. Mr. Bird's mind is somewhat upset at times. He now has a good home and he will be taken care of.

Valuable papers belonging to him have been found, and a gold watch, which was stolen, has been recovered. It is understood he has daughters living in the west who are wealthy, but they never communicate with their father.

It has been learned that Mr. Bird is drawing a pension of $12 per month, and this money will be used to keep him comfortable and he will not now be in want.

SERVED IN WRONG COUNTY.

Summons Issued in a Contract Case Was Defective.

Non-suit was granted the defendant Tuesday by Justice Schlick, of Scotch Plains, in the action brought by John C. Gerndandt, of Cranford, against George Conover, of North Plainfield, in a contract case. The non-suit was granted on the ground that the proceedings were illegal and that the summons was issued in Somerset county instead of Union county. Wm. G. DeMeza appeared for the defendant.

Granddaughter of Old Resident Married.

The older town residents will be interested in the announcement of the marriage Saturday, June 17th, at 1405 Pacific street, Brooklyn, by Rev. William B. Cary, uncle of the bride, Katharyn Fredericka VanVleck to Alfred D'Arcy McClellan Pearce. The bride is a granddaughter of Judge Cary who, many years ago, was the owner and occupant of the place now known as "Tunlaw," the home of former Mayor John F. Wilson.

'TWAS NINETY-NINE'S TURN TUESDAY.

Class Day Exercises Held in Both High Schools.

INTERESTING PROGRAMMES

PLAINFIELD CELEBRATED THE OCCASION WITH POETRY AND SONG.

The Borough Graduates Gave Tableaux and a Burlesque and Were Very Successful—Many Attended Both Class Day Exercises and Were Well Pleased With Them—Plainfield's Exercises Delayed.

The Class of '99 of the Plainfield High School had a thunder storm to contend with Tuesday evening, and it wasn't until nearly 9 o'clock that they managed to rally their forces sufficiently to begin the Class Day exercises. Class Day was observed in the Franklin building. An audience of nearly 200 people waited patiently and then found much to gratify them in the programme.

The hall was bright with the class colors, red and white, and a huge class banner. The young women of the class were all gowned in white trimmed with red.

The programme opened with a vocal solo by Miss Mary Collier. Then came a very remarkable history of the class by Miss Jessie Pruden. After a recitation by Miss Euphemia Demarest, the class sang "The Model Class," composed for the occasion.

A reading by Miss Bessie Fitz Randolph was followed by "Our Class Alphabet," written and read by William Morgan. It was full of hits on both teachers and pupils and was received with loud applause. Then came a vocal duet by Miss Angie Kuhl and Miss Mary Collier.

Miss Helen Lovell related all the wonderful stunts that the various members of the class were going to perform in the future, having had a glimpse into that State, thanks to the High School ghost.

A number of apt quotations for the various teachers, pupils and classes of the High School, were read by Miss Bertha Jenkins, to nobody was spared. The exercises closed with a class medley, arranged by Miss Angie Kuhl and sung by the class.

IN THE BOROUGH.

Class Day Exercises of the Graduates Across the Brook.

The Borough Public High School was well filled Tuesday p. m. with an appreciative audience that thoroughly enjoyed the annual class day exercises given under the direction of Superintendent Wightman and the Misses Crowther and Petrie, who arranged it. The platform was tastefully decorated with greens, flowers, while the graduating class color, purple and white were used with pleasing effect.

After an opening selection by Andrew G. Carpenter's orchestra, the class history was read by Miss Rita Pond, who is the valedictorian of her class. It proved to be a highly interesting paper.

Following this Tennyson's "Dream of Fair Women," was given in a finished manner. Miss Rita Pond was the reader, and those who took the various parts are as follows: "Helen of Troy," Isabel Milne; "Iphegenia," Mary Hoagland; "Cleopatra," Grace Emmons; "Jephtha's Daughter," Emma Line; "Rosamond," Katherine Dwight; "Eleanor," Anne Emmons; "Antigone," Bessie Martin; "Jean of Arc," Evelyn Simonson; "Eleanor, wife of Edward I," Edna Bowers.

Other selections were given by the orchestra and interspersed by "The Class Prophecy" by Douglass Drake, which was very amusing, and "The Class Will," by Miss Emma Line, which was a feature of the event. After another selection by the orchestra, "Lochinvar," (burlesque), was given by the scholars. Miss Emma Line was the reader and Miss Nellie Valiant presided at the piano. Those who took the various parts are as follows: "Lochinvar," Arthur Smith; "Bride," Grace Emmons; "Groom," Douglass Drake; "Mother," Winifred Carroll; "Father," Fred Overton; "Minister," Chas. Bryan; bridemaids, Elizabeth Curtis, Dora Waring, Grace Osgood, Marie Honeycutt, Aimee Emmons, Isabel Milne; groomsmen, Morgan Townsend, Kerre Knox, Fred Emmel, Donald McGee and Roland Horne. All those taking part were costumed and the audience showed its appreciation of the presentation. The final number was the "Charge of the Rough Riders," by a number of the scholars.

NUNS WHO MANAGE A SMITHY.

BY ELIZABETH LYON.

In one of the quiet and secluded valleys of Cape Colony, not far from King William's Town, there is a community of Dominican nuns who have demonstrated the fertility of woman's resources and genius. Blacksmithing is not ordinarily regarded as an occupation to which women would take kindly, but these Sisters of St. Dominic successfully conduct a blacksmith shop, some of the nuns acquiring a proficiency in metal working that would have delighted the heart of old Vulcan himself.

Some years ago a company of devout Dominican nuns, eager to sow the seeds of religion in South Africa, left the time honored convents in Europe and established a settlement in the British colony of the Cape of Good Hope, where a considerable tract of fertile land was secured. Here they built a chapel and convent, and, in connection with their ministrations of religion and mercy, they till the soil, producing abundant crops, which are sold to the miners and diamond seekers of the neighboring country. Finding farm laborers scarce in this land, where most of the digging is for gold and diamonds, the nuns quietly put their hands to the plow, and thus their community thrived.

Finally a plowshare was broken, and there was no blacksmith shop in the neighborhood where it could be mended. This, however, did not discourage the self reliant and energetic sisters. They at once sent to Cape Town for the materials and tools and established a smithy of their own.

A blacksmith was at first employed as tutor, but soon the nuns acquired a knowledge of the craft, and they now not only do the smith work required on their extensive farm, but have a large patronage from their neighbors. They shoe horses and oxen, repair farm machinery and transform rod and bar iron into all sorts of useful appliances —books, hinges, staples and ringbolts.

These feminine blacksmiths of the Dominican convent are experts and do their work as well and as quickly as men. The precision of the hammer swinging nun seems to exercise a sort of fascination over the others of the sisterhood, and she is greatly admired by them. The Boer neighbors regard the nuns at work over the anvil and at the forge with something of suspicion and resentment, the English stand and wonder and the natives look on with awe and reverence.

The smithy, which stands a short distance from the convent, is a long, narrow building, supplied with a well built brick forge, strong ox hide bellows and heavy anvils and hammers. In the center of the shop can frequently be seen, tethered to a strong caken rack, a big draft horse, and the patient nun fits the redhot shoe to the scorching hoof, nailing it deftly and securely, carefully rasping down the rough places and then patting the animal gently as her task is concluded. The horse is shod as neatly as a man would have done it.

As one approaches the convent of these Sisters of St. Dominic the brown clad nuns are seen busily at work in the fields hoeing, pruning, following the plow drawn by strong limbed oxen or tending the herds in the pastures. They are never idle, and they seem to be happy and contented in their life of labor and devotion.

At close range the most striking effect in the appearance of a Sister of St. Dominic as seen in Cape Colony is her rosy, bronzed face, so different from the pale and almost colorless complexions of the nuns under ordinary conditions. This rosy glow comes naturally. It comes from their daily toil in the smithy and the fields exposed to the fierce heat of the forge and the rays of the African sun.

The life of Mrs. Kate Chase Sprague, once the reigning queen of Washington society, daughter of the late Chief Justice Chase and the former unhappy wife of ex-Governor Sprague of Rhode Island, has not been one of sunshine. Her latest misfortune is the loss of her home, Edgewood, which was recently sold to satisfy claims against the estate. She had fought for years to save it.

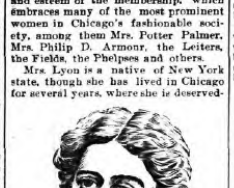
THE UNQUIET SEX.

Some Activities In Which the Woman of Today Is Engaged.

The new Chicago Women's Athletic club, about which much has been printed, has chosen Mrs. Paulina Henriette Lyon as its managing director. The magnificent clubhouse, unquestionably the finest and most complete of its kind in the world, has just been finished and its doors thrown open. The selection of Mrs. Lyon as manager is a fitting recognition of her services in making the much talked of club a reality.

Mrs. Lyon is a woman of recognized business ability and has the confidence and esteem of the membership, which embraces many of the most prominent women in Chicago's fashionable society, among them Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mrs. Philip D. Armour, the Leiters, the Fields, the Phelpses and others.

Mrs. Lyon is a native of New York state, though she has lived in Chicago for several years, where she is deservedly popular. She was educated at the Chicago university, being at the time of her student life there a member of the family of Dr. Burroughs, who was founder and president of the institution. This schooling was supplemented by special studies in New York and Boston.



MRS. PAULINA H. LYON.

She has especially devoted herself to the physical development of women, which particularly fits her to become the presiding genius of this new athletic retreat. Not only has Mrs. Lyon's work in the organization and equipment of the club won the substantial recognition of Mrs. Palmer, Mrs. Armour and other members, but she has had flattering offers from all over the country to undertake similar enterprises for athletically inclined society women.

Among the young women who are attaining distinction as short story writers is Miss Alma Kohlheim, a former Atlanta girl.

Miss Nina Picton, a talented young woman of Mobile, Ala., is winning laurels in Paris and London through the merits of her soprano voice.

Miss Leonora Jackson, an American girl and protegee of Mrs. George Vanderbilt, has had the rare honor of being complimented on her violin playing by King Oscar of Sweden, who heard her at a recital in Paris.

The new torpedo boat De Long, named after Lieutenant De Long, the arctic explorer, which is soon to be launched, will be christened by Mrs. Charles F. De Long, a relative of the hero, who resides at McKeesport, Pa.

The Amanda Smith National Industrial Home For Colored Orphans, recently dedicated in Chicago, is the only institution of its kind established by colored people in this country.

OUT OF DOOR ATTIRE.

Bicycle Gowns and Other Costumes For the Open Air.

Bicycle skirts are not lined, as that would increase their weight, and are made rather scant. On the inside of the hem a facing of leather is often placed. A deeper facing of silk may be employed when the skirt has a tendency to slip upward and cling there, as is sometimes the case with rough fabrics. For summer denim or heavy duck makes a cool and serviceable bicycle suit, which does not become wilted and stringy, like crash.

Trousers of the same color should be worn beneath a bicycle skirt, or tights of thin jersey cloth may be adopted instead. No petticoat is required—in fact, petticoats are to be avoided as useless and cumbersome.

The bodice for outing gowns is more varied than the skirt. It may be a bolero, which is frequently adopted now, or it may be a very short jacket, close at the back and sides and straight in front, or it may be a tight corsage, with the briefest possible basque, opening slightly at the throat to show he masculine collar and cravat. This last style is exceedingly fashionable, although unsuited for warm weather.

CLOTH CAPE.

The cape shown in the cut is of silver gray cloth, the shoulders and the part over the top of the arms being heavily corded. The seams are so arranged that sleeves are simulated, and lines of silver cord border the edge of the cape, above which is a vine of black and silver embroidery. The ruffled collar and the cravat are of black satin, and there is a trimming of black satin choux fastened by jeweled ornaments. The lining is of gray satin.

THE WARDROBE.

Some of Its Leading Features This Season.

Berets, toques and hats of all sizes are seen, and there are symptoms of a revival of the directoire hat, with its high crown and large brim.

The bolero takes precedence of both coat and jacket in tailor made gowns and is preferred for the most elegant of this class of costume.

In spite of the general adoption of trailing skirts, the walking skirt of ordinary length is still worn, for its proper purpose, in Paris by the most fashionable women, who are fully aware of the inelegance of a trained skirt for active pedestrian exercise.

Many double skirts are seen, but they retain the clinging tendency and follow the lines of the figure closely. The ambition of the fashionable woman of the day is to suppress all feminine contours, decreasing the hips and flattening the bodice as much as possible, and then to incase herself in a costume which renders the absence of those contours noticeable. The result of such a course is to give a naturally thin figure the aspect of that of a saint in the worst of the pictures by the old masters, but a beautiful form will emerge triumphant from the trial, although it is not improved by such ascetic treatment.

The gown illustrated is of sulphur crepe de chine, the skirt having a band of white lace insertion over blue silk arranged in points. The stretched bodice is gathered at the waist and opens over a plastron crossed by bands of insertion over blue silk. The collar and sleeves are in one and are bordered with a ruffle of lace and a band of insertion over blue silk. The sleeves have little plaits at the shoulders and a frill of lace at the wrists. The belt is of blue silk.

ELEGANT GOWNS.

Elaborate Costumes For Fashionable Occasions.

Except where tailor made costumes are concerned there is no such thing as simplicity in ruffles, tucks, plaitings, cordings, folds, lace, embroidery, passementerie, applications, buttons, buckles and clasps are all utilized as trimming, with drapery, rosettes, bows and bands of ribbons and velvet. Then there are spangled tulles and gauzes and fringe, both silk and beaded.

SATIN TOILET.

Exquisite evening gowns are made of lace and guipure shaped to the figure without a seam and flaring out at the foot of the skirt with the circular flounce effect. These are worn over satin, usually white, cream or ecru, and are very rich.

Ball gowns are divided into two classes —those for the dancers and those for the guests who do not dance. The former are of the most vaporous materials—spangled and embroidered tulle and gauze, brocade mousselines de soie, light piece lace and the whole range of crepes de chine and thin liberty silks. The second division of costumes is richer and heavier in material and trimming, with longer trains and less diaphanous decorations.

The gown illustrated is of black satin, the princess redingote opening over a skirt of orange silk with black lace embroidered with jet. The redingote is also heavily embroidered with jet, as are the large revers of orange silk, which join at the back to form a deep point. A ruffle of black mousseline de soie forms epaulets and outlines this point, diminishing to nothing at the waist. The collar is of orange silk, the capote also, the trimming of the capote consisting of black plumes and a paste buckle. The cravat is of white lace, forming a jabot.

FASHION HINTS.

Tailor Made Gowns and Other Costumes of the Day.

The present tailor made costume is practically an adaptation of the riding habit. The skirt has no plaits whatever at the back and but a single seam and fastens at the front or side, or if it has two slight plaits behind there is no placket hole there. Only a graceful figure, neither very thin nor decidedly stout, can carry such a skirt to advantage, for all defects as well as all beauties are brought into prominence by it.

SILK CAPE.

The best materials are soft and brilliant coloring, light and of medium depth of tone as a rule. A number of blues are seen, blue being an extremely fashionable color this season. There are several blues blues, French blue, pastel blue and turquoise, although the last named enjoys less favor than the stronger, franker shades. Tobacco and well known browns, with suede, are well worn, while mastic, ecru, the palest possible gray and other undefined tints just off white are of extreme elegance, comprising many exquisite toilets and also attractive separate silk and satin waists. Cyclamen, light violet and pinkish mauve are delicate and lovely colors, and pale yellow and green are also seen, especially in lawns, crepes and for millinery purposes.

Fine checks and dots are used for walking gowns, while plaids appear for trimmings and for the linings of capes and wraps.

The cape shown is of the 1840 style, in mauve grosgrain, having three circular flounces of black chantilly over white satin. The top flounce is headed by a triple ruche of mauve silk. The flaring collar is lined with a large ruche of white satin bordered with mauve, and there is a cravat of white mousseline de sole trimmed with lace

WRAPS FOR SUMMER.

What to Wear on the Shoulders When the Evening Dews Fall.

There is always a time when a woman finds her wardrobe incomplete without some sort of a cape. A jacket is not just suitable for the occasion, a long or heavy cloak would be a burden, and yet something is required in the way of a wrap. There are some really elegant garments of the very kind needed now on exhibition. These do not take in the golf capes, nor yet those intended for traveling.

But I will mention a novel traveling cape which was made for a bride who is to take an ocean voyage. She expects to wear it the first day she gets on deck after her seasickness. This is, of course, rough camel's hair plaid in a very large design of brown, drab, black and white. The cape fits the shoulders and has a high, flaring collar. The collar has a bias piece of drab cloth stitched around several times, and there are two flat pieces stitched to the cape all around just above the sprang self ruffle. The cape is cut on the straight, the ruffle bias. It is pointed quite sharply in the back and front and lined throughout with brown taffeta. A plaited ruffle one inch wide made of the brown silk extends below the edge. The cape reaches almost to the knees.

For warm days there are some beautiful capes made of net, and they are wrought in elegant designs by spangles, silk embroidery and also fine jet embroidery.

Another striking idea is to have a net cape made double to give it firmness. There is then a vermicelli pattern wrought all over the suface of narrow black velvet ribbon, gathered in the center and sewed down with fine jet beads. Around the bottom is a ruffle of black chiffon, headed by a shirred line of velvet ribbon.

Velvet ribbon seems to be very popular as a trimming. There are several ways in which it is applied. One is in what is called shell work. The ribbon is gathered in a peculiar way, and when the thread is pulled it draws it into a succession of gathers like cockleshells.

I cannot tell all the fancies of these new trimmings, as no one could understand them if I did, but puffed gathered ribbon is very pretty and showy. In this the edges are gathered and the center is thereby raised. Other designs are laid on flat and others gathered or finely quilted in the middle. One other way produces little beadlike puffs. The trimming is very effective however it is done.

These capes were exceedingly beautiful and elegant. They were lined with light, but crisp taffeta. Another was made of black net, reaching only to the elbows. It was much wider than the others, and around the bottom were four inch wide ruffles of black crepe lisse. The rest was covered with a scroll design in very narrow black instring ribbon, with an occasional bead and line of six to ten black spangles.

The collar was very high, but made entirely of shirred and ruffled black lisse. These were revers in front completely covered with shirrings and ruffles of black lisse.

Narrow ruffles and shirrings of chiffon, lisse, liberty and silk quill are very fashionable and take the place of so much lace, though lace was never more popular than it is now. The heavier kinds are laid flat and the lighter ones gathered and plaited to a degree.

Yet, as many garments as are trimmed with a fluff of lace, there are still some others where a thread of lace would not be allowed. One of them is the horsy looking little red vest. These red cloth vests were hardly shown before, but became a rage, though they were really put forth timidly for golfing. Now half the girls unbutton their jackets to show the red vest beneath; but, understand, it does not do away with the shirt waist a single bit.

It is said by those professing to know that we may look for directoire styles in the fall, as far as the shape of skirts, mantles and bonnets go. The signs do point that way when one reflects a little.

Still, I have lived long enough to know that it is the unexpected that always happens.

The tight skirts, wide revers and mantelets, as well as the funny little short jackets, may come in the fall directoire. Some may adopt it, but others won't, so there must be a sort of compromise.

Black and white, gray and white and blue and white striped silks, wools and cottons are very popular designs. Where a loose bodice is made the stripes go around or at least diagonally, and those in the sleeves run straight.

The pique suits are in good demand just now, and many of them are elaborately braided in narrow soutache. Some have tunics, others have them simulated. Some are trimmed with flat black or white lace insertions, and others have no end of ruffles, etc., of Hamburg embroidery, white or dotted in red or blue. Almost all pique suits have Eton jackets.

OUTING GOWNS.

Costumes and Accessories For Out of Door Sports.

Black stockings are worn with outing gowns, or stockings the color of the shoes. The ban retains a suggestion of the masculine, feathers, flowers and gauze being rigorously avoided. Ribbon and silk bands, knots and chous, with a quill or two, are the usual trimmings. The sailor and the Tyrolean stand foremost in favor among shapes.

The materials used for outing gowns are covert cloth, mixed goods, cheviots and serges, medium and dark tones being preferred. Medium gray and beige are most useful, mud, dust and rain making little impression upon them, but navy blue, Russian green, dark brown and black are also worn. Subdued plaids and checks are well represented in this class of materials and are really more serviceable than the plain goods.

Red vests of elastic wool, like the old fashioned cardigan jacket, are worn for golf playing, and they nearly always have silk sleeves of the same shade. These scarlet accessories are worn by both men and women players and are attractive bits of color in the field.

A picture is given of three fashionable cravats. The first, worn with a standing collar with turned down points, is of white moire and is called the regnie. The second consists of a stock collar and butterfly knot of red taffeta with stitched plaits. The third, which is more elaborate, is a bow of taffeta with guipure points and openwork lines, which is mounted on a stock collar of plaited taffeta, points of taffeta matching the bow appearing above the collar.

THE PREVAILING MODE.

Many Rings and Few Gloves In Elegant Society.

Artificial flowers being much worn, not only as a trimming for hats and bonnets, but in the form of boas and ruches and on evening gowns, the latest fancy is to perfume each flower with the odor properly belonging to it.

Supreme fashion prescribes that rings shall be worn upon all the fingers; therefore gloves are discarded at the theater and at evening receptions, and there is likely to be a return to mittens of the first empire style. At present the long sleeves which cover the hands to the fingers are considered a sufficient shield, the multitudinous rings previously mentioned taking the place of gloves, with which they are incompatible. Upon less elaborate and therefore ringless occasions, gloves are worn—that is, for calling and driving—but the gloves are of a fanciful nature, the back being embroidered, not in the ordinary lines, but with a monogram or cipher or some ornamental design. Black silk or gold or silver thread is used for the embroidery.

Bodices differing from the skirt will again be worn this summer, and a skirt of black satin may accompany any light corsage. Bodices of black beaded tulle will be in vogue and are cool as well as pretty.

The girl's gown depicted is of light green printed foulard. The plain skirt is trimmed with narrow white gimp. The blouse bodice has a wide collar of cream faille, bordered by two little ruffles, with a cravat to match. The plastron of white faille has pale green bands across it. The collar and belt are of sky blue taffeta—a novel touch—and the collarette is of cream satin.

PLUCKY WOMAN WAR CORRESPONDENT

Eliza Archard Conner, Who Is Carrying a Typewriter Around the World.

BY BESSIE DOW YATES.

Some of the most interesting articles which have been printed about the war in the Philippines have been written by Eliza Archard Conner, one of the very few women war correspondents who have ever entered this supposedly masculine field of journalism. But Eliza Archard Conner has always claimed that women were the equals of men in any field of work, and many times before has she demonstrated the truth of her theory.

The name of this veteran newspaper woman is known from one end of the country to the other, for here has been an active life. She has been prominent also in the ranks of the woman suffragists and as one of the leading members of Sorosis.

For more than a year Mrs. Conner has been on a roving mission which has taken her almost to the ends of the earth. Some 15 months ago she started for the Klondike. She took with her a typewriter. With her writing machine she is at home anywhere she may happen to find herself.

From Dawson City she sent a series of correspondence articles which were widely printed. They were full of bright and snappy stories about the gold seekers.

Leaving the neighborhood of the Arctic circle she journeyed south and sailed from San Francisco to Honolulu. From the Hawaiian Islands she sent another series of interesting letters, which have been read by many thousands.

From Honolulu Mrs. Conner started for the Philippines to act as war correspondent for the American Press Association. While off Yokohama the steamer on which she was a passenger encountered a typhoon. During the storm Mrs. Conner was thrown down a companionway and suffered a fracture of the bones of her left arm. She was thousands of miles away from home and friends. A less stout hearted person might have given up in despair, but not she. Accepting gratefully the kind attentions of new friends, she waited a short time to recover from the accident and then sailed for Manila by way of Hongkong.

Mrs. Conner has now been in the Philippines for several weeks, and her letters from there show no trace of gloominess. On the contrary, they are most entertaining and cheerful. She has followed up the movements of the American troops just as closely as any of her male coworkers and has ever visited the firing line.

As an evidence of her pluck and determination it may be noted that her correspondence work is all done on her typewriter with one hand. Her left arm is still practically useless on account of the fracture, but the surgeons have told her that if she continues to exercise it a little every day she may eventually recover the use of this member. Although this regimen is a most painful one to follow, Mrs. Conner is sticking to it and expects to come back as sound as ever.

After finishing her work in Manila Mrs. Conner contemplates continuing her journey around the world, carrying her typewriter along with her. She may spend some time in China and Russia before she returns.

The career of this plucky woman war correspondent is a most interesting one. She was one of the pioneers of women in journalism and has filled almost every position from reporter to editorial writer. She was born on a farm near Cincinnati, and her first newspaper work was done on the Cincinnati Commercial, now the Cincinnati Times-Star, when she went to New York and a year later became connected with the American Press Association as chief editorial writer.

Early in its career she became an active member of Sorosis, the "Mother of Woman's Clubs." In a report of a Sorosis debate several years ago the New York Sun said:

"When Eliza Archard Conner speaks in Sorosis, the women usually go home with something to think about. The slight, energetic woman, with the short gray hair and soft, clear voice, does not deal in platitudes, quotations nor encyclopedical data. She is a free lance and strikes out straight from the shoulder, regardless of what anybody thinks about it."

In carrying her typewriter around the world, penetrating into the gold regions and visiting the firing line in the Philippines she has lived up to her own belief.

A TIGER TALE.

There was an ancient Grecian boy
Who played upon the fiddle,
Sometimes high, sometimes low,
Sometimes in the middle,
And all day long beneath the shade
He munched on prunes and marmalade,
But what the tunes were which he played
Is certainly a riddle.

Three tigers, gaunt and ravenous,
Came from the gloomy wood
Intent to slay the fiddler bold,
But his music was too good.
So round about him once they filed
Till by the melody beguiled,
They sat them softly down and smiled
As only tigers could.

And thus beguiled, those tigers smiled
Throughout the livelong day
Until at length there was not left
Another tune to play.

* * * * * *

What happened then I do not know—
I was not there to see—
But when the music came to short of tunes
Can tigers be appeased with prunes
Or marmalade and silver spoons?
That's what perplexes me.

BILLY'S ADVENTURE.

BY MARTHA M. WILLIAMS.

If there was anything under the sun Billy hated it was hauling water. Not that the work itself was hard, or in any way disagreeable, but because he loved the spring and the springside so, and his mother was sure to call after him as he started, "Don't stop back, Billy; we can't do a thing, not even put on the pudding, until the water comes."

The spring came out half way to a tall bluff all covered down with sheer rocks richly embroidered with lichen and moss and fern. Some part of the water was led into a trough hollowed from some slender logs, which was fixed in crocheted uprights some ten feet from the ground. The troughs went quite to the roadside, Billy drove his barrel underneath it and let the spouting stream go plump into the squared bunghole.

So the filling was ridiculously easy; and as for driving the slide, that was as good as play. It was no load at all for Merry Tom, the chunky pony. Going springward, Billy, too, rode him; coming home, he walked beside, flourishing and cracking his plaited leather whip.

Upon a certain October Wednesday the whip cracked so loudly as the outit reached the spring any one who knew Billy would have been certain he had a new and especially acute grievance. All the mile betwixt spring and house he had been muttering. "Think they might a-let me stayed to hear; but 'no, Billy, you're jest a boy, a big boy, don't keer nothin' about hearin' nothin' in the world."

Still, he had heard something—enough, at least, to keep him hugely he brightened perceptibly as he drew to the spring, for other thirsty folks were there—two men in a very dusty buggy, and a tired looking horse. When he came up one of them hailed Billy:

"Howdy, sonny! Dear bless my soul, but I'm glad to see you. I've been clean faint this half hour—it's good to find myself anywhere about Squire Clark's."

"Howdy, brother Amos! It's funny—you generally do." Then Amos, a colporteur, a worn-out itinerant, was a prime favorite with all the boys, he had such a knack of retching exactly the books they wanted, books with lots of blood and fighting in them, and good boys who did not die young of their own goodness.

"It is funny. I never hit on this cross-road before—I've often heard of your spring." Brother Amos returned. "What's the good word up at the house, Billy? Any chance for travelers to stay all night?"

"Plenty—at least I reckon so." Billy answered, his sense of news to tell suddenly dimming at the thought of having very that. I don't just know how things 'll be when we get there. I left the sheriff there and 'bout a dozen more men—and they're talking about how the man they were after had stole 'bout $1,000,000 in town last night—and gone chasin' off in a buggy this mornin' as if he hadn't a thing."

"Dear me, why we came from town! We heard nothin of all this!" Brother Amos said, turning to his companion, who yawned and shook his head. Then suddenly the horse snorted and looked at Billy with a very keen pair of eyes. The barrel was by this time underneath the spout and filling very fast. The stranger crept out of the buggy and went beside it, peering into its depths as though it were something out of the common.

"Here's a new style of water works—eh, Brother Amos," he said, with a surgling laugh, then to Billy, "Tell me how you get the water out?"

"Easy enough. Don't you see the spile there at the bottom?" Billy-Boy retorted, over his shoulder. He was busy cutting dog-wood boughs to shade the jug, which was standing in the cool water cool. As he turned with both hands full a vicious fly made Merry Tom shiver so the slide was in danger of upsetting.

"Here. Give me the bushes—I'll fix them while you hold the horse," the stranger said, fetching a hand out his pocket. There was a knife in it so keen and sharp when it was opened it awoke Billy to covetousness. By help of it, in a few minutes the bough were in place, though Billy-Boy could not understand why in the placing the stranger meddled so much with the wedge-shaped hard that went into the bung.

"I'll tell mother who's comin'—she'll be sure to have a place for you," he shouted to Brother Amos, determinedly taking the road ahead of him.

The hailing sent out of the Clark gate, almost swore at the sight of Brother Amos' companion. "To think of Reuelin' him, when we'd 'bout give him up," he said to the man at his elbow, then spurred to the side of the buggy, crying out: "Halt! You're my prisoner! Hold up your hands!"

"Who is your prisoner. Explain yourself, Mr. Sheriff?" Brother Amos said with dignity. "You can scarcely mean me—it is still more impossible you can mean my friend Bradley, who is a philanthropic man of means, traveling with me to learn the needs of my work."

"Didn't he stay all night at the Franklin house in Clearview, and leave there at 4 o'clock—at 8 the diamonds were missed. So was Bradley. Then it came out that he had been seen leaving so early.

"I see a fitting case of circumstantial evidence," the man called Bradley said calmly, stepping from the buggy "Mr. Sheriff, I do not blame you in the least. Now, please, I ask to be searched at once. I am a total stranger. It had been arranged by letter that Brother Amos should call for me at daylight. He met me at the steps of the Franklin house—unless I am mistaken, anybody will accept his word for truth. We have been together ever since. Ask him, please, if I have parted with, thrown away, or in any way disposed of anything."

"He certainly has not," Brother Amos said. "Mr. Sheriff—"

"Thank you," Bradley interrupted. "Now, if I took the diamonds, carried them off and have not parted with them, you must have them still, gentlemen, I implore you to look for them. It seems to me I can hardly breathe until the charge is refuted."

Fifteen minutes later the sheriff was saying humbly, "Beg your pardon, Mr. Bradley—as you say you couldn't a-swallowed them stones—there were too many, even if you'd been an ostrich. And certain it is, I find no sign of them anywhere about your clothes. You saw 'em—you know they were there, great diamonds, wrapped in tinfoil inside a pocket case of metal. Now, if I should happen to light on 'em while you're in these parts, will you help identify 'em? I'm sure you bear no malice for this blunder?"

"My dear sir, don't speak of it," Bradley murmured. "You forget the interest I still have in the matter. It would give me the greatest pleasure to see those unlucky stones again in the right hands."

Billy had never heard such stories as Bradley told that night on the porch after supper. Still he did not like the man. It gave him a creepy feeling, when, after he had lighted the visitors to their chamber, Bradley shook hands and said: "Dear boy, pray for me." It was late—almost 12 o'clock—still Billy could not sleep when he was snug in bed. For an hour he thrashed about, listening to the 'possum hunters and wishing himself one of their party. He was up before the dawn answered spasmodically the barkings from the woods. All at once Billy heard a low, sharp growl, then a violent yelp, and the hounds took up the cry heavily. He flung open a window, but could see nothing. Again he heard Bose, this time a sort of growling and whining. Then it was muffled in a curious rushing sound, the noise of gushing water falling from a little height.

"I wonder who can be drawing water this early in the night?" Billy said to himself—then, as the noise kept up he gave a little excited whistle, leaped through the window, which opened on the roof of the porch, ran along it and dropped softly to the ground.

The water barrel sat always under the big white oak, twenty yards away. Billy stood beside it, with his back to the house. he had taken out the spile and held his fingers in the stream, trying to break up and deaden the sound of its downfall.

"If you had to haul water I reckon you'd not waste it so free," Billy-Boy said, clutching him by both arms. Bradley writhed in the smaller boy and tried to strike the boy with the sharp, cruel knife. Billy sprang lightly aside, caught a slide stake and dealt his enemy a blow that made him drop the knife and groan. "Boy!" he whispered hoarsely. "Help me—you must. They are there—in that barrel with the water. Help me get them out—you shall have half—think how rich they will make you—and nobody need know."

"Easy enough. Don't you see the spile there at the bottom?" Billy-Boy retorted, over his shoulder. He was busy cutting dog-wood boughs to shade the jug, which was standing in the cool water cool. As he turned with both hands full a vicious fly made Merry Tom shiver so the slide was in danger of upsetting.

anywhere about your clothes. You saw 'em—you know they were there, great diamonds, wrapped in tinfoil inside a pocket case of metal. Now, if I should happen to light on 'em while you're in these parts, will you help identify 'em? I'm sure you bear no malice for this blunder?"

"My dear sir, don't speak of it," Bradley murmured. "You forget the interest I still have in the matter. It would give me the greatest pleasure to see those unlucky stones again in the right hands."

Billy had never heard such stories as Bradley told that night on the porch after supper. Still he did not like the man. It gave him a creepy feeling, when, after he had lighted the visitors to their chamber, Bradley shook hands and said: "Dear boy, pray for me." It was late—almost 12 o'clock—still Billy could not sleep when he was snug in bed. For an hour he thrashed about, listening to the 'possum hunters and wishing himself one of their party. He was up before the dawn answered spasmodically the barkings from the woods. All at once Billy heard a low, sharp growl, then a violent yelp, and the hounds took up the cry heavily. He flung open a window, but could see nothing. Again he heard Bose, this time a sort of growling and whining. Then it was muffled in a curious rushing sound, the noise of gushing water falling from a little height.

"I wonder who can be drawing water this early in the night?" Billy said to himself—then, as the noise kept up he gave a little excited whistle, leaped through the window, which opened on the roof of the porch, ran along it and dropped softly to the ground.

The water barrel sat always under the big white oak, twenty yards away. Billy stood beside it, with his back to the house. he had taken out the spile and held his fingers in the stream, trying to break up and deaden the sound of its downfall.

"If you had to haul water I reckon you'd not waste it so free," Billy-Boy said, clutching him by both arms. Bradley writhed in the smaller boy and tried to strike the boy with the sharp, cruel knife. Billy sprang lightly aside, caught a slide stake and dealt his enemy a blow that made him drop the knife and groan. "Boy!" he whispered hoarsely. "Help me—you must. They are there—in that barrel with the water. Help me get them out—you shall have half—think how rich they will make you—and nobody need know."

"Easy enough. Don't you see the spile there at the bottom?" Billy-Boy retorted, over his shoulder. He was busy cutting dog-wood boughs to shade the jug, which was standing in the cool water cool. As he turned with both hands full a vicious fly made Merry Tom shiver so the slide was in danger of upsetting.

"Here. Give me the bushes—I'll fix them while you hold the horse," the stranger said, fetching a hand out his pocket. There was a knife in it so keen and sharp when it was opened it awoke Billy to covetousness. By help of it, in a few minutes the bough were in place, though Billy-Boy could not understand why in the placing the stranger meddled so much with the wedge-shaped hard that went into the bung.

"I'll tell mother who's comin'—she'll be sure to have a place for you," he shouted to Brother Amos, determinedly taking the road ahead of him.

The hailing sent out of the Clark gate, almost swore at the sight of Brother Amos' companion. "To think of Reuelin' him, when we'd 'bout give him up," he said to the man at his el-

WHEN TWILIGHT BRINGS YOU NEAR

When the sunset lights are fading in the west,
And stars begin to gleam across the sky,
The tender twilight brings me peace and rest,
While, dear, to you my heart's best longings fly.

The miles that lie between us seem as naught;
Your form comes gliding softly to my chair,
And looking into mine with eyes love-fraught,
Your fingers wander idly o'er my hair;

Your loving touch a benediction seems
That calls my nobler, truer self to
I long to realize my manhood's better dreams
And be a worthier actor in the strife.

With purifying love your dark eyes shine,
The last light lingers on your dusky hair,
And then you gently draw your hand from mine;
I glance to where you knelt—you are not there.

And so at twilight-time my thoughts of you
Bridge over all the miles that inter-
And bring you to me ever good and true,
With none to sever, naught to come between.

MIRIAM'S DREAM.

"You won't really go at this time of the year, will you?"

"Rather! I'd go in December if Dick were at the end of the journey."

"Well, I would not cross the Atlantic in the middle of November for a dozen sweethearts."

Miriam laughed gleefully. She and Dick had been separated for three years, and now he has fallen into a good berth in Toronto, and had written to her to decide whether they should both spend their winter in loneliness or whether she would go to him and settle down at once as his wife.

Miriam did not hesitate a moment, she set aside the shortest time possible for winding up her affairs in England and arranged to sail in the "Sivonian" from Liverpool to Halifax.

"But you'll have a dreadful overland journey after that; it must be a long way to Toronto," said her friend Nora.

"I don't know how you'll get through, all by yourself."

"Ah! but I'm not going to! Dick has been sent by his firm to New York on some business, and he intends to take a berth in the same coasting steamer, which will bring him to Halifax about the same time that I get there."

Miriam was in a fever of joy, and was quite oblivious of such small matters as intense cold, a pitching, rolling ship and battened down hatches. The good ship fought gally through a stormy ice-threatened sea, and at last a morning broke, when the sun shone fair, and the waves, sank into a comparative calm. Passengers swarmed on deck, congratulating each other on their escape from prison, and the anxious captain sighed with relief to think that the worst was over. He was upon his bridge, stamping up and down to keep the blood circulating in his feet, when ahead of them he saw a strange speck dancing on the waves.

As it drew nearer he found it to be an apparently empty boat; and he sent off one of his boats to tow the stray to the steamer. When it reached the side, however, the limp form of a sailor was lifted from it. Under care and good treatment the blood began to run again through his stiff veins, and he was able to tell what had befallen him. But before that happened his boat had been hailed by name, and the name upon it, Meldrum, made known.

"How funny!" cried Miriam, "a steamer sailing from New York to Halifax is named Meldrum."

"Ay! answered the sailor, omniously, "and this is one of her boats."

"But how can it be? How could it have got loose out here?"

"If that poor chap lives he can tell us that, and no one else perhaps."

After some time the sailor's words began to beat into Miriam's stupefied brain: she tried to speak to someone standing near, but her tongue would not move, only her knees shook so much that she nearly fell. Her neighbor drew her to a seat.

"Are the others wrecked?" Miriam asked with tragic eyes.

"I do not know; but I hope not; that poor fellow will tell us if he lives."

That evening it was known that the "Meldrum" had collided with another vessel in the storm, and that though all boats had been lowered they had one after another, been swamped. The rescued sailor had just jumped into one when its ropes snapped, and he was therefore, the only person saved.

The stewardess took the tidings, with a cup of tea, to Miriam, as she lay in a state of despairing on her sofa, and she let the woman gossip out her news without uttering a sound. At last, the stewardess went away, and Miriam lay still, not thinking, only suffering.

Later she crawled into her bed, where through the night, visions of Dick, as a boy, as a youth, as a man, rushed through her mind. Sometimes she saw his face shining through the darkness, but when she clasped him round the neck he was cold as ice and wet with salt water.

When she awoke she was out on the upper deck and not alone. By her side stood someone—a huge man, a giant, who seemed to reach to the sky. His clothes changed their color from light to dark, from black to brown. His great body undulated all the time, and when he put his arm round her he seemed to be surrounded with a dry suffocating warmth. Then he pointed a long arm to the northeast, and seemed to slip farther away, though he still stood by her side; the monster lengthened into ribbons. Miriam followed it, with straining eyes, when a flash of lightning lit up the sky and sea. It played for a moment round a distant spot, which the giant was touching and in that moment she saw a picture which she loved forever.

In the little circle of light a boat rocked helplessly upon the waters; under a sail were crouched some dozen people, trying, by huddling together to keep the warmth in their bodies She knew that Dick was there, and called his name shrilly; there was a sudden movement in the human heap a white face peeped out, and then the vision passed.

Miriam lay in her berth, the sea down already lightening the sky. Then feverishly she got up and went on deck, to see nothing but the grey sky and greyer sea, to hear nothing but the throbbing of the engines and the sough of wind and waves. Breakfast time came, but she heeded it not; for hours she stood immovable, gazing to the northeast over the bulwarks. What did that dream of hers mean? Was Dick floating somewhere helplessly with other passengers?

It was noon when the wind, veering, sent a cloud of smoke over her head and a shower of black smudges upon her hands; with them came a passing sensation of warmth. This slight incident awoke some vague memory connected with her dream.

The black column of smoke changing at its edges to brown, thinning out until she could see the gray sky through it, starting ever from her side, and yet reaching far into the distance, caught her eye.

Inspiration followed quickly. The smoke was the giant of the night before, and where it pointed lay Dick and his companions! sight danced into her eyes, hope beat strongly in her heart. She turned a glorified face to the ship. What could she do? How save them?

She saw a foot surmounted by blue cloth moving methodically on the deck above, and in a moment flew up the stairs leading to the captain's bridge. The captain turned round sharply at the sound of hurrying footsteps and peremptorily ordered her down. Clutching his arm she cried:

"Captain! They are out there under the line of smoke! A dozen survivors of the Meldrum are drifting helplessly and I know their friend Nora."

The captain glanced in the direction indicated. How should this frantic young woman have seen what his practiced eye could not discern? Then he guessed that she was the person who, they said, had lost her lover in the wreck.

"My dear," he cried, patting her hand, "go to your berth and lie down. You are in great trouble."

But the haggard hopeful eyes stared blightly in his.

"For the love of humanity, captain, use your glass. You will see them. I know you will!"

To humor her he took a careful survey of the horizon, upon which the sun was now rising. Then he shook his head, then he stood for a long time examining the spot under the thin edge of the line of smoke. He rubbed his glasses well and looked again, then said, quietly:

"Your hope is there! Sit down in that corner and wait!"

The course of the steamer was altered slightly, a boat lowered once more to gather in the ocean's drift. To his intense surprise the captain saw that the distant object was really a boat, with what looked like a man and a girl have known it? Then the group of people became visible, all evidently in the last stage of exhaustion, and he went over to Miriam and told her to look through his glass, and see if her fond vision was true.

She took it from his hand with a wild sob, and gazed long and steadily at the coming boat, then gave the glass back, in the midst of a passion of weeping, holding her head to signify that she could not speak. Then she set herself to regain self-control by the time the boat came in. When it did she was waiting in the hospital for her beloved.

For the next twenty-four hours she shared the duties of nurse with one of the stewardesses, and saw Dick's eyes open with the first gleam of consciousness in them. With a contented look at her he fell asleep, and on the ship's arrival at Halifax he, with all those who had been saved, were well enough to be moved to more comfortable quarters on shore.

The captain made friends with Miriam during those few hours, and learned how it was that she knew the boat was afloat. He could hardly believe that she had only seen it plain by, but was contented to accept the fact as it stood, and to be present at the simple ceremony which made Dick and Miriam man and wife.

A Remarkable Vase.

On the roof of a brewery at Maidstone is to be seen one of the most remarkable vases in England. It represents an old brown jug and stands. The jug, which is made of copper, stands 3 feet 6 inches in height and 3 feet in diameter, and is capable of holding 108 gallons. The glaze, also of copper, has a holding capacity of eight gallons.

Dummy Fruit

Bunches of bananas made of papier mache have been introduced as signs in the markets of New York where the depredations of boodlums are frequent. It is proposed to add wooden peanuts for the benefit of policemen and other friendly samplers of the stock in trade.

THY SPIRIT WALKS WITH ME.

I know thy spirit walks with me,
Since we were wed I,
So often, often think of thee,
So tender and so true to me,
In days gone by?

When springtime gladness fills the land,
In autumn sear,
On misty moonlit summer night,
When winter skies with stars are bright,
Then thou art near.

The wild bird's sweet and plaintive note
From leafy dell,
The voice of waters soft and low,
Where pebbles stay their onward flow,
The Sabbath bell.

The glow which falls from sunset skies,
Across the sea,
The perfume borne by passing breeze,
From lightly shaken flowers, all these,
Bring thoughts of thee.

I know thy spirit walks with me,
And glad am I,
To feel that now thou knowest full well
The love my lips refused to tell,
In days gone by.

OUR DRESSMAKER.

Miss Peckitt used to come to our house to sew. She sewed my frocks and she sewed my pinafores, and sat among her tapes and pins and yard measures telling me old stories that no one else cared about, for Miss Peckitt had no relatives, and had always, as she said, "kept herself to herself."

And of all her stories the one I liked best was the one about the pincushion. It was a large, heavy cushion, and I wondered why Miss Peckitt always brought it with her when she came for the day.

"It has a brick inside to keep it steady when I pin my work to it," she said, "and I carry it with me because it was the last thing my young man made for me."

"O, did you ever have a young man? Do tell me about him!"

At 10 years old one is not discreet. I suppose Miss Peckitt was not inclined to be hard on youthful indiscretion. She threaded her needle and began:

"It was when I was a young girl." She could not have been more than 30 at this time, but to me she seemed immeasurably old, as I said:

"It's a long time ago, then," as sympathetically as I could.

"Yes," she said, "a long time. He was the son of a farmer, and we was courting ever since we was quite little things and went to Sunday school. But it was not to be."

"What happened?"

"Why, his father died, my dear, and when it came to looking into things it was found he'd borrowed money on the land, and the interest hadn't been paid. So, then, my Willie said he'd pay it off himself, if they'd only wait. But they wouldn't—and the old place was sold up—house and buildings and the beasts, and the land with the standing crops. They may say it's law, but it ain't justice."

She bent her head thread sharply and I said it was a shame.

"So it was—a black shame. My Willie would a' paid them every penny if they'd only a' waited. But no; they sold the old place, and it fetched more than £1,000 over, and that they gave to Willie, as was only fair. And after the sale was over I saw nothing of him for two days, and then he came to me looking like a dog that the boys are after with stones.

"'Jane,' he says, 'with this bit of money I'll make a fortune over in America, which is a free country, and I'll come home for you, my girl, or I'll write and you'll come to me.'

"'If it was to the world's end,' says I.

"Then he gave me this pincushion; it seemed a funny present, being quite plain, as you see, and it had big stitches, but was strong, and I felt as I was washed as I took it. I was glad after that I hadn't laughed, for Willie he says:

"'Blossom, my dear, do you know what makes it so heavy?'

"'So I said, no, I didn't.'

"'It's a piece of the old south wall at home,' says he, 'where the yellow rose is, and where the apricots fruit so free, and it's covered with a bit of silk gown my mother was married in with.'

"It's faded, but you can see the rose sprigs on it yet. You'll keep it for my sake?"

"Well?" I asked, for Miss Peckitt had stopped abruptly.

"Well, that's all," she said, shortly; "he never came back, but I know he was true—and he would ha' come back if he'd been living, and the Lord's will be done," she added.

"Did you keep the piece of the old dress?" I asked, "when it wore out and you ripped it off? I should like to see it."

"I never ripped it off," she said; "I covered it with a bit of damask, meaning to show it to him fresh and bright when he come home; but I dare say the wore out—underneath, with all the needles and pins I've stuck in it—worn out."

Time did not stand still in our village. A bicycle factory reared its gaunt ugliness by the church, and the moss-grown well was replaced by a galvanized iron pump. The old families moved away, and new people came; smarter people, in their gimcrack way, who got their dresses made in the county town, and despised Miss Peckitt's old-fashioned patterns.

I was finishing my education in France and Germany. When I came home I hardly knew it. Almost my first visit was paid to the little white house with the green railings.

"It will do the poor thing good to see you," said my mother. "I fear she is horribly poor. She gets hardly any work now. And she won't accept anything she does not earn."

She did not know me at first, and was dusting a chair that was already of a spotlessness to shame our chairs at home, when suddenly she recognized me—the shock shattered for a moment the iron nerves under which she threw her thin arms around my neck and kissed me, faltered an apology for the "liberty," and then sat down on the doubly dusted chair and cried piteously.

I listened to such a tale of poverty and self-denial as my young ears had never heard before. Work scarce and growing scarcer, hardly enough to live on, and to crown all, the urgent necessity of saving, for hoarding every possible penny.

"But why?" I asked.

"For my funeral, my dear," she said, "I've kept myself respectable all these years, and if the parish was to touch me I should turn in my coffin—I know I should."

"Your needle's crooked," I said, fighting with a choking feeling in my throat. "Let me thread you another."

"Dear miss," she said, "this is the only needle I've got. It's not so crooked—and a cent's a cent—and needles in penny packets isn't what they used to be. No, and I won't let you buy me even needles, for I'm the principle I think of; I won't be beholden."

"You've got the old pincushion there, still," I said; "there must be lots of needles in that; let me empty out the sawdust and see. I'll put it all back carefully."

I think Miss Peckitt's will must have been weakened by long fasting and trouble, for she let me rip up one side of that sacred cushion and pour out the two volumes his chaste and in his praise of the young American's courage, but far more acceptable to the young captain was the shy glance of gratitude he received from the senor's beautiful daughter. His acquaintance, thus formed with the family soon ripened into intimacy, his intimacy into love. But on the day before he left Puebla with his command, when he told his love to the dark-eyed beauty, he was kindly but firmly rejected, as we have seen.

The next morning Captain Reynolds rode away at the head of his company, his dream of love rudely broken. But the army was soon too busily engaged in fellow him to indulge in needless repining. At Contreras he distinguished himself, and having been so fortunate as to save his colonel's life was brevetted major for his gallant conduct. At the storming of Molina del Rey the major was among the first to enter the works. Here, however, he was severely wounded, and when in a few days the City of Mexico surrendered he was borne into the conquered capital among the other injured Americans. His case was critical from the first, as his head was severely injured, brain fever soon set in. It is a matter of history how the Mexican women tended and nursed our wounded and dying soldiers. So when one morning a woman in the dress of the Mexican peasantry left the hospital and offered her services as a nurse it excited no comment. The sick man's constant cry had been "Inez, Inez!" This served as an index to his ravings, and the surgeon said, "If we could show him Inez he might begin to recover." Whether the nurse of the Inez he talks about, it might possibly calm him and there would be some hope of his ultimate recovery."

After the arrival of the new nurse, who confined herself entirely to the bedside of Major Reynolds, this cry was hushed and his ravings in a measure ceased. Her presence would cool him in his wildest moments, and soon the care of the patient passed wholly into her hands.

At last the fever had run its course, and Major Reynolds, though not convalescent, had now, in the doctor's opinion, some chance for life. What was the invalid's surprise when he opened his eyes and recovered his faculties to find beside him the face of his only love, Ines Garcia, whom he recognized even with her disguising habiliments. "Is it really you, Ines?" said he, his voice surprising even himself in its weakness. "I thought it was a dream."

"Yes," said she, "but you must not speak or even think. Those are the surgeon's orders."

"Now, if you will promise to be quiet, I will tell you how I happen to be here. In the first place, I am not married and" (very demurely) "am not likely to be. My cousin was killed at Cherubusco, and my father, being next of kin, inherited his estate, and that now is free from those difficulties which encompassed him some time ago. Hearing of your misfortune, I persuaded my father to come here so that I could take care of you."

"And now," broke in the major, "there is no obstacle to our marriage. Is that what you mean to imply?"

Her answer is not given, but it seemed satisfactory to all parties concerned.

"And now," continued Ines, "I must leave you, though I will visit you frequently in my own propria persona."

Reynolds' recovery, no longer doubtful, was rapid. But when he attempted to thank the surgeon that worthy replied:

"Young man, you owe your life not to me, but to the careful nursing of that nun who has so mysteriously disappeared."

"The war was soon ended, and Reynolds, having been removed as soon as practicable to the home of his betrothed, soon recovered his usual health. The old senor, conquering his repugnance to the idea of marrying his daughter to one of the victorious Americans, at length granted his consent, and soon after the treaty that secured peace to both Nations was signed, the ceremony was solemnized with all due pomp and splendor.

THE MAJOR'S BRIDE

In the year 1847, in the ancient city of Puebla, a young couple were carrying on a conversation which seemed to be of great interest to them. The one, a young fellow wearing the uniform of the United States Army, was saying, "Though you confess that you love me, you still declare that you cannot marry me?"

"Yes," said the other sadly, a beautiful young Mexican girl, "I love you, but I cannot be your wife. I have promised my hand to my cousin, to whom my father owes more than he can pay. But he has promised that if I marry him he will cancel the debt taking me in exchange. I hate him," she continued fiercely, "but I must keep my word."

"But," said the young man impetuously, "this barter and sale is barbarous. Can't you be made to reconsider your decision?"

"No," said the maiden despairingly. "It is impossible. We must part, and do not make our parting harder for me to bear by urging me to change."

Several months previous, just after the American army had entered Puebla on its victorious march to the capital, Captain Robert Reynolds had been able to perform a notable service for Senor Garcia, a wealthy and respected wealth, and his daughter, Ines. One day while out driving the senor's carriage horses became frightened by the maneuvers of a company of soldiers, and twisting suddenly threw the coachman from his seat and started at full speed down the road. Captain Reynolds, seeing the danger, rushed into the street, and grasping the maddened horses by the bits after a severe fight succeeded in stopping them. The senor was voluble in his thanks and in his praise of the young American's courage, but far more acceptable to the young captain was the shy glance of gratitude he received from the senor's beautiful daughter. His acquaintance, thus formed with the family soon ripened into intimacy, his intimacy into love. But on the day before he left Puebla with his command, when he told his love to the dark-eyed beauty, he was kindly but firmly rejected, as we have seen.

Never Caught Napping.

There are several species of fish, reptiles and insects which never sleep during their stay in the world. Among fish it is now definitively known that pike, salmon and goldfish never sleep at all. Also that there are several others of the fish family that never sleep more than a few minutes a month. There are dozens of species of fish that never sleep in shallow water, and from three to five species of serpents which the naturalists have never yet been able to catch napping.

Warships in Wax.

By the admiralty's orders perfect models are made in paraffin wax of every new English battleship before it is laid down, and these models are tested in a tank at Haslar. The models are from 12 feet to 24 feet long, and the tank is 400 feet long and 20 feet wide. The models are made of wax because it is a material which does not absorb water or change its weight, so alterations can be easily made. Also the material can be melted up and used again.

The Useful Ant.

It is generally known that every small lead mammal or bird, when left near an ant hill, will ultimately be picked quite clean of flesh quickly. It has been lately demonstrated that they can be made useful in the direction of skeletonizing specimens. Prof. Berard has been employing ants as his servants. While in Florida he had a fine squirrel thus skeletonized in a single day. The only agents employed were ants.

Improved Roads.

There are 20,000 miles of roads of all kinds in New Jersey, stone, clay, gravel and mud. Of this amount, 1,000 miles have been improved, not all by State aid. If the State of New Jersey stopped accepting specifications for road building under State aid now, it would take two years to complete what is now on file. There are petitions pending at the present time for 300 miles of new roads.

There is now being spent $500,000 a year. The counties pay about 57 per cent. of the cost, the property owners 10 per cent. and the State the balance. While road building is cheaper now than five years ago, because of better understanding of the needs for roads on a different adjustment of materials, still there is now an increase because of the great amount of road building that is going on in the country, which has made material scarce and higher.

The $150,000 appropriated by the State is increased by the two-thirds of the county and the property owners. About $50,000 is spent each year throughout the State for bridges and the approaches to bridges.

Since the close of the fiscal year, when State Road Commissioner Budd made his report, there had been a rush of counties which desire State aid.

Burlington county leads all the counties, having on file at the present time the applications for twenty-six miles of roads, which will cost $430,000. The farmers of Burlington believe firmly in stone roads as a means of making farms pay by getting the products of the farms quickly to the market and for enhancing the value of the farms.

Provided with constitutional machinery and a competent set of officers the Plainfield Advancement Association is now in a position to do aggressive and effective work for the best interests of the community. However, results cannot be accomplished alone by the comparatively small coterie that has undertaken the leadership; good work depends upon every citizen interesting himself, or herself, (for the women are indispensible in the progress of a city) in the efforts to improve present conditions whenever it is possible.

Governor Sayers, of Texas, is much encouraged with the prospects of a large attendance of Governors and Attorney's General at the anti-trust conference in St. Louis on September 20th. Up to this time seventeen Governors have responded to his invitation to attend the proposed conference, of that number thirteen are outspoken in favor of the anti-trust measure, three are non-committal and one is opposed to anti-trust legislation.

The New York Herald is the authority for a political rumor that "a Democratic Freeholder from Plainfield is making a bid for the nomination of Sheriff in Union county this fall." A Democratic officeholder of any sort, big or little, is not to be found in Plainfield, so we will have to dispose of the Herald's gossip without wondering who this man may be.

There is said to be a large waiting list of candidates for the Republican nomination of Vice-President if Mr. Hobart concludes not to be a candidate. But from present prospects Mr. Hobart will be in the fight. Senators Hanna, Platt and Quay are all for the Jerseymen, and when you have got them you have got about the biggest part of the G. O. P.

No matter how little a merchant may feel he can do personally for the Plainfield Advancement Society, it will not do him any harm to attend the public meeting of the society this evening. The act of personal attendance upon meetings of this character is a great invigorative to those who are willing to go ahead with the hard work part of the movement.

Governor Voorhees and all the rest of the State officials may say pleasant and soothing things about the business of making trusts in New Jersey, in the endeavor to placate the public mind, but it is a fact that the New Jersey's way of treating with the big industrial combines is a disgrace to the commonwealth.

Geographical considerations form a most important part in the political canvass in Union county this year.

During the evening Superintendent of Schools Prof. Henry M. Maxson spoke to the company, using as his subject "Progress" and his talk was most interesting.

Miss Cooper, beside reading a poem from the pen of Franklin B. Wiley, gave a choice selection which was well received.

Mrs. French read from papers which were particularly interesting to the classmate, while Franklin S. Smith read parts of Rolls of Honor from his scrap book as well as some verses written on a particular occasion by the late Julia R. Runyon, who was a graduate of the class.

After this informal programme the guests passed into the dining room where a dainty collation was served.

The House was decorated with pinks and roses and the class colors, cardinal and light blue, encased each napkin used. The class song and several other familiar tunes were sung during the evening.

Beside the classmates there were about twenty guests present and all returned to their homes feeling that an enjoyable evening had been spent with the class of '79.

Lightning at Somerville.

Somerville, June 21—The heaviest thunderstorm of the season struck here at 6 o'clock last night. A tenement on the estate of Mrs. James Coats, two miles east of here, was set on fire by lightning. The barn of Phillip Gazelle on North Washington street was struck and a valuable horse killed by lightning. The electric lighting system of the town is burned out. The trolley cars on the New York and Philadelphia traction line are at a standstill, the motors in several cars having been burned out by lightning.

OIL STOVE BLAZED UP.

A LIVELY FIRE CAUSED IN A BOROUGH HOUSE.

House Attached to a Garden Faucet and the Water Turned on—Fire Department Handicapped in Its Work.

About 10 o'clock Tuesday a. m. an alarm of fire was sent in from Box No. 132, corner of Manning and Westervelt avenues, the fire being in the rear of the house on Manning avenue occupied by John Snyder. The family was at home and was using an oil stove to prepare dinner. This stove was in a small shed just off the kitchen. The one in charge of it left the stove for a few minutes. In the meantime the stove began to flare up and the blaze set fire to the woodwork.

The fire was discovered soon after it started and the alarm was sent in. The department was a little slow in reaching the scene of the fire, and a long hose was attached to a faucet in the cellar of Dr. Cooley's home. Quick application of water saved the house from a great amount of damage. The oil stove was thrown from the house by Marshal Campbell and Will Van-Winkle, while David Bodine performed efficient work on the roof of the shed. The total damage was slight and is covered by insurance.

The reason that the department was slower than usual was the absence of the horses, and the firemen were obliged to wait until a team came along. It happened that one of the teams of the Plainfield Ice and Cold Storage Company was on its way toward the mountains and they were pressed into service.

ADVANCE THEIR EFFORT

that demonstrated the need of Plainfield making every effort to secure lower fares.

City Judge Runyon was called upon for a few remarks, and he responded in an interesting way. He championed the rights of the commuter element and said that it was a mistake to try to put the commuters in the background. To a large extent he said they are the backbone of the city and the borough, and it behooved the association, if it was to meet with proper success, to enlist the aid of every resident in the city, no matter whether his business was in Plainfield or New York.

After a few other remarks arrangements were made to hold the meetings in the Republican Association rooms on the third Tuesday of every month, and as much oftener as it was thought necessary.

W. S. Bullock, W. A. Coddington and Edward White were made a special committee of the association to serve with the general Fourth of July celebration committee.

Somerville, June 21.—Operations on Jeweler Staats' new building have been suspended since last Thursday because of a dispute about the ownership of about a foot and a half of the land. Rev. Mr. Todd, of Dunellen, owns the adjoining property and he claims that the new building is that much over on his land. He first claimed four feet but the Chancellor decided in favor of Mr. Staats.
